is laughing it's head off at
"THE GEEZER OF BERLIN"

A Travesty on "The KAISER-the Beast of Berlin"

VIRGINIA DALE says:
"A good burlesque is something that so far has eluded the movies. In "The Geezer of Berlin" we have it at last!"

KITTY KELLY says:
"A very, very funny travesty, rich in cleverness of conception, action and titling-jolly good fun."

W. K. HOLLANDER says:
"A mirthful travesty—two reels of happy celluloid!"

ROB REEL says:
"More than a two-reel quota of guffaws and titters."

WARNING

To Every Exhibitor Who Has Played "The Kaiser, The Beast of Berlin"

DO not be caught napping but arrange IMMEDIATELY with the nearest Jewel office for the quickest possible booking on our newest success, "CRASHING THROUGH TO BERLIN."

If you fail to do so, you will miss a chance to do just as well as you did on "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin."

"CRASHING THROUGH TO BERLIN" is creating just as much of a sensation as "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin."

"CRASHING THROUGH TO BERLIN" is just as timely as "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin."

"CRASHING THROUGH TO BERLIN" is booking just as fast and at the same prices as "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin."

"CRASHING THROUGH TO BERLIN" has been praised just as highly by newspaper critics as "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin."

As far as we can recall, this is the first time in the history of the business that any producing company, immediately after marketing such a world-beating success as "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," has followed it right up with another picture equally successful. While other companies have busied themselves making imitations of the great "Kaiser Picture," we have gone just a step ahead and have given the trade the very thing it needs—something newer, something different, something that is bound to set the American public wild with enthusiasm just when the American soldiers are mopping up the Hun and just when the new draft of men from 18 to 45 years of age has brought the war closer to the heart of America's millions than ever before.

Don't waste a minute. Make sure of another clean-up such as you made on "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin." Arrange today for your booking on

"CRASHING THROUGH TO BERLIN."

"WHAT IS HE DOING OVER THERE?"

That's the question that is being asked today in a million American homes. "He" is helping to make history. "He" is one of the many on whom the hope of Democracy rests. How does he live? What are his amusements? What sort of a country is he in? What sort of men are those with whom the Americans are making a solid front against the foe?

Every member of those million families may find those questions answered in

Goldwyn Pictures

"This is a Goldwyn Year!"

-and here are the proofs of it.

GOLDWYN'S announcement of fifty productions a year was the signal gun for the exhibitors of America who wanted to declare their independence. We are proud of the fact that Goldwyn has been the means of restoring the element of competition in the field of Quality Pictures.

That is why Goldwyn was conceived and established.

We knew that you did not want to be at the mercy of any one producer. The proof of exhibitor loyalty to Goldwyn, to the new factor that was organized for the protection of the exhibitors of America, was found in the fact that most of the biggest exhibitors stood by Goldwyn loyally in its first year when the volume of productions we offered them were not quite sufficient to give them the independence they desired.

But this year it is different.

This is YOUR year and Goldwyn's year. A year when the Goldwyn exhibitor customer can match, counter-balance or outweigh any star any producer has—or will have.

The exhibitor with Geradine Farrar, Rex Beach, Pauline Frederick, Mabel Normand, Madge Kennedy, Mae Marsh and Tom Moore productions doesn't have to truckle or play second fiddle to anybody.

He leads by sheer DOMINATION.

Speaking as one exhibitor to another

About this year and next—

CHAPLIN'S comedies included—we have already in sight eighteen money-making attractions and expect to release twenty-four during the coming year.

THE new Anita Stewart productions will all be adaptations from famous and successful plays and novels. Miss Stewart's popularity, the lavish scale of production, and the standing of their director, Mr. George Loane Tucker, are guarantees of their quality.

We shall continue our successful policy of dealing in big, open market productions which, as heretofore, will be selected after screen examination. The pooled purchasing power of our members has enabled us to secure some of the biggest attractions of the current year which have made money for exhibitors generally. With past experience to guide us in our selections we anticipate even better future results.

Forthcoming First National attractions will prove to be money-makers; the sort we and you depend upon to make the exhibiting business profitable enough to stay in. As heretofore, there will be no strings on First National attractions. Exhibitors may book one or all as their individual circumstances warrant.

We are Exhibitors First

WE advise exhibitors to hold open sufficient time for these money-making attractions which will be put out under the First National brand, as there is not the slightest doubt that they will prove far more profitable than ordinary program releases.

A word of warning to exhibitors:

SOME of the producing companies are making strenuous efforts to induce exhibitors to book their programs solid. The exhibitor who stakes the future of his house upon the success of one brand of pictures is placing his future in the hands of the producer who may at any time take from him the line of goods he has spent his time and money in establishing. When the producer's advertised brand becomes dominant the exhibitor is completely at the mercy of the producer. Many a merchandising store handling a nationally advertised line of goods has learned to its sorrow the error of tying up its future with a brand it could not control. Therefore, as exhibitors as well as distributors, we say to our fellow exhibitors—"Do not jeopardize your future by placing yourself at the mercy of any one producer; in the open market lies safety and independence for you and us."

A clean, stirring play of American life, with love, emotion, wistfulness and beauty.

In this romance of Southern California Stewart and his director, Cliff Smith, have given the Triangle program a play with a western locale, that you can go after with all your advertising facilities.

A play for those who do and for those who don't like "westerns."

An Ideal Series for a Public that Loves the Spirit of Youth and Innocence

The starring of winsome little Gloria Joy promises to cause infinite pleasure to that large class of motion picture patrons who approve of clean, healthy sentiment with a reasonable mingling of bright comedy.

—G. T. P., in Exhibitors' Trade Review.

Little Gloria will stand considerable boosting. Any gang will enjoy it.

—Wid's.

The work of Gloria Joy is a joy, for she is one of the most finished juveniles we have seen on the screen today.

—Exhibitors' Herald.

The little star, Gloria Joy, is an attractive and clever child. She demonstrates to an even greater extent than in her first picture her cleverness as a child star.

—Moving Picture World.

Somebody showed very good judgment or was just naturally lucky when they picked out this little lady for a screen possibility.

Wid's.

The youthful Gloria is a thoroughly genuine, enthusiastic and unaffected child.

—Motion Picture News.

The work of Gloria Joy holds the principal charm and appeal.

Hodkinson Service is a factor in the industry today because it is selected to meet the needs of every exhibitor.

The Hodkinson Corporation is in effect a separator. Its sole function is to pick and choose the quality product and eliminate the bad. Unlike producer-dominated organizations it has no need to force any and all product on the market, irrespective of quality and merit.

Exhibitors the country over are realizing with clearer understanding every day, the importance of the Hodkinson organization to them, in that, it, with absolute independence and backed by consolidated exhibitor buying power, can do for them what they have always wanted to do, but lacked power to accomplish — the proper selection of profitable product.

The ever-increasing number of exhibitors rallying to the support of the Hodkinson Co-partnership Plan, but increases this power to select and secure the "right" product.

WE'VE DUG UP HIDDEN TREASURE!

JUST like finding King Solomon's gold—that's what the Success Series means to you.

Out of hundreds of motion pictures made by the greatest stars when they were building the success that now is theirs—out of these hundreds of negatives that have been treasured in our steel vaults we have chosen the best fifty-two, to be re-issued in the year to come.

The schedule for September, in order of release, for instance:

Mary Pickford in "The Eagle's Mate"
Marguerite Clark in "Wildflower"
All Star Cast in "The Girl f the Golden West"
Pauline Frederick in "Zaza"
Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen"

They were wonderful pictures when they were first issued. They're even finer now, for they have been re-edited re-titled, re-printed.

Every one is a proved money getter, a builder of good will for you.

Hundreds of theatres now playing the productions of these world-famous stars never have shown these pictures. The theatres that did show them played to a tremendous business.

Those who have seen them will want to go again—they'll be a great source of free advertising, for they'll spread the glad news that "Here come those pictures we've been raving about."

Get your share of the treasure now!

The First Success Series Release

A PICTURE you have never seen is as new as any book you have never read. When you go into a phonograph store to buy a record by Caruso you don't ask for a recent one. You want one you never heard. It's Caruso's name that counts.

Or when you buy a volume of Mark Twain. You forget that the man is dead some years. It's Mark Twain's work, and you have never read it. That's enough!

"The Eagle's Mate" is a masterpiece.

It's a Mary Pickford picture—one of the pictures that made her the wonderful star she is today—and thousands of people have never seen it. Are you one? Then see it now!

AMERICA MUST CONQUER

THE KING OF THE HUNS

Who is he? Who was born amidst royal splendor, and with the roaring guns to announce his royal birth?

Kaiser Wilhelm, The King of the Huns.

What is he? Who was born in a cottage amidst simple surroundings; born to be a citizen of the people?

President Wilson.

Who is he? Who caused to be destroyed 43,198 buildings, and to be massacred nearly 5,000 non-combatants—women, old men and children—without inquiry or trial?

Kaiser Wilhelm, The King of the Huns.

Who is he? Who stretches forth a helping hand to devastated cities (Belgium, Servia, Rumania, Armenia, Poland, Russia) to bereaved women and to maimed children?

President Wilson.

Who is he? Who committed arson, pillage, and rape, executed hostages, deported civilians from their native lands, placed them in the front of German troops, laid to ruin the cities of Liege, Namur, Louvain, Termonde, Lierre, Luxembourg, Haimant, Barabant, Antwerp, Aerschot?

Kaiser Wilhelm, The King of the Huns.

Who is he? Who with the help of One Hundred Millions of freemen, proclaims the world free for Democracy, forever protecting our homes, our women, and our children, from arson, pillage and rape?

President Wilson.

AND SO—

My Dear Exhibitor:—

We shall take our critical American audiences into our confidence. and, like the wonderful Burton Holmes, travel with them through the lands of Geography and History, into the lands of Atrocities and "Kultur," and then through the lands of Truth and Love, and tell a story.

The story visualizes Hun-ism in its true colors as it exists today, and yet tells this story so vividly and so humanely that your patrons will marvel.

Sincerely yours,

AMERICA MUST CONQUER

The King of the Huns

Will be a five-reel production released about September 15th:

1. Portraying the birth of the Kaiser, and the birth of President Wilson.
2. Omitting the atrocities as committed by the individual Hun, but showing those atrocities sanctioned by the German Government.
3. Showing by a series of most instructive, animated flashes the whole atrocious plot of the Hohenzollerns' menace to the World's peace and security.
4. Visualizing the interlocking blood relations of the genealogical tree of the Prussian family over almost the entire world.
5. Telling a love story of the Franco-German border:—"It makes a difference whose sister it is."
6. Revealing the oath made by the King of Prussia. This fiendish oath will be depicted in all its hellishness.

This FIRST work will be released about September 15th, 1918.

TO BE FOLLOWED BY OTHERS

"The King of Prussia shall do all that may seem to advantage the Kingdom of Prussia among nations, notwithstanding any European conventions or any traditions of Christendom, or even any of those wider and more general conventions which govern the international conduct of the other Christian People."

UNCLE SAM IS GREATEST SHOWMAN

In Thirty-two Liberty Theatres, Dramatic, Vaudeville and Screen Entertainments Provide Amusement for Soldiers While Making of Patriotism-Inspiring Pictures Goes On Everywhere

SO gradually has the Liberty Theatre become established as a factor in the world-battle for democracy; so comprehensive has the plan of production and projection of motion pictures under Government supervision gone forward, and so successfully has the project of entertainment for embryo soldiers developed that the complicated system now in operation has become a smoothly running piece of machinery before the uninformed outsider has realized that the parts were more than ready to be assembled.

Which is to say that your Uncle Sam is to-day the greatest showman on earth—and he is extending his operations just as fast as there is need of enlargement. Not alone does he manage dramatic companies and vaudeville troupes; not alone does he show motion pictures to his "boys" in million-foot consignments—he is producing pictures and distributing them to the commercial exhibitor in constantly increasing quantities. On land and sea picture projection (the branch we are most concerned in at the moment) has become the ne plus ultra of essentials among war's most essential by-products.

Battleships that ride the seven seas—a number designated by the Hun on which he demanded freedom—have their picture shows, comprising the latest releases; in thirty-two training camps Liberty Theatres devote 25 per cent of "time" to screen entertainments, and in this particular branch of Uncle Sam's amusement activities the producing and releasing concerns of the Fifth Industry have active part—at a remuneration that barely reimburses shipment and rewinding. Let the rascals of commerce profiteer in rain-coats, khaki-cloth, aeroplane production or food essentials for the soldiers of freedom—the moving picture producer and distributor of the well-known United States of America is co-operating with Uncle Sam without hope, promise or desire for even a fraction of profit on their transactions.

The Committee on Public Information is the head of manufacture and distribution for propaganda films to be shown at home and abroad. These films have been going forth to exhibitors, first as integral parts of news weeklies, and later in the form of "productions" like "Pershing's Crusaders," "America's Answer," and still more to come. The World man who has been sent sleuthing for details of Uncle Sam's amusement activities will, in a subsequent report, take up this particular part of the work—but just now he has been deputized to cover training camp activities, via the Liberty Theatres.

Pierce Is a Regular Showman.

In one of hundreds of buildings housing Government activities in Washington is located the headquarters of the Theatre Division of the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities. The director is R. R. Smith, but what this representative of the noble army of Smiths ever accomplished in the field of regular theatrical amusement deponent sayeth not. Suffice it that, in choosing has chief assistant, Mr. Smith developed an excellent instinct in designating Howard O. Pierce, of Detroit. Any picture magnate in the City of the Straits will tell you that Pierce is a bigger man, in the matters of showmanship and picture acumen, than Jones L. Schaeffer (whose middle name is Linick) the Chicago wonder or Rivoli-Rialto-Strand-Regent Rothapfel, of New York and Pennsylvania.

Local headquarters of the Theatre Division, W. D. C. T. C. A. (see above paragraph for full translation) is in the New York Theatre Building, Times Square. To better locate the place old-timers will remember how Oscar Hammerstein went above the theatrical timber-line, years ago, and built Olympia—to be eventually rented to Marcus Loew and other theatrical people. Here, in what was Olympia, the Theatre Division has quarters, directly supervised by the Committee on Military Entertainment, with Malcolm H. McBride, chairman and boss of all the works; Daniel Frohman, Kate Oglebay, J. Howard Reber, Franklin H. Sargent and Augustus Thomas big wheels in the machinery.

Here also are the offices of the men in charge of the dramatic, vaudeville and motion picture sections of the whole scheme, with De Hull N. Travis occupying the chair of publicity and newspaper man's information. Of Mr. Travis we would like to say much, principally extolling his courtesy and fitness for the job he holds, but we have found Jealousy the Green Eyed Monster peeping through the crack of every door we have opened in the theatrical structure and we presume the G. E. Villain is among those present in War Work.

Hyman Is Film Director.

Passing without mentioning (because among a lot of things the reporter missed was their names) the men in charge of the vaudeville and dramatic three-quarters of Liberty Theatre entertainments, we come to salute before the desk of Edward L. Hyman, film director for the T. D. W. D. C. &c., as fully listed above. Mr. Hyman, strange to relate, was placed in charge of film selection and distribution because he is owner of the finest theatre in Buffalo, yclept the Victoria and guaranteed as stated by Mr. Hyman, himself; because although young in years he is old in the exhibition game and knows every sprocket hole in the business.

To give you a clear insight—to inspire in you, more or less gentle reader, the same confidence in Mr. Hyman that Uncle Sam has, we follow here with a transcript of Managers' Bulletin No. 1, lately issued by Mr. Hyman to the Picture Division of Liberty Theatres. After you have read from A to C, give extra pause to final Paragraph D—and you'll have the "Hyman Idea" in a mental nutshell. Read on:

(A) The picture division will issue weekly a bulletin carrying idea and instructions that will prove of especial benefit to a theatre manager when he is playing picture programs.

(B) The main requisites in running a picture theatre successfully are superior projection, selection of pictures, music, soloists and advertising.

(a) Will all the managers of the larger theatres, formerly known as the Blue Circuit, kindly notify this office if they have not received their motor generator as yet? We would also like to have all the managers on the circuit formerly known as the Red take up with me any difficulties they are encountering with their projection.

(b) As to the selection of pictures this is done by the representatives who have already been notified. All pictures will be booked only after the closest co-operation with theatre managers. All pictures that are particularly desired at any particular camp should be requisitioned from this office. We do not believe there is any picture on the market that we cannot secure.

(c) When pictures are presented every effort should be exerted to secure a hand to give a concert in front of the theatre previous to starting the show, and then, if possible, the hand should play the accompaniment to the picture. Musical suggestions for the pictures can be secured, and it might be possible to have the hand play appropriate music to accompany the picture.

(d) It is also suggested that a good soloist or two in the camp be engaged to sing between the pictures. This would break up the continuous run of the pictures and would make the program more diversified. These soloists can be secured by looking through the cards at the Personal Office, where a complete record of each man's former vocation is kept. The next thing would be to have the captain at this office send instructions to the company commander where the singer is located to have him detailed to the Liberty Theatre.

(C) All managers have been notified of the very low minimum price that we are paying for pictures, which, in most cases, is $1 per reel for one or two days. It is, therefore, our intention to advertise as extensively as possible the pictures played, as, in view of the fact that the pictures are given to us almost gratis, we can very well afford to go out and plan a big advertising campaign.

(D) We are all one big family working for the same result, which is to amuse the men. We already have a reasonable amount of assurance that pictures are going to be a wonderful success in all the Liberty Theatres.

Four Districts of Distribution.

Proving how fast good men advance in these days of needs and deeds we here record that Mr. Hyman, only a few months ago, left the Victoria Theatre in Buffalo flat on the lot to go to Camp Wheeler and manage a Liberty Theatre; hesitated there but a brief space, passed on to Camp Gordon, touched home plate, and then proceeded to Atlanta, where he was placed in charge of bookings of ten camps in that district. Now he's in New York—running the picture business for thirty-two camp theatres.

And "running" them is his job—he's responsible for every foot of film that goes to and comes from an exchange of one of the great distributing firms, or swings around the circle from the Committee of Public Information's Division of Films. This distribution has been parceled off into four districts with New York, Atlanta, Dallas and Chicago as headquarters. Just as we are careening to press with this report the subject of who shall be manager of the Chicago district is occupying Mr. Hyman's consideration. But, without violating any confidence, we can say that he will be a real showman—like Matt Whitman, in charge of Atlanta; Henry Schoenstadt, at Dallas, and Mr. Hyman, who supervises the New York district.

Perhaps it would be better right here to list the Liberty theatres and name their managers. Readers will recognize the names of a lot of experienced theatrical men among the resident potentates—very likely indicating that the Smith we spoke of early in this report is possessed of the best instincts of showmanship in more ways than one. However that may be, here follows the men who represent the biggest circuit of theatres on earth, owned by the world's greatest showman and running pictures (in a majority of instances) one week out of every four, just as the months are torn off the calendar:

Here Are Uncle Sam's Showmen.

Camp Sherman, Ohio, William F. Fait, who just left the exhibition game in Utica, N. Y., to join Uncle Sam's Circuit; Gordon, Georgia, Sam Dernbow, Jr., who quit Fox's Atlanta exchange management; Custer, Michigan, E. W. Fuller; Devens, Massachusetts, Harry Chappell; Dix, New Jersey, W. O. Wheeler; Dodge, Iowa, L. H. Thompson; Grant, Illinois, Geo. J. Breinig; Jackson, South Carolina, Frank J. Lea; Lee, Virginia, C. D. Jacobson; Lewis, Washington, E. A. Braden; Meade, Maryland, C. E. Barton; Merritt, New Jersey, J. R. Banta; Pike, Arkansas, Harry S. Lorch; Sevier, South Carolina, F. L. Brown; Taylor, Kentucky, John Prescott; Upton, Long Island, Geo. Miller.

Beauregard, Louisiana, Aubrey Stauffer; Bowie, Texas, E. A. Wolff; Buffalo, Long Island, Sol Klarberg; Cody, New Mexico. R. G. Craerin; Ft. Sill, Oklahoma, Private Geo. B. Tack; Fremont, California, Chas. Salisbury; Funston, Kansas, Corporal I. T. Oberfelder; Greene, North Carolina, J. H. Sowerby; Hancock, Georgia, G. H. Thomas; Kearney, California, Geo. L. Sargent; Logan, Texas, Marcus Cutting, H. E. Rupert, assistant; MacArthur, Texas, Herman Phillips; McClellan, Alabama, Clarence W. McKain; Wadsworth, South Carolina, R. B. Alford; Wheeler, Georgia, J. T. Hughes; West Point, Kentucky, F. T. Ray; Las Casas, P. R., Alexander Goldman; Travis, Texas, Lieutenant R. P. Whitfield.

Because, perhaps, railroad fare is so "cheap" and distances are so far to the Pacific Coast section where camps are located films are not shown out there. Entertainment beyond the Rockies is provided by dramatic, vaudeville and musical comedy companies. Camps served with films by Mr. Hyman, from New York, include: Merrit, Mead, Upton, Dix, Humphries and Devins. Mr. Whitman, from Atlanta, serves Camps Gordon, Wheeler, McClellan, Jackson, Hancock, Sevier, Greene and Wadsworth. From Dallas Mr. Schoenstadt supplies Bowie, Logan, Doniphan, Travis, Kelly Field, Cody and Pike. When Chicago is in action Camps Grant, Dodge, Custer, Funston, Taylor and Sherman will draw films from there.

Soldiers Now See "First Runs."

Regularly co-operating with Uncle Sam in showing "the boys" the best and newest films are the Paramount, Artcraft, Fox, Goldwyn, Metro, Mutual, Triangle, Universal, Select, World Films, Jewel—and others. Films are handled by the exchange nearest the training camp into which they are routed. First runs, mind you—not "any old thing"—are supplied by these organizations as only a fraction of their service to Uncle Sam.

You can tell the world that the Fifth Industry will not make a penny out of the Government—the Liberty Theatres are supplied with films at a charge that barely covers shipment and rewinding charges. The moving picture trade papers have printed oodles of matter about the things the Fifth Industry has done in proving itself essential, but actions in serving the Liberty Theatres speak louder than the words of publicity promoters—truthful, eager and well justified as they always have been and will be.

Recently one of the producing companies promulgated some statistics concerning their plan of production during the months to come. It was said that total output, measured in feet, approximated 23,178 miles of film to come from the Eastman Kodak Company within the ensuing twelvemonth. Basing an estimate of the number of soldiers who will during that same term be entertained by motion pictures in Liberty Theatres, upon the same more or less stable foundation, we find that if "the boys" who will see the product of the Fifth Industry during the coming year were stretched out feet to head they would form a solid line of Yankee determination that would stretch from San Francisco to Berlin, wind 684 times around that nest of hellishness, and trail back again to the Golden Gate.

What Entertainment Means for Soldiers.

What Liberty Theatres mean in Uncle Sam's plan of redeeming humanity from the impending peril of Hunism was set forth in a speech made by Publicity Director DeHull N. Travis before the lumbermen of Ohio in convention at Cedar point, recently:

"One need only to go to medical statistics of former wars to see the result of vicious entertainment when little or no thought was given to provide a substitute. The morals of any army depend upon happy men, clean in mind and body. A man clean in mind and body may not be contented without entertainment. The Liberty Theatre is a big spoke in the great wheel by which the men are contented—contented and happy because they are not only entertained as they have been at home, but are provided with a decent place in which they may entertain themselves. This is the aim of the Theatre Division to make the Liberty Theatre the community center in camp for all meetings requiring large seating capacity. Every thought has been given to the protection and stimulation of our country's soldiers' mental, moral and physical manhood; and in this the entertainment found in the Liberty Theatre is an important factor. Provide clean entertainment to take the place of vicious and no moral American boy will long seek the latter. Liberty Theatres do just this."

And here is a quotation Mr. Travis used during the course of his Cedar Point speech that might well be incorporated in the Plan of Procedure for every caterer to the amusement loving public:

If any little word of ours
  Can make one life the brighter;
If any little song of ours
  Can make one heart the lighter,
God help us speak the little word.
  And take our bit of singing
And drop it in some lonely vale
  And set the echoes ringing.

When the World has finished its report on Government film production, distribution and exhibition, including reference to entertainment that is being provided for soldiers and sailors in line of battle it will readily be conceived that while P. T. Barnum had the right idea of showmanship it took your Uncle Sam and a world war to carry it on to complete development. HILL.

INVITE ADVERTISERS TO CHICAGO.

At the combined luncheon and business meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers held on Thursday, August 22, the guest of honor and principal speaker was Major James Belton of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces and author of "Hunting the Hun," who aroused his auditors to a high pitch of enthusiasm. Major Belton was introduced by C. W. Barrell of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Among the guests attending the luncheon were Frank J. Rembusch, Louis Frank and Sam Trigger, representing the exhibitors' Convention to be held in Chicago. They called upon the advertisers for their co-operation in carrying the convention to success.

HODKINSON ISSUES BOOKLET.

A new series of booklets are being issued to exhibitors by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation dealing with the work already accomplished by their organization. "Turning the First Corner" is the title of the first booklet, which outlines the progress made toward the goal set out to reach. It enables the exhibitor to judge the strength and stability of the Hodkinson organization by its accomplishments rather than its aims alone.

WAR STAMPS FOR PATRIOTIC DEVICES

The Moving Picture World Will Offer a Weekly Prize for the Best Idea Presented Each Week to Heighten Patriotism and Further Patriotic Purposes—Read the Rules and Get Busy

REALIZING what enormous good is being done by the motion picture theatres throughout the country, and desiring still further to augment this excellent work the Moving Picture World announces a novel contest with a decidedly practical angle.

Some of the best ideas for the furtherance of patriotism have come from managers in the smaller towns. Some excellent ideas have not been recorded and passed along to others for the simple reason that the manager using the scheme has not thought it worth while to send the idea along. To offer some incentive to these managers this paper will award each calendar week a prize of a War Savings Stamp of the face value of $5 to the manager who submits the best scheme during that period.

We want to have on record all of the schemes used by managers in their own houses, that the ideas may be passed along for the benefit of others less imaginative. The contest has been so planned that all managers stand an equal chance. for the award will not go to the most expensive idea, but to the one which in the estimation of the judges shall be the most effective in promoting patriotic purpose.

What We Want.

The scope of the scheme is rather broad because we do not wish to limit the idea to any one particular angle. It may be that a lantern slide or some kink in handling one of the releases of the Committee on Public Information may be more effective in results than an elaborate stage presentation or lobby display. It may be some phrase in an advertisement or a Liberty Bond club. The contest will be complete each week, ending with the ideas received in this office by Saturday and will start anew with each Monday morning's mail during the continuance of the contest.

Photographs or sketches are desired where these are necessary in order clearly to explain the idea, and these photographs or sketches will be returned if the request is made at the time of submission. If the material offered is an advertisement the entire newspaper should be sent where practicable. If other advertising, a copy of the matter should be sent, preferably in type display. In any case a clear description of the idea should be sent and the results stated.

The Deciding Factors.

The three points considered by the judges in making their award will be simplicity, directness of appeal and breadth of appeal.

The simple scheme will be judged the most effective because it can be followed by the greatest number of managers. We shall be glad to give space to ideas of any magnitude, but broadly speaking the simple scheme will be regarded as the more practicable.

A scheme should be direct in its appeal. It should have some definite point for its objective and reach that point by the simplest and most direct route. A display of the American flag will promote patriotic thought in a general way, but an appeal to buy bonds, to purchase war stamps, or to contribute to the various war activities will be more productive in result because it offers a definite aim and outlet for that patriotism. The man who fills a book with thrift stamps is a more definite patriot than he who merely gives three cheers for the Stars and Stripes. The winning scheme will generally be found to have a definite object and to be aimed at that object alone.

By breadth of appeal is meant the spreading of the appeal. If you form a club for the purchase of stamps by school children, you have not made as broad an appeal as though you offered some scheme whereby the entire population can be interested in the collections of stamps. You have limited the appeal to a certain class of the population. We want these ideas, too, and if one of these is better than any other scheme received for that week, it will win the prize, so send them in anyhow.

Get Them All In.

Send in any scheme you may employ. It may not seem to you to be particularly good, but send it in anyhow. It may not seem particularly good to you, yet it may be better than it seems. Put it up to the unbiased judges. At least you will help others. We want to get all possible ideas, and the best of these we shall reproduce. If there are two ideas equally good submitted in any one week, the prize will be sent to both. It will not be divided.

Do not argue that your house is too small to make stunts worth while or that you are not clever enough to think up a scheme. Some of the best ideas come from the small towns and so-called little fellows.

We want to make as complete a catalogue as possible of the activities of managers throughout the country. We want to show the trade and the Government how much is being done by the managers of motion picture theatres. We want to demonstrate the vastness of this work and prove what a power for good the once despised "store show" has become. Do not think that there will be enough without your contribution. We want them all. Where space does not permit the printing of all schemes in full they will at least be mentioned in brief with full credit.

This is not a contest, but rather a series of contests, for all the material received at this office between Monday morning and the last mail of Saturday will be considered the submissions for that week and judged as such, the material the following week again forming the basis for a new contest.

The entries will be judged each Saturday and the prize will be forwarded at once, but the schemes will not be published in the following issue but the week later, since cuts cannot be made in time to get the matter into the forms for the succeeding issue. In other words the schemes contributed the first week will not appear in the issue of September 18, dated September 28, but will appear in the issue dated October 5 and published September 25.

The judges will be James L. Hoff, Walter K. Hill and Epes W. Sargent, of the editorial staff, all of whom are practical theatrical men of long experience.

Address all submissions to the War Stamp Contest, Moving Picture World, 516 Fifth avenue, New York City.

WHAT HAVE YOU DONE?

TO encourage the dissemination of information on what the managers of motion picture theatres throughout the country are doing to assist the Government the Moving Picture World, commencing with the week of Sept. 8-14, will award a prize of a Five-Dollar War Stamp weekly to the house manager contributing the most valuable suggestion, during each calendar week, which he has already put into practice in his own house. This may be any scheme designed to increase patriotism, help the sale of Liberty Bonds, War Savings Stamps or to aid in any other patriotic movement. It may be the text for a lantern slide, some lobby feature, a house production, a line from an advertisement, a unique treatment of war films, or anything else that will heighten patriotism. Effectiveness will be the sole test and cost will not be considered in awarding the prize each week, permitting the small house manager to stand precisely the same chance that is enjoyed by houses of larger income. Where possible, photographs, sketches or advertisements should accompany the description, to be returned if desired.

In judging these contests three points will be taken into consideration. These are:

Simplicity.
Directness of appeal.
Breadth of appeal.

The most effective scheme will be simple, that it easily may be handled by exhibitors and readily grasped by readers. It must have a direct and forceful grip upon the imagination, and it should appeal to as many persons as possible, rather than to men only or to children only. A bond selling scheme for school children only, for example, will not be regarded as effective as a scheme that will appeal to their elders as well, though, of course, we shall be glad to give space to any good scheme.

INDUSTRY IS DECLARED ESSENTIAL

Chairman Baruch of the Priorities Committee of the War Industries Board So Decrees Following Long Conference with Committee of National Association

THE Priorities Committee of the War Industries Board has declared the motion picture industry essential in all its branches. This action on the part of the board was announced by Chairman M. Baruch in Washington, Friday, August 23.

The declaration of the motion picture industry as essential came about as a result of a conference between the priorities committee of the board, headed by Judge Edwin B. Parker, and a committee from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, headed by President William A. Brady, and consisting of the following officials and members of the association: W. C. Smith, of the Nicholas Power Company; E. M. Porter, of the Precision Machine Company; D. H. Haight, of the Eastman Kodak Company; A. J. Mitchell, of the National Carbon Company; Albert Lowe, of Paragon Films, Inc., and Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the association.

The War Industries Board was represented at the conference by Judge Edwin B. Parker, chairman of the priorities commission of the board; Herbert Bayard Swope, associate chairman of the board; H. G. Phillips, secretary of the board, and several heads of the various conservation divisions of the board.

In the ruling declaring the industry essential the following limitations were placed upon it.

Must Eliminate All Waste.

1. Each member of the industry will pledge himself to discontinue all non-essential production and eliminate all wasteful methods. Old film must be scraped and reclaimed and returned to the manufacturer for use in the manufacture of new films. Only wholesome pictures are to be produced. To save chemicals used in the production of explosives only one negative of a single picture will be made unless the picture is for export, when two will be permitted.

2. Permits for the erection of new theatre buildings and equipment for new theatres will be denied during the war. Where localities are overtheatred no new theatre will be permitted to replace those retiring from business.

3. Manufacturers will encourage the repair of existing machines (projection machines) rather than the purchase of new. Manufacture of new iron and tin containers for film will be discontinued and substitutes used to conserve the metals.

When these regulations and others to be announced later are complied with the members of the industry will be granted the priorities necessary to enable them to operate.

In presenting the reasons as to why the industry should be declared essential, President Brady made an exceedingly strong and convincing speech. He reviewed the war service work of the industry from the time he was requested to organize it on a war basis by President Wilson down to the present, calling attention to the twenty-eight-page brief that previously had been filed with Provost Marshal General Crowder setting forth in detail the accomplishments of the motion picture and the National Association as a direct aid of the Government and its associated activities such as the Red Cross in the winning of the war.

Pictures' Value Undisputed.

Judge Parker in replying to Mr. Brady's speech, said that the war work of the motion picture industry did not need to be gone into, as every prominent official in Washington was familiar with that work and the great good that it had accomplished. He stated that there was no question of the value of the motion picture and the screens of America to the Government.

The association committee also called the attention of Judge Parker to the work it had accomplished over nine months ago in eliminating the tin film cans from film shipments when such shipments were made in sheet iron carrying cases and the manner in which it had succeeded in bringing about the necessary changes in the railroad and express regulations that would make this elimination possible.

This information was a distinct surprise to Judge Parker, and he expressed his extreme gratification, stating that one of the most important methods of conservation that he had in mind was the elimination of the tin film cans. He expressed himself as being more than pleased to find that tin film cans were no longer required, and stated that the motion picture industry was the only industry so far examined by the board in which they had found that their requirements and demands had been anticipated and voluntarily put into effect.

Judge Parker then pointed out the absolute necessity for the rigid conservation of metals of all kinds, but more especially iron, steel, and tin. Several plans were discussed for the conservation of these metals in the industry, and it was pointed out that the greatest use was in the manufacture of projection machines and parts.

To Conserve Machinery.

The priorities committee inquired into the feasibility of inaugurating a campaign of education among the users of the machines, setting forth the necessity for care against accident and breakage and urging that old machines be repaired rather than new ones purchased. The association committee assured them that this would be done.

During the course of the conference the history of the manufacture and life of the motion picture was gone into in detail from the time the raw film was manufactured until the finished picture was shown in the theatre and the old and wornout prints scraped for the recovery of the base celluloid and the emulsion.

Plans were then made for the conservation of film in every shape and manner. In the past it has been the custom of some directors to shoot thirty and forty thousand feet of negative in order to obtain a five-reel picture. Directors have also used from one to five cameras in shooting the same scene. Under the rulings of the Board this will no longer be permitted.

The necessity for the conservation of films is the fact that the same chemicals are used in the manufacture of the base celluloid as are required in many forms of explosives, and these chemicals naturally must be greatly conserved. Plans were also entered into whereby all waste film must be returned to the manufacturer for use in making new film, and all old pictures when they have outworn their usefulness must be scraped and returned.

Laemmle Orders Waste Stopped.

The Government ruling just issued declaring motion pictures an essential industry, but requesting that all branches of that business be swept clean of inefficient, wasteful methods, has received instant response from the Universal.

President Carl Laemmle dispatched special orders to heads of the West Coast studios commanding a wholesale cut in the consumption of negative. He also issued general orders putting the company, in effect, on the operating basis of a railroad.

Mr. Laemmle's decree concerning footage waste puts the directors and players under the necessity of making every foot of film count. An absolute limit will be fixed for the amount of negative to be taken for each scene. This limit allowance will be written into the working scenario before it goes into the director's hands. Universal executives are confident that through this measure the old studio practice—true of all companies in the past—of "shooting" excessive footage of film for a production will be chloroformed at Universal City.

The general orders from Mr. Laemmle came in the form of a letter addressed to all Universal employees from the chief executives down to the youngest office boys. He instructs these workers to consider themselves in the light of train dispatchers and signal operators.

"It is a matter of extreme necessity for this business to get a high speed schedule to adopt the principles of a railroad," concluded Mr. Laemmle.

Brandt Expresses Appreciation.

"As one of the Fuel Committee appointed by President Brady of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, together with Marcus Loew, chairman; Samuel Rothapfel, Harold Edel, B. S. Moss, Sydney Cohen and Pat Powers, I had an opportunity of witnessing the placing before the proper authorities in Washington last week of the appeal of the motion picture industry that it be classed as an essential," said William Brandt, of Brooklyn, Monday evening at the New Albany Theatre.

"I believe I voice the sentiments of everybody concerned that entire credit for the successful issue should go to Mr. Brady for his able generalship. The industry is fortunate indeed in possessing a man of his natural capacity and wonderful will to do those things most necessary to be done in any grave emergency. I just had to say this."

ONE MORE WEEK IN CRUSADER BATTLE

Some of You Exchangemen Will Have to Hustle to Beat the Ninety-nine Bookings Made by Pearson, of Minneapolis, in a Single Week—Make It a Real Grandstand Finish

ONLY a single week remains of the contest for the splendid trophy offered by the Moving Picture World for the most intensive bookings for "Pershing's Crusaders." As a matter of fact the contest will be over by the time this paper reaches the hands of the Western readers. No data is available this week on which to base conclusions, but the one big outstanding fact is that Pearson, of Minneapolis, made ninety-nine bookings last week.

You'll remember that Pearson indicated that he might be interested in the decoration of his office, and it looks as though he were trying for a nice bronze eagle, with a three-foot spread of wings, and was prepared to purchase it with the only legal tender—bookings. But there are some other dark horses who are hitting their stride, and it is not going to be a runaway for any entry. Nothing, for example, has been heard from Sol Lesser, and Lesser announced he had the nail and the picture cord and the enthusiasm.

While the contest will be ended by the time the next issue comes from the press it is possible that there will be no announcement until the week following. All of the contracts must be checked up, and the state committees, where that form of distribution has been followed, are yet to be heard from. Announcement will be made at the earliest possible moment, but there may be some slight delay.

Made for Interest.

One thing is certain, however—the offering of the trophy made for interest and added hustle, and that is just why the trophy was offered. There was no real need of it, perhaps, for all of the salesmen were on tiptoe to make as good a showing as possible, but the offer of some permanent trophy gave a tangible angle to the scrap for first place, and has undoubtedly helped the bookings. That Tom North liked the idea is evident from the fact that he started a trophy contest of his own. North knows a good thing when he sees it.

It has started the first of these Government issues off to good patronage, and we think that the bookings will keep on until practically every house has shown the subject. It is not like a dramatic feature that has its slight vogue and vanishes to reappear in cheapened form as a second run. To those who have not seen it this first issue is just as new and just as vital as ever in spite of the fact that a second subject has been announced, and every good citizen will demand to see all of these films and not merely one here and there. The pictures have been assembled with a care that makes for real entertainment, as well as instruction. If you can get a patron into your house and make him laugh or make him cry or make him applaud he goes away content. With these Government issues you can do all three. He will laugh at the flashes of humor put in to relieve the tension, his eyes will grow moist at skillful appeals to sentiment, and if he is even 75 per cent. American he'll raise the roof with has applause. It has been done in New York, and it has been done in the bush shacks and in all grades of houses in between.

Play Up the Production.

But the way to make a clean-up is not to hide the fact that you are running the film, but to get up on the housetops and make all the noise you can. Turn out the Boy Scouts and the local band. Get the mayor or some other dignitary to make a speech at the opening performance. Get the Masons and the Odd Fellows and the Red Cross and other organizations to attend in a body. They will if they know that it is for the Government and not for your own advertisement—even if you could ask no better advertisement. Get out special paper, go over into nearby towns, circularize auto-owning farmers, ask the ministers to announce the film from their pulpits.

That's where you get your real return on a film like "Pershing's Crusaders." You get identified with the public movement, your house for the time being ceases to be merely a motion picture theatre, it becomes a forum, and long after the film has been exhibited the suggestion of importance remains.

It was because this paper realized the good that this film would do the Government, the exhibitor, the public and the propagandist alike that a drive was started for intensive bookings, and as the contest draws to a close we compare what has been done with what had been done and feel content that we have aided the business by urging bookings.

More films are coming, not one more nor two more nor yet the six provided for in the beautiful Victory Screen Pledge. They will be issued as often as the Government has a message to the people, for in no other way can facts be so adequately presented.

Get All the Good You Can.

Hundreds of exhibitors have made substantial profits from "Pershing's Crusaders." Everyone who has handled the film properly has made money, but no film is self-advertising. You must at least announce it, and the more attractively you announce it the more it will draw. It takes advertising to get the crowd, and it takes the right sort of advertising, but if you know the right approach you can clean up with this picture in Berlin. It's all in the way it is done.

In a week or two the winner of the trophy will be announced, but even if you are too late to help your locality win the trophy get busy and book the picture. You can still clean up with it, even though it will not help the exchange manager in your territory. It is a test of patriotism—your patriotism—the patriotism of your community.

The contest is about ended, but the film, like the men it pictures, should go on and on—ever forward, and carry with it those that come after. Unless you have a victory screen pledge in your lobby you stamp yourself wanting. Start it now with the "Crusaders" that your record may be clean and complete.

Story of Martyred Nurse, Edith Cavell, Being Filmed by Plunkett and Carroll

JOSEPH L. PLUNKETT and Frank Carroll announce that after many months of preparatory work the story of Edith Cavell, the brave nurse for whom England has erected a monument in recognition of her martyrdom, is being filmed under their management, and will be released about September 16 under the title, "The Woman the Germans Shot."

The direction of the picture is by John G. Adolfi, whose work as a director of feature pictures is well known to the motion picture public, and the producers, together with Director Adolfi, have gathered a cast of players who are said to be particularly well suited to the characters in the story.

The producers in their announcement state: "Eminent critics contend that if there is any one incident to which the autocracy of the Central Powers can attribute more than another of its ultimate defeat it is destined to be the summary execution of Nurse Cavell. When she went to her death, we are told, she was satisfied that she had done only her Christian duty and was ready to pay the supreme sacrifice. It is the weightiest message the women of America have yet received, because they get with it the general message of bleeding poor Belgium.

"While dealing with a murder, it is free from all negative tendency, no downward trend. There is a manly fight and struggle, and plenty of genuine power in the story."

The story was written by Anthony Paul Kelly.

SCOTT A PATHE MANAGER.

Paul Brunet, vice president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces the appointment of Ward E. Scott as manager of the Denver branch office. Mr. Scott takes the place of C. E. Epperson, who has been acquired by Uncle Sam as a "first class fighting man."

Mr. Scott was in the wholesale stationery business for twelve years before getting into the film business. For five years he was with Mutual, the last three of which were spent as Denver manager.

LARGE JOURNEYS TO LITTLE PLACES

What Was Revealed in a Trip of Seven Hundred Miles Through New York's Catskill Range—How Managers in Smaller Towns Fortify Income from Motion Pictures

By SAM SPEDON

ONE would naturally suppose that a drive of seven hundred miles during the week of August 5 through the Catskill mountains of New York would furnish some relief from the terrible hot spell which prevailed at that time, but it didn't. The higher up we got the hotter it seemed to get. Even at an altitude of 2,000 feet we slept with nothing on or over us. While we were on business bent we were not averse to all the comfort and pleasure that might come our way. The seven hundred miles took us through Westchester, Ulster, Orange, Sullivan, Delaware, Otsego, Schoharie, Albany, Green and Dutchess counties. If you follow us, you will get an idea of the character of places visited and the conditions under which the smaller exhibitor does business.

Talking pictures, particularly the exhibition of them, from the metropolitan's viewpoint in the comfortable confines of our home offices and luxurious lobbies and restaurants of our swell hotels seems like fighting the battles of the Somme and the Marne from the same vantages. To get a real idea and appreciation we have got to visit the front and the trenches.

Conklin Runs Four Days.

Our first stop was Suffern, a town of 3,000 inhabitants. Manager Conklin, of the Playhouse, 350 capacity, was not in evidence, but we had a chance of looking over his house, which is stucco, with an attractive front and rather small and unattractive lobby. He runs four days a week. There are some small manufacturing interests here and considerable provision and milk traffic. Suffern draws more or less patronage from the adjacent towns of Sloatsburg and Ramapo.

Goshen, population 3,500, was our next objective. Here we found the town crowded with an influx of visitors to the three days annual trotting races, which are prevalent at this season of the year in the larger of the smaller towns. Frank Hock, manager of the motion picture theatre "Central Hall," 300 seats, was not at his plumbing establishment, so we joined the throng and went to the races, where we found Mr. Hock in charge of the ice cream, soft drinks and "hot dog" concessions, which was convincing evidence that he is one of the hustlers and up-to-date business men of this section. The Central Hall runs every night from 7.15 to 10.30, and is well patronized, as it should be, judging from the quality of pictures shown.

At Chester, 1,200 inhabitants, Mr. Bacon, who manages the motion picture shows, given twice a week, under the auspices of the Knights of Pythias, was knocked out by the heat and we did not find him at the feed and lumber store, where he is employed.

Monticello Has Regular Manager.

Passing through Wurtzboro and several other small towns, we came to Monticello, 2,600 population, where Maurice Daniels, the manager of the Monticello Lyceum, extended the glad hand and made us feel as if we were born and brought up there. Monticello has a summer population of 3,000 and the Lyceum runs every night during this season. In the winter it runs four nights a week. Daniels is one of the best managers we have ever met and one of the most versatile. He is up to the minute on his advertising and handles the ivories of the well seasoned grand piano with the deftness of a Paderewski. His house seats 600, and besides being a well equipped theatre, with surrounding balconies, it is used in the winter as a basketball court and for general festivities. In the basement there are bowling alleys, which, we were informed, do not interfere with the proceedings above stairs. The approach to the Lyceum is very impressive. It is surrounded by a cobblestone wall with high turretlike posts at intervals, giving a baronial effect which makes one approach it with veneration.

On our way we passed through the small town of Hampton. Our attention was called by some motion picture posters to a hall of many hard winters. We inquired for the manager and learned he was E. C. Miller, at the general store. We asked him if he was running moving pictures at the hall and he replied, "Nothing doing." In answer to our inquiry about population he said: "Two hundred and eighty, and most of them gone. The rest are waiting to go."

We stayed over night at Liberty and witnessed the performance at the New Lyric, seating 300. This was on the night of August 6, one of the hottest of the summer and one hundred persons in their shirtwaists endured the heat to see the pictures. Feitner is the manager of the New Lyric and is also proprietor of a drugstore. Liberty has a population of 2,500, more or less augmented by Summer boarders and invalids who frequent this locality. The New Lyric is open daily all year.

Supervises Town's Amusements.

From Liberty we journeyed to Roscoe, 700 permanent inhabitants, where we met Jerry Ryan, who presides over the Criterion Theatre, seating 300. This theatre is open four nights a week. Mr. Ryan is a wideawake businesslike chap who makes the most of his opportunities; provides an excellent screen entertainment and has in connection therewith an ice cream and soda water parlor as well as pool tables, thereby concentrating the pleasures of the town under proper personal supervision. He is also the local newsdealer by whom all the New York newspapers are distributed.

A drive of twenty-five miles from Roscoe brought us to Delhi, 1,750 population, and we spent a very pleasant hour with R. C. Telford, manager of the Delhi Opera House, which is open three days a week and seats 480. Mr. Telford is the proprietor of the local garage and auto supplies store, besides being interested in the local hotel.

It was our intention to stop at Hancock on our way to Walton, but the drive was a long and rough one across the mountains, so we pressed on in an effort to reach Walton by dinner time. By the way, Hancock is a town of about four hundred, and motion pictures are run incidentally in the Odd Fellows Hall, by the town shoemaker, who is a sort of local picture impressario.

Walton is one of the most progressive little places we have visited. It has a population of about 3,500 and there seemed to be a local pride in everything about the town. H. J. Northrop, who runs the Majestic Theatre, knows how to do it and shows it in every detail of his house, both inside and out. The front is of stucco with green trimmings. Above the entrance there is what appeared to be a sort of open promenade or porch. In the openings were window boxes of flower plants that give the whole a beautiful and attractive appearance. Inside the whole color scheme was most chaste and restful. The Majestic runs afternoon and evenings and seats about 600, including a small gallery.

Oneonta Has Two Large Houses.

At Oneonta, we spent the night and called on Addison, the manager of the Oneonta Theatre, and afterward met J. M. Schine of the Strand. Oneonta is classed as a small city—about 12,000 inhabitants, with many industries and a productive surrounding country. Both the Oneonta Theatre and the Strand are large theatres with orchestras and uniformed attendants. There is considerable competition between the two in managership. Addison of the Oneonta is a live wire and very prolific in advertising stunts. Both he and Mrs. Addison were formerly on the stage with the Champlin comedy company. He has been at the Oneonta about two months, and during that time has made a record as a hustler and an ingenious advertiser. While at Oneonta we met D. J. Dolan of the Kleine Distributing Company, O. A. Moses of the Select and H. N. Deverse of the Doolee Film Company, Inc. It seemed quite like being in little old New York to meet this bunch of old friends in an ice cream parlor in Oneonta.

Our next stop was at Cooperstown, at the foot of Otsego Lake, 3,000 population. Here we met Bill Smalley, who runs daily showings in the village in a hall seating 600. The lower floor is occupied by the fire department, a consolation to anyone who is in the least way timid. The hall is equipped as are most town halls and opera houses, inexpensively, with a screen arranged on the stage and a booth in the gallery. Mr. Smalley runs two day showings in three other nearby towns, and with them all is a very busy manager; from our conversation with him a well posted and keen student of the industry.

Richfield, at the head of Otsego Lake, is primarily a summer resort, noted for its surplus springs. It is a very pretty and prosperous town of a normal population of 2,000, accelerated in the summer season. Ray Shouls runs the Shouls Theatre daily in the summer and two or three days a week in the winter. We gave the house the once over and found it comfortably equipped and quite modern in general appearance and seating about 450.

Winne Wins as Exhibitor-Editor.

The next jump we made was to Cherry Valley, 800 inhabitants, where we had a most delightful visit with F. Levere Winne, the manager of the Star Theatre, situated on the second floor of Odd Fellows' Hall building, which also is occupied by the public library and the local hose company. Mr. Winne is editor and proprietor of the Gazette of Otsego County. As an evidence of his up-to-dateness we observed that his printing establishment was furnished with a fully equipped linotype machine. He runs the Star Theatre three days a week and has a discriminating audience that keeps him on the alert for everything of the best. His patronage comes not only from the town, but includes several nearby villages and the surrounding country. Mr. Winne believes in advertising, which he does extensively, supplemented by a liberal use of printer's ink in the Gazette, which covers the whole territory.

Sharon Springs, in Schoharie County, is a popular summer resort, noted for its sulphur springs, dating back to the early seventies, when it was the mecca of the Four Hundred and more of New York City and State. It has a permanent population of 700, which increases to three or four thousand during the warm months. Three-fourths of the summer population are Jews, mostly orthodox, and a majority of the hotels are exclusively "kosher."

Eigen Builds Up Academy.

Otto E. Eigen directs the Sharon Academy, seating 600. Before Eigen took hold of it this season it was very much run down. Since his occupancy he has greatly improved it, put in a first class Simplex machine with electric motor and all the latest improvements. We found Albert Neiter officiating as operator. Mr. Neiter was employed at the New York Strand and knows all about projection. The Academy has an attractive lobby and the front is made brilliant by a large electric sign. Mr. Eigen opens daily in the summer and periodically in the winter. In addition to his managerial work Mr. Eigen runs the garage and a popular restaurant and refreshment parlor.

On our way east we reached Cobbleskill about 11 p.m. and left at 8 the next morning, therefore were unable to call on Gordon & Northrop, who manage the local theatre and give three showings a week.

We ran over to Altamont, 850 population, to see Manager Chas. Valkinburg, who runs pictures occasionally and the local plumbing establishment regularly.

From Albany we went south and homeward, passing through Ravena, 1,500 population. We stopped to see Clarence Lawson, who is employed in the general merchandise business and gives an occasional showing of pictures in the town hall, which is very unattractive. The population is largely composed of those working in the cement mills and quarries in that section.

Throughout our travels we were impressed with the great yield of crops and the general prosperity of the people, all of whom were uncomplainingly paying a pro rata share of taxes to help win the war and meeting conditions with a right good will and grace.

In the northern and central parts of New York our attention was frequently called to the Community and Redpath Chautauquas which have been held in most of the larger towns and sections. These Chautauquas are held five days in succession and draws big attendance. They are transported the same as a circus, the whole paraphernalia, tents, seats, platform, performers and all being carried by special train and sidetracking at each point routed. Naturally these Chautauquas have an appreciable affect on the theatres in the territory.

Stanley and Its Opponents Compromise; Further Testimony Declared Unnecessary

WITH the submitting of a tentative statement of facts in the case of a few independent moving picture exhibitors against the Stanley Booking Corporation, the hearings in the subject in dispute came to an abrupt ending August 22 before Special Examiner W. T. Roberts in the Federal Building, Philadelphia. Attorneys R. R. Kane and George McCorkle, Washington, who appeared for the Federal Commission, and Morris Wolf, representing the Stanley Booking Corporation, informed the examiner when the hearings were resumed that an agreement satisfactory to both sides to the controversy had been reached, and therefore it was unnecessary to continue the taking of testimony.

Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Booking Corporation, made the following statement concerning the case:

"The evidence heard as far as the suit proceeded disclosed the facts that the complainants all had reference to conditions which have not existed for a long time and had no bearing upon the present method of business as conducted by the Stanley Booking Corporation. For this reason the case was of no practical importance and, rather than continue what would have been a most protracted hearing, a statement of facts was agreed upon between the commission and this corporation on the basis of which we anticipate the commission will make an order directing this corporation not to discriminate unduly against the few picture houses in this vicinity which are not its clients.

"Such an order will be entirely satisfactory to us, for we have not, as evidenced by the recent conduct of our business, been interested in anything except the prosperity of our clients, who comprise all the most popular and important photoplay resorts in Philadelphia and the surrounding territory. This fact was firmly established by the evidence and it was also evident that the Stanley Booking Corporation has not done more than what its objects are—viz.: to enable those exhibitors affiliated with it to secure first run of the best photoplays and other film features, and in general to aid them in every way to place their resorts before the public in such a manner that they would gain the confidence and esteem of motion picture lovers, and also to help them in every legitimate manner to maintain that."

Essanay Issues Series of Domestic Science Films

ESSANAY will issue a series of domestic science pictures in the interest of food conservation for the United States Government beginning August 16. One each week will be issued thereafter, to be attached to the Broncho Billy films, released through the General Film company.

The pictures, six of which have already been completed, are being directed by Miss Eleanor Lee Wright, a noted domestic science expert. They are given free to exhibitors booking the Broncho Billy films, together with posters to advertise them. They run upward of two hundred feet in length.

Each picture shows the making of some table dainty, and the subtitles give the ingredients used and the exact quantity, so that any one seeing the pictures can make the same dainty.

These films are put out for the purpose of educating the public in making tasty dainties for the table in an economical way, so as to save on the materials which the government especially wishes to conserve.

The first six pictures include the making of a sugarless marmalade, raspberry tarts, pineapple sponge, the conservation loaf, nut cheese loaf and shows the advantages of buying the whole ham.

It is believed every woman will be interested in these pictures, not only with the view of saving on foodstuffs for the government, but to learn how to make new and tasteful dishes at a small cost.

GERAGHTY AT WESTERN METRO.

Tom J. Geraghty, author of many motion picture successes, including a number of the earlier Drew comedies, has joined the scenario staff at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood. Geraghty already has turned in his first completed manuscript tentatively titled "Thirty Days," intended as a starring vehicle for May Allison. The continuity was done from an original story written by Luther A. Reed, who has since entered an officers' training school.

Geraghty, who embarked on a writing career as a New York reporter, gained his first experience in motion pictures at Metro's Eastern studios in the metropolis, where he did publicity and subsequently wrote comedies for Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in collaboration with Charley Fuhr. His journalistic endeavors embraced seven years on the staff of the New York Herald and more than a year on the Tribune.

METRO ADOPTS U. S. LABEL.

Metro is the first motion picture company to adopt the national trademark, "Made in the United States." This label will hereafter be used on all Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., features and superfeatures, and will appear on seventy-six multiple-reel screen productions distributed by Metro during the year.

Barry Dismisses Censorship Appeal, Saying Board Is Qualified to Judge

THE appeal made by G. A. Margetts of the Canadian Universal Film Company, of St. John, against the decision of the Board of Censors, who condemned the picture, "Sirens of the Sea," has been dismissed by Justice Barry. Such in brief is the story of the appeal, which story told in detail makes rather interesting reading.

To begin with there is in the Theatres and Cinematograph act of the province a provision that "there shall be an appeal from the Board of Censors to the person, body, or court designated, and subject to the conditions prescribed by regulation of the lieutenant-governor-in-council." (Sec. 4, Sub-Sec. 2.)

The picture was condemned by the censor then on duty at the Canadian Universal exchange, and on being viewed by the whole board again was condemned and its exhibition in the province prohibited. The grounds upon which the picture was banned as appears in the official notification of the chairman of the Board of Censors sent to Mr. Margetts, the agent of the company, are that "the board felt it was generally immoral in tone and characterized in many of its parts by situations of great indelicacy, and that there are so many of these indelicate situations in the picture that the board cannot allow it to be exhibited in this province."

In his judgment, Judge Barry says: "I had the advantage of seeing the picture in question shown upon a screen in the rooms of the proprietors in St. John. Because I know little of moving pictures and visit the show houses but seldom it was not without many misgivings that I assumed the duty of hearing and determining this appeal.

"The picture certainly seems to me to have much to recommend it to lovers of the beautiful in nature and in art, and to possess many captivating scenes. Some of the scenes are mystical and allegorical in their character, others are intended to portray the human passions —love, sex-attraction, hate, revenge, remorse. Many of the young girls who as nymphs and sirens participate in the sea scenes are, on account of the nature of the part they play, but scantily clad, and the same is true of some of the male actors. The fact that the picture-play is staged in a beautiful setting is, of course, no license for its exhibition if the tendency of the whole production is pernicious. To do an ill thing well but doubles the fault. If a painter suffers his pencil to grow licentious, if he gives us immodesties, the merits of a Raphael will excuse not him.

Judges Not Specially Trained.

"To the lawyer the principal difficulty of the appeal is found in its novelty. The question to be determined is not a question of law, neither is it one of fact, for there are no facts in dispute. It is simply for the appeal tribunal to determine whether in prohibiting the exhibition of the picture the Board of Censors has exercised a proper discretion. There are seven Supreme Court and five County Court judges in the province. The appellants are given their choice of any one of twelve tribunals—tribunals which, I may say, can, in the nature of things, have no uniform standard or guide by which the merits or demerits of any particular picture or photoplay are to be judged or measured. The judges of the courts are not specially trained for the consideration of questions of this kind, and I am speaking for myself alone, for, in the performance of a duty such as this, I possess no peculiar qualifications over and above those possessed by the ordinary citizen."

After speaking at some length in regard to appeals the judgment goes on:

"It is the duty of the censors to prohibit the exhibition of pictures indecent in their tendency and inimical to the moral health of the community, and to prevent, if possible, everything that is immodest, unseemly, indelicate, or obscene. The legislature has given to the lieutenant-governor-in-council authority to name a board by whose discretion and judgment all these matters are to be regulated. With respect to the 'Sirens of the Sea,' I have no doubt the censors performed their duty honestly and fairly and according to their own conception of right and wrong. I can see no reason why a judge whose judgment in regard to such matters may not be superior—whose judgment may indeed be far inferior—to that of the members who compose the Board of Censors should interfere with their discretion or reverse their decision upon a question in regard to which they are supposed to possess special qualification.

"So long as the legislature clothes the board with a discretion in regard to the decision of such matters and in the performance of their duties the censors act fairly and honestly and not from any improper or ulterior motive, I think it would be contrary to principle for an appeal judge to interfere with their discretion. While seemingly, by the order in council, all the judges of the courts named are severally given the authority to vary this particular decision of the board, for the reasons given, I, for one, do not feel disposed to exercise that authority, and therefore shall not interfere with the decision of the Board of Censors. The appeal is dismissed."

FAIRWEATHER.

Elaine Sterne Is Author of Many Scripts and Books

ELAINE STERNE, the author of "Little Miss Moneybags," Metro's next co-starring vehicle for Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, is a captain in the Girls' National Honor Guard. Her special assignment is the providing of entertainment for sick and wounded sailors at the Naval Hospital, Brooklyn. Miss Sterne has co-operated with Metro in furnishing entertainment both for the "Jackies" at the hospital and for the soldiers at Fort Hancock.

Miss Sterne has just written a book of navy tales called "Over the Seas for Uncle Sam," which the Britton Publishing Company has issued. Already it has enjoyed a large sale. The Britton firm also published Miss Sterne's novel, "The Road to Ambition," which was reckoned third in the list of "six best sellers" last year. Her new book has the official indorsement of Secretary of the Navy Daniels.

Miss Sterne is a New York girl. She attended St. Agatha's Episcopal School, and then took special courses in English literature at Columbia University. Deciding that writing was to be her life work she first tried her hand at short stories, and published in St. Nicholas, Everybody's and Collier's. Motion picture scenarios next interested her, and of the first three written and sent out in one "batch" two remained and were accepted. Miss Sterne is the author of the "Sonny Jim" children's features in which Bobby Connelly starred. These were later issued in book form. For Mary Pickford she wrote "The Pride of the Clan"; for Mabel Normand, "The Floor Below"; for Bessie Barriscale, "The Sorrows of Love," and numerous photoplays for Edith Storey. She won the Evening Sun-Vitagraph contest, in one year winning three prize contests.

Goldberg Got Glad Hand; Crowd Thought Him Gerard

JOE GOLDBERG, sales representative of the Big Feature Rights Corporation of Louisville, which is handling "My Four Years in Germany" in Kentucky and Tennessee, had an amusing experience while promoting the Gerard picture in one of the small mountain towns of the former state.

It seems that one of Goldberg's duties in putting over the production consists in delivering a brief lecture regarding the striking features of the film and how it came into being.

On a certain stage that is smaller than some others he walked out to do his evening chores and was greeted with tremendous and vociferous applause.

"Why the large glad hand?" pondered Joe, scratching his head.

He didn't find out until his talk had ended. Somebody in the audience whispered that the speaker was Ambassador Gerard himself. The rumor fled like lightning and electrified the crowd into a noisy burst of enthusiasm.

RED CROSS FILM STARTS.

Beginning with August 19, the highly inspiring American Red Cross war film "The Historic Fourth of July in Paris" began its period of wide distribution with runs in the largest vaudeville theatres of the country under United Booking Offices co-operating with General Film Company. The Keith houses, the Proctor houses and all of the other circuits and the independent houses that are served with attractions by the U. B. O. now have their dates settled. In some houses the week of August 19 was fixed for showing the picture; in others the week of August 26 was alloted.

Jos. J. Johnson, of the Pictures Bureau of the American Red Cross, has made it known that the Bureau is acting under the advice of the National Association of the Moving Picture Industry as to distributing its material, and that its film operations are not designed for revenue in any sense of the word, any money that is received being intended to cover back expense of the taking and production of its picture.

Motion Picture War Service Association Holds Ball at Los Angeles Auditorium and All Sizes of Film Bugs Aid Noble Work for Blind and Maimed Soldiers

THE masquerade ball and entertainment given under the auspices of the Motion Picture War Service Association at the Shrine Auditorium on the night of August 17 was an artistic as well as a social and financial success. The immense hall was decorated by art directors from the different studios supervised by G. Harold Percival, of the Thomas H. Ince plant, who won the honor through a competition. Burnt orange and yellow were the predominating colors used, and the scheme of decoration was carried out in an elaborate manner.

Two orchestras furnished the music, and acts from the vaudeville and dramatic stage, fancy and interpretative dancing by the Ruth St. Denis dancers, and songs by distinguished artists were interpolated between the twenty dance numbers on the program.

Between four and five thousand people were in attendance, and among the number, of course, were all the big bugs, the little bugs and the middle-sized bugs of filmdom.

Many Beautiful Costumes.

The majority of the big crowd were masked and in costume, and costumes as beautiful, as artistic, as original, as chic, as dainty and as daring as might have been expected of a people whose daily life is made up of costumes and impersonations.

The dancing started at 10 o'clock, just after the band played "The Star Spangled Banner." The big floor of the auditorium was a wonderful, an amazing, a delightful and a confusing place. Princes and paupers, clowns and queens, diplomats and dandies; girls with ice cream to sell; other girls with pink stuff in glasses that looked like cocktails but were not cocktails.

Kings and cannibals and D. W. Griffith smiling like everything. Cecil B. De Mille as a Colonial and William as a clown. Pirates, monks, mokes, chinks Japs, swashbucklers, hold-up men, Bryant Washburn as a rajah. Wallie Reid as himself. Bert Lytell as ditto. Lila Lee, who looked young enough to be taking in her first party, as a Russian lady. Fred Stone, with straw sticking out all over him and with a scarecrow head, dancing just like Fred always dances, and little Dorothy Stone, twelve years old and a chip of the old block when it comes to dancing, having the time of her young life.

Jeanie MacPherson as an Aztec princess. Sailors and soldiers, and great inclination on the part of the girls to dance with uniforms. Dorothy Phillips as Dorothy. Anna Little—but oh, my!

Call for Mr. Taylor.

Dozens of people running here and there and wanting to know where Mr. Taylor was. Mr. Taylor! MR. TAYLOR! MR. S. E. V. TAYLOR!!! Please somebody page Mr. Taylor!

And Mr. Taylor, as general factotum, busier than a one-armed paper hanger all the time.

Indians and flower girls and Madames and Mamselles and courtiers and prime ministers and Theda Bara in a box, and J. Gordon Edwards in a box, looking distinguished, and Mrs. J. Gordon Edwards, who used to be Angela McCaull on the regular stage and clever as they made 'em, and Charlie Murray here and there and everywhere as usual. What would the movies do without Murray?

And cock-eyed Ben Turpin with a long-tail coat and a silk hat and folks crowding around him and a girl introducing her sailor sweetheart to Ben and saying "Please, Ben, do a fall," and good old Ben doing a fall—just like that.

And George Beban as plain George, and Jack Mulhall as plain Jack; and over all, and around all, the spirit of laughter and love and flirtation—"Have a good time—you aren't young but once—on with the dance—let joy be unconfined—we'll dance all night till broad daylight, and go home with the girls in the morning."

And everybody did just that.

The Comedy Stops Right Here.

The purpose of the ball was to start a fund for the erection of a large institution in Los Angeles, which will be turned over to the Government as a general hospital and vocational training school for blinded and maimed soldiers during the war, and afterward used as a home for the people of the picture industry who may become dependent through sickness, old age or accident.

S. E. V. Taylor, secretary of the association, who was executive head of the entertainment, and all the committees intrusted with the details, worked with the idea of leaving no little or big details undone that would contribute to the success of the enterprise.

Eight thousand tickets were sold at $3 each admitting to the ballroom floor, and in addition twenty-eight boxes at varying prices were taken by people prominent in the industry. A total of $20,000 was realized. GIEBLER.

World Pictures Quotes Statistics to Prove Eastern Studios More Economical

IN view of the moving of some motion picture manufacturers to the West Coast, World Pictures, asked if they also contemplated moving their studios to California, said that first the World Company cannot see any advantage in dismantling its production plant at Fort Lee and moving three thousand or more miles away. The environs of New York are more accessible to three-fifths of the area of the motion picture activity of the world and seven-eighths of the population of the United States. As regards the economy of California and New York the preponderant saving is in favor of the latter location not alone as regards the cost of making pictures, but also in the saving of time as it applies to the exhibition of the product.

It has been proven time over that even when the studio end of the industry is satisfied with the result of its labors it often becomes necessary to make some retakes or changes in the picture, and this sometimes necessitates sending the negative and prints back to the studio. With California studios time lost in transit is one big item, and then there is the danger in the interim the actors have strayed to other fields. In the East the changes necessary to make the picture perfect can be noted so quickly that it is a matter of only a day or two to make them, and the actors can be secured without difficulty. Time, these days, is a big item.

Delays in express deliv ry are of so common occurrence that no certainty of delivery is assured, and so dangerous is the situation that one can easily count on a month as the length of time for a print to go to California and return. Taking the interest change on the amount of money spent in making the picture it is seen that this alone adds a big expense during the year for an organization turning out one or more pictures a week from California studios. And the World points out the added expense must be paid for by the exhibitors.

MANY WRITE BESSIE LOVE LETTERS.

The advent of Bessie Love upon the Vitagraph Hollywood lot was looked forward to as an event of particular interest. Already film fans have memorized Bessie's new address. Within three days after the announcement was published that she was to be a Vitagraph star fifty letters found their way to the Vitagraph plant, all addressed to Bessie at her new studio address. Bessie is one of the best known and best liked little picture stars in the California film colony, and has received a great number of wires and letters from the other stars hovering in this colony congratulating Bessie on her new affiliation.

TO GET DATA FOR HUGO FILM.

Francis M. Hugo, Secretary of State of New York, has sent Charles W. Taft, second deputy secretary of state, and C. L. Grant, Mr. Hugo's personal secretary, to provide data for Harry Levey, of the Universal's industrial department, in making the film "My Four Years at Albany." The picture is intended to cover the high lights of Mr. Hugo's official record, and will be used for campaign purposes.

Apfel's Questions to Actress Mary Nau Uncover Romance of Belgium and of War

ing paid her. The different directors who have had her in charge were pleased with her work and the intelligence she displayed in putting into effect their suggestions. Finally Oscar Apfel inquired what her experience had been on the legitimate stage. Miss Nau informed him that she hailed from Belgium and that prior to the war she had appeared in the first performance given on any stage of Maeterlinck's fantasy play, "The Blue Bird," when it had its premiere at the Royal Theatre in Brussels.

Moreover, Miss Nau was also in the original cast of "Monna Vanna" and "Sister Beatrice" when they had first performances under the personal direction of the author. For a number of years she had been connected with the principal theatrical organizations of her native land. At the beginning of the war when Belgium was invaded she stayed until the last boat left Ostend for England with refugees. Her husband remained behind to fight.

For a year Miss Nau lost all track of her husband until she read a story in the London Daily News of his exploits as an aviator. He, too, had no means of discovering her whereabouts and had given her up as dead. When by reason of wounds he had received in combat he was invalided a reunion was effected. He was sent to the United States to help this government in its efforts to build up an aviation section to its army worthy of this great country and Miss Nau accompanied him. Meanwhile she is doing her bit for the land of her birth by working in World Pictures and giving her salary to sorely beset Belgium.

Vitagraph Reports Large in Blue Ribbon Contracts

EVERY office in the Vitagraph Distributing organization has reported during the last ten days a noteworthy increase in Blue Ribbon feature contracts as the result of the statement of policy recently made by the company. A statement from the home office of the distributing organization declares that the branches have scored 100 per cent. in the writing of new first-run accounts on a fifty-two week basis, scores of the leading exhibitors of the country having come to Vitagraph under the new booking plan.

Vitagraph, by arranging its production plans on a business basis, has taken the first step toward stabilizing the business by announcing definitely the release dates of its Blue Ribbon features for a year, together with a guarantee that certain stars will appear on certain dates during that period at intervals of six weeks.

It is announced at the Vitagraph offices that a recapitulation based upon returns for the first two weeks of the new releasing plan is now being prepared, and that the results of it will be given out next week.

Big Advertising Splash for Paramount-Artcraft Week

THE week of September 1, which marks the opening of the new year of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been scheduled as Paramount-Artcraft Week throughout the country by that organization. During this week Paramount-Artcraft exhibitors will show exclusively productions released under these trade-marks.

The plan is to nationalize the showing of Paramount and Artcraft pictures for a solid week backed up by a big advertising campaign to be conducted by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in behalf of the exhibitor. In the New York territory several weeks ago this plan was tried out with great success. Page advertisements were taken in several New York dailies by the distributors in conjunction with the exhibitors in which each theatre was directly tied up with the big drive. In view of the success of this plan it was decided to give exhibitors elsewhere the same opportunity, and advance reports indicate the results will mark an achievement in the way of exhibitor-distributor co-operation.

Along the above lines full page advertisements have already been reserved in newspapers throughout the country in which each exhibitor showing exclusively Paramount and Artcraft pictures for the week of September 1 will be given free space to announce the attractions he will show. Thus every exhibitor in these territories can take advantage of this drive whether he makes daily or weekly changes.

While in Washington recently William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, held a conference with Joseph Johnson, publicity director of the Red Cross. During the course of the conversation Mr. Johnson asked if it would be possible to have pictures of the Red Cross activities in France incorporated into the Universal picture, "Crashing Through to Berlin."

Mr. Brady immediately got in touch with officials of the Universal Company by telephone from Mr. Johnson's office and in five minutes the desired permission was obtained. Orders were immediately given for the delivery of the negative to Universal and when the picture is released throughout the motion picture theatres of the country it will contain these Red Cross pictures.

Sol Lesser Opens Offices in Chicago to Contend for Business in Mid-West

WITH the opening of Chicago offices recently, Sol. L. Lesser, of San Francisco, becomes for the first time a contender among Mid-Western film production distributors. Though his Eastern invasion is primarily for the purpose of placing "Hearts of the World" to better advantage in the territory recently acquired by Mr. Lesser and George Davis it also means the second step in the gradual establishment of a chain of exchanges extending from coast to coast.

In addition to being associated with Mr. Davis in the Mid-West "Hearts of the World" Company, Mr. Lesser is president and general manager of the All-Star Feature Distributors, with offices in San Francisco.

The All-Star Feature Distributors has its offices in all the coast cities of importance, and distributes state rights productions in all states west of the Rockies. Mr. Lesser first attracted attention by paying a huge price for "The Spoilers," and his handling of that production was one of the causes of its popularity in the Far West. Since that time Mr. Lesser's firm has booked many of the big film productions, including "Intolerance," and now the latest great romance of the war, "Hearts of the World."

His advent to the East will mean the permanent establishment of headquarters in Chicago of Mr. Lesser's exchange, as he intends to amplify his present holdings with the purchase of additional features as they are produced. West of the Mississippi there will be twenty-five companies touring with "Hearts of the World," fifteen from Chicago, and ten from San Francisco. Each company will be equipped with all the essentials for the pretentious exhibition of the production.

On May 18, Mr. Lesser startled his friends by announcing the purchase of "Hearts of the World" for eleven Western states for $200,000, and the success of the production under his management was so gratifying that when the opportunity came to purchase the remaining eleven states west of the Mississippi he acquired the territory.

The production is now in the midst of its tenth week at the Alcazar in San Francisco, where it has broken all records. The lengths of its engagements in other cities are five weeks in Seattle, four in Portland, three in Spokane, four in Oakland, four in Denver, three in Salt Lake City, and three in Milwaukee, where it is scheduled for a seven weeks' stay.

The Chicago offices are in the City Hall Square Building, and are under the management of George Davis.

MAKING "SAVAGE WOMAN" SAVAGE

Clara Kimball Young Recalls the Delights of Leopard Skin Lingerie, Stone Bruises, Snakes and One Hundred and Fourteen and No Shade

By Edward Weitzel

HENCEFORTH and forever cave women, belles of the jungle and all classes of lovely ladies who wear leopard skin lingerie and neglect to patronize a Fifth avenue bootmaker are banished from the repertory of Clara Kimball Young. The star of "The Savage Woman" has said it, and said it so emphatically that there is not the slightest reason to believe she will ever change her mind—until the latest styles in Parisian footwear are de rigueur on the burning sands of Central Africa and fashion taboos bare feet in that section.

Seated at a large flat-topped mahogany desk in the center of the Clara Kimball Young Picture Company office and dressed in a French horizon blue suit of military cut and a chic turban to match, the lady of the luminous eyes who is numbered among the Select stars hung up the telephone after a series of explicit injunctions as to the making of several costumes needed in her next picture and answered an inquiry about her latest release with the declaration:

"No more barefoot parts for mine!"

"You didn't enjoy this getting-near-to-nature experience then, Miss Young?"

"Quite the contrary! I had thought it would be good fun to discard the conventional articles of civilized attire for a rug kimono and roam the desert sands or climb nimbly from limb to limb of the banyan tree, clad in innocence and the glad smile of the humorist. I know better now. Palm Canyon, with the mercury registering one hundred and fourteen degrees and no shade, is no place to run about in your bare feet and pretend you were born to the sport."

"That was the impression you gave in the picture."

"It's kind of you to say so; but if I succeeded in disguising my real feelings it was one of the most difficult pieces of acting I've ever done in my life. You remember this scene?"

Miss Young pointed to a large photograph standing against the wall, showing her as the heroine of "The Savage Woman."

"You look very happy and very much at your ease."

One Reason For Not Sitting Down.

"I was never so uncomfortable in my life. The heat was terrible. I waded through that brook in the hopes it would cool me off a little, and the water was almost hot. Then I stepped on a stone and bruised my foot. I wanted to sit down on the sand and examine the bruise; but I didn't. I stood up for the same reason the boy stood on the burning deck—it was too hot to sit down. Then, the snakes. The place is full of rattlers."

"Did you step on any?"

"No; I'm not afraid of snakes. But I prefer to have my boots on when we meet."

"The place where the African scenes were made is called Palm Canyon, you say?"

"Yes. It is full of palm trees, and no one knows how they got there. We lost a number of monkeys and parrots while the scenes were being taken. One of these days the palm trees will be full of monkey and parrots."

"And no one will know how they got there."

"Except the readers of the Moving Picture World."

Before the representative of that repository of exclusive information could frame a suitable reply, the interviewee shifted the location from California to Washington, but continued her remarks on snakes:

"Speaking of snakes, there was one member of the tribe that made me register sudden and honest-to-goodness surprise and terror. It was at Seattle, Wash. Being a dry state and in a state of dryness I entered a restaurant with a party of friends, after one of my speeches during my recruiting tour through the Northwest this summer, and ordered a lemonade. While I was sipping it I happened to glance at a small palm near my elbow and there was a little green snake, hanging over the side of the pot."

"Was this after your fourth or your fifth lemonade?"

"It was during my first."

"They must make them strong in Seattle. What did you do, after registering fright?"

Prohibition Didn't Kill Snakes.

"Following the regular business of the scene, by demanding of the entire party if they all saw the same thing I did. Fortunately for my peace of mind and the reputation of the great state of Washington for the enforcement of its liquor laws they did. But what is the use of having liquor laws if they are unable to keep the snakes away?"

Before the representative of the M. P. W. could fully grasp the far-reaching and deplorable condition set before his mental vision Clara Kimball Young had changed her subject but not the location by calling his attention to some photographs which she picked up from the desk.

"Here I am, swearing in my first naval recruit. Fine looking chap, isn't he? This other picture shows a guard of honor consisting of sailors and yeomenettes. These girls wear a uniform, carry regular rifles and have been trained to use them like regular soldiers. My trip included Portland, Tacoma, Spokane and other cities in the Northwest, before coming to New York."

"When do you intend to return to California?"

New Play Is a War Story.

"The first of September. Work on my new picture will commence as soon as I arrive. It is called 'The Road Through the Dark,' and was written by Ethel Watts Mulford. I play a French girl who is supposed to be a German spy, but who in reality is spying for France. It is a war story, of course. I haven't played in one since my old Vitagraph days. . . . Excuse me, a moment."

The interview was interrupted while Clara Kimball Young discussed a business matter with her manager, Harry I. Garson. Her views were stated quickly and confidently. The artistic side of her nature has not prevented the actress from cultivating the practical things of life. When she was ready to resume the conversation it was the interviewer who changed the subject this time.

"How do you like the idea of taking down the barrier between the artist and the public, Miss Young, and coming in close contact with the men and women who have learned to know and admire you on the screen?"

"You mean by making speeches in public—I think it is an excellent thing from every point of view. The artist learns things that way. Quite a change, isn't it, from the Augustin Daly law. His actors, you know, were not allowed to walk on Broadway. If they wished to pass along that famous thoroughfare they were obliged to take a cab. That may have been good theatrical law in the old days. Moving picture stars can profit more by letting their admirers see them in the flesh and hear their voices. Besides, as I said before, we learn things from them. I'm a believer in the old hug-and-kiss finish, and so is the public."

"How did you find that out?"

"By asking my audiences whenever I got the chance."

Universal's President Bans Dreary Drama and Orders That Happiness Predominate

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal, has issued orders to producing executives of that company, decreeing that hereafter it shall make only films in which happiness predominates. He stipulated that there must be no more productions based exclusively on dreary drama, or stories with dismal elements. The order is ironclad, and will mean the doom, so far as Universal is concerned, of melancholy themes.

America's present state of mind is the foundation for Mr. Laemmle's decision. He reached it after long study of the reflexes in the spirit of theatre patrons produced by war conditions.

"The public faces too serious a reality in its everyday life," said the producer, "to be served with serious thoughts in its theatres. When people go to the theatre nowadays they want to get away from tragedy and trouble. They want to relax and forget their troubles."

The general order includes a ban on the element of sex appeal, also. This will remove the vampire character, who never had a very strong footing in the Universal program entirely from the productions of the company.

By natural effect, comedy films will gain much of the Universal's energies.

"Our chief aim must be," said Mr. Laemmle, "to send film patrons from our exhibitions with their minds refreshed and their hopes brightened. They come to us after a day of worry from scanning casualty lists and wondering how their loved ones are faring overseas. Our purpose will be to send the folks home contented and smiling.

"It is scant relief to them when a film is shown unfolding the tragic experiences of imagined characters."

Dramas built on the war subject are likely to suffer more severely than those which dip into the past. However, war films treating the news of America's part in the conflict and conveying necessary messages of public interest will be produced with free rein.

There is a distinction between the abhorrence of the public toward the hateful side of the war and its attitude toward news of what America is doing. The latter is a constructive subject. The scenes of army camp and airplane operations are looked upon as messages of hope, reflecting this nation's power and the certainty of its victory.

Hodkinson Explains the Selected Program

WHAT is the meaning of the selected program? What is the meaning of selective booking? Is a selected program the product of a producer whose conglomerate aggregation of stars has been selected regardless of their worth to the exhibitor? Does selective booking mean picking any brand of pictures? Does it mean picking certain stars of certain brands? Does it mean picking certain pictures of certain stars of certain brands?

According to W. W. Hodkinson, president of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, a selected program is a program selected by the distributor because of its value to the exhibitor, the product maintained at a high standard by the man between the distributor—for the benefit of both the producer and exhibitor.

"A selective booking," says Mr. Hodkinson, "is knowing the quality of pictures that please your patrons and answering their demands. You can overdose the public with everything but quality, and selective booking is stars and product of quality.

"Hodkinson Service is a selected program, thereby offering the exhibitor selective booking. It is designed to give the exhibitor faith in the ability of the Hodkinson Corporation to market only productions of a high quality with stars that can be exhibited at a profit.

"When the exhibitor books Hodkinson Service he is supporting an organization which is just as anxious as he is to maintain the highest quality service cosistent with the price he is asked to pay and which is qualified to accomplish the very thing the exhibitor, as an individual can only wish for and never hope to accomplish.

"Representing such product as Jesse D. Hampton productions, starring J. Warren Kerrigan; Lillian Walker productions, Paralta Plays, starring Bessie Barriscale and Louise Glaum; Plaza Pictures, starring Anita King and Kathleen Clifford, and the Douglass Natural Color Films, Hodkinson Service sets a standard that new product for future announcement will continue to maintain."

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, still in its first year, has already released eighteen pictures, and will release one a week, commencing with the Bessie Barriscale feature, "The White Lie," September 2, a Paralta play.

ED-AU MAN SELLS STORY.

Raymond C. Hill, of Brooklyn, has sold to World Pictures the picture rights to his melodramatic story, "The Far East." Mr. Hill, a number of years ago, was the secretary of the Ed-Au Club, which was the outgrowth of another famous organization of editors and authors called the Inquest Club. The purpose of this combination was to discuss the quality of material brought to their attention and to assist each other in preparing the material for the needs of photoplay producers.

The story of "The Far East" deals with the seventh assistant secretary of the American Embassy to China, and has to do with his trip to the Far East, where he goes to assume his duties. His experiences on the way with German spies, propagandists and other enemies of the United States furnish the groundwork for the picture.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Los Angeles Correspondent Personally Conducts Our Readers Through the West Coast Studios

By Giebler

LADIES and Gentlemen, the edifices perched like a diadem on the brow of yonder hill are the Vitagraph studios. You will note as we draw near the absence of trees in the immediate vicinity of this plant.

This condition is not accidental, but a premeditated sacrifice to art. A great many western pictures are made here, and as western atmosphere is so essential to the western picture it would be extremely foolish, after coming all the way from New York to obtain western atmosphere, to impede by the foliage of the palm, the pepper, the eucalyptus, or others of our justly celebrated shade trees, any of the western winds and zephyrs that whiffle in and about the buildings.

The little structure to the left is the office of W. S. Smith, the manager of the studio. Mr. Smith is one of the pioneer producers of the West, and has been at the head of the Vitagraph studios since their establishment on the West Coast.

The building across the path is the dressing room of Earle Williams, an actor who has gained much fame in the movies by a conscientious interpretation of hero parts.

We are allowed to enter Mr. Williams' dressing room for a brief inspection. Note the extreme—in fact we may well say the spartan—simplicity of the place, the utter absence of anything of a luxurious, voluptious or sumptious nature in the furnishings.

No Photograph-Covered Walls.

No rich rugs, no divans, no walls covered with photographs of admiring high school and other girls, such as those of you who have read the fervid fancies of people who exercise their hectic imagination in writing about the people of the screen would be led to expect.

The simple curtain to the right conceals and keeps from dust Mr. Williams' costumes. At the little table by the window he applies the makeup and other war paint of his calling.

We will now pass up to the large stage. The players in the set to the left are William Duncan and Edith Johnson. They are just finishing up a scene.

The small man with the glasses is James—usually known as Jimmie—Young, a true veteran of the films. Jimmie began making movies when the industry was in its mewling and puling infancy, and he is still at it.

Standing near the edge of the platform is Alfred Whitman. Al is not working here now, being employed at Universal City. He has just dropped in here for a friendly call.

The man seated in the chair near Al is Myles McCarthy, who, in addition to being a character actor of considerable renown, is an authority on that useful animal—the hog.

Mr. McCarthy knows hogs from pigs-feet to chittlins, and can tell you how many pork chops, hams, flitches of bacon, links of sausage and hunks of headcheese one hundred bushels of corn will yield when fed to one, ten, or any number of hogs.

The people getting into the automobile are Antonio Moreno, Carol Halloway and Director Hertz. They are starting out on location. The statuesque person near the edge of the stage to the right is Nell Shipman, and the lady walking off the stage is Hedda Nova, the Russian actress, who has just finished a serial and is now working on five-reel features.

The man standing near the shrubbery, wearing the riding boots, the riding crop, the smile and the wrist watch, is Earle Williams. Mr. Williams is working in a film with Grace Darmond as his leading lady called "On Special Duty." Tomorrow he will begin making a picture for the Government to be used in the Fourth Liberty Loan campaign, wherein he will play the part of Young America.

The group of players standing by the swimming pool and wishing they had the time to make a dip are all actors, with the exception of the heavy-set man with the glasses, who is Harry Haven, late of New York, and now right hand man to Director Jimmie Young. The others in the group are Frank Clark, William Marion and Edward Cecil.

Glendale Is Real Dry.

We shall now speed towards the salubrious suburb of Glendale, which is adjacent to but not a part and parcel of the city of Los Angeles.

Prohibitionally speaking, Glendale is one of the dryest of all the arid spots in this dry and dusty district. In spite of this fact, however, a number of movie studios are located here.

No, Lady, the man fighting the duel with the gate post on the lawn of the building we have just passed is not a movie actor, although his strange actions might lead you to suppose him such. The building is not a studio, but an institution for the treatment of those of our citizens who are non compos mentis, or have bats in their belfry.

We are now approaching the Golden West studios. This plant represents the comeback of that once popular player, G. M. Anderson, or Broncho Billy.

Mr. Anderson was one of the early pioneers of the film industry. He is said to have made a hatful of money in the movies, and after an extended absence he has come back to repeat the performance.

We are fortunate in being able to see a wild and woolly western in the making. The set built up here shows the exterior of a saloon, dance hall and gambling hell in one of the toughest towns in the West, and will be part of a play called "The Son of a Gun."

The man on horseback is Broncho Billy himself. He is playing the part of a wild and reckless citizen of those halcyon days of the West when every man packed a pistol and drank his liquor straight.

The young lady standing on the porch is Joy Lewis, the leading lady of the company. The chap near her is Paul Willis. Paul is quite some actor, and one of whom it is said we shall hear more as time and the movies march on into the future.

Percy Helps Out Jessie.

The man with the dark and scheming countenance is Fred Church, the villain of the piece. He is talking to Jessie J. Robbins, the director, and to the left of them is the assistant director, who rejoices in the euphonious and alliterative cognomen of Percy Pembroke.

The men on horseback with the ferocious demeanors and six shooters and bandanna handkerchiefs are not actors in the regular sense of the word but are cowboys and other western characters who have stopped punching cattle for the more lucrative work of the studios. The man on the horse to the right of the saloon is Wind River Bill, of much fame as a rider, roper and all around horseback athlete.

Yes, Lady, it was once a common practice for actors in the western pictures to be buttoned to their saddles with glove fasteners to keep them from falling overboard. Happily, however, that day has passed, along with the day of the Indian decorated with ostrich feathers and armed with musical comedy spears and battle axes.

To Broncho Billy is due much of the credit for these reforms, and in addition to this signal service he was the introducer of the leather cuffs and sheepskin pants—articles without which no movie cowboy is complete, and a costume that is said to have been taken up here and there by actual cowpunchers and other western characters when far enough from home to preclude their being recognized by any of their friends and acquaintances.

Director William Dowlan has completed for Triangle "The Atom," featuring the two well-known stars, Pauline Starke and Harry Mestayer. One of the big scenes in this photoplay is a set showing a fire and a panic in a theatre—a scene on which the whole plot of the story practically hinges. Several short flashes lead up to this one big feature scene and, in photographing one of these small sets—a bit showing a little group of people in the gallery, the instant the fire starts—Mr. Dowlan didn't get quite the kind of action he wanted, so he resorted to a trick which, while not new, had the desired effect. Just as he was "shooting" this scene a second time and had shouted "action," an assistant, concealed behind one of the Cooper-Hewitt lights, fired two shots from a large army revolver and the "extras"—who were the people in the gallery—thinking one of the smoke-pots had exploded, jumped from their seats in great disorder and rushed for the exits in a real panic. The picture was then taken.

Theda Bara Finishes "The She Devil."

A telegram received by the Fox corporation from the William Fox studios at Hollywood states that Theda Bara has completed photographing "The She-Devil," the production which tells the story of a woman without a conscience. "The She-Devil" was directed by J. Gordon Edwards, this being the twenty-eighth picture which Mr. Edwards has made for William Fox.

In "The She-Devil" Miss Bara portrays the role of a Spanish girl, the reigning belle of the mountain town where she lives. The picture is said to be somewhat different from those Miss Bara has made recently, and affords her splendid opportunities.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By A. H. GIEBLER

"Great Love" Gets Warm Welcome.

"THE GREAT LOVE," D. W. Griffith's first Artcraft picture, was given its initial showing in Los Angeles at a matinee performance on August 12 at Clune's Auditorium. A large and enthusiastic audience saw the afternoon show, but one of the biggest crowds ever assembled—a crowd that included almost every one of any importance in the film colony—attended the night performance.

There was no ceremony, speeches or personal appearances. The film was presented simply as one of a series of pictures that Griffith is making for Artcraft.

The picture was received with the greatest evidences of favor by the audience, and has been playing to capacity houses ever since the opening performance.

Anderson Company on Way East.

An automobile containing one camping outfit with paraphernalia sufficient for the needs of seven people, one typewriter, Broncho Billy Anderson, Director Jesse J. Robbins, Assistant Director Percy Pembroke, Villain Fred Church, Character Men Thomas Kelly and Joseph Flynn, and Press Agent Ford Beebe is somewhere east of Los Angeles headed for New York, which place every member of the party hopes to reach, barring blowouts and breakdowns, in three weeks from the date of departure, August 6.

As soon as the Anderson company finished its last picture, "The Son of a Gun," G. M. Anderson found it necessary to go back East on business, and in order to keep production going it was decided to take the more important members of the company to New York and stage a picture there. The party will not play the hotels, but will depend on their own ability to cook up the "chow" on the road.

Kerrigan Leases Studio.

The Willis and Inglis studio and a plot of ground adjoining in Hollywood has been leased by Jesse D. Hampton, president and manager of the J. Twenty-Five the Right Age.

Lee Ryan, who has been appointed by the Theatre Owners' Association of Southern California to train women in the methods of operating moving picture projection machines to take the places of men operators who have gone to war, says that several motion picture houses in Los Angeles are already dark on account of the scarcity of men operators, and unless the girls "get in and learn the business the pictures are going to stop moving, that's all."

"Twenty-five is the right age," says Ryan. "From that on to forty. At eighteen they are apt to get married. That's bad for the business. And between the ages of eighteen and twenty-five there's danger of them stepping out to the beaches."

According to Ryan, a hundred operators are needed in Los Angeles immediately, and several hundred for various points in southern California.

Theatre Balcony Given Extraordinary Test.

An unusual test was given to the balcony of the new theatre being erected at Eighth and Main streets by the Miller Amusement Company. The test was for the purpose of determining the safety of the balcony, which is being constructed upon what is known as the cantilever system. Eighteen thousand sacks of cement, eaching weighing one hundred pounds, or a total of 1,800,000 pounds, were placed in the balcony for this demonstration.

Little Thrills of the Week

OUT of a total of forty-five people pinched for violating the speed and traffic law the past week only three were movie players. This fact causes us to point with pride, thrill with exultation and other feelings of a gratifying nature. And furthermore, out of the three, only one was cited for going too fast. The other two were haled before the bar of justice for not going at all.

Mary MacLaren stepped on something in her car out on Cahuenga avenue in Hollywood, and a cop stepped out in the street and gave her the high sign—and Mary put up ten bones and promised to be in court bright and early the next morn. The other malefactors were Edna Purviance and Franklyn Farnum, each of whom parked their cars too long in the downtown district.

Because of the fact that it seems impossible to get anything like accurate information as to whether Constance Talmadge and Norman Kerry are really married we have decided to say nothing at all about the rumor.

Bessie Barriscale bragged about her star Jap cook last week, and immediately Elliott Dexter comes forward with stories about one Tassa, nicknamed "The Admirable" because of his great skill as pancake, flapjack and waffle maker.

The secret is out. That is, part of it is out. Sessue Hayakawa says "Sessue" is pronounced Sess-you, and means successful fisherman. We hope to give the pronunciation and meaning of the other half of the name next week.

A Mrs. M. P. Mitchell has filed a complaint with the Public Welfare committee alleging that certain films shown in Los Angeles are vicious and not fit to be seen by children; and because she did not state any specific film, the City Council, with whom the complaint was filed, can take no action. Will the producer who makes this kind of films please come forward and acknowledge the corn, so that action may go on?

Jap Sailors as Honor Guests.

The Royal Victoria theatre of Victoria, B. C., recently enjoyed the distinction of conducting a unique event. For three nights it was used for the entertainment of four hundred members of the crew of the Japanese warship "Kirishama" as guests of the British Columbia Government.

Manager Denham secured a number of cartoon comedies and other pictures which he felt would be easily understood by the Far Easterners. The tiny warriors marched from their ship each evening and lined up in font of the theatre for inspection before entering. The flags of the Allies were displayed on the screen while the orchestra played the National Anthems of Great Britain and Japan.

Each one of the sailors was presented with a souvenir card of welcome from the City of Victoria. These cards bear photographic reproductions of the British Columbia Parliament Buildings and other Victoria places of interest.

America's First Woman Exchange Manager Runs Over to Chicago from Kansas City

THE Chicago office had the unique pleasure Saturday, August 17, of being entertained for about ten minutes by W. E. Arthur, at present on the sales force of A. D. Flintom, manager of Paramount's Kansas City's office, who spent several days in the big city getting familiar with the methods of doing business in exchanges here—Paramount's office, of course, being headquarters.

Now if this were all the word "unique" as applied to the pleasure would be out of place. But it is not all. Though the card handed me bore the name, W. E. Arthur, the visitor was a young woman, with a manner just as breezy as the Chicago climate and just as pleasant as Chicago's best.

It took only a few moments to learn that the fair visitor was Mrs. W. E. Arthur, and that the sex prefix had been suppressed as a non-essential, seeing that W. E. Arthur is doing a man's work, and has been doing it in the film business for over six years.

But even this explanation does not entitle me to the use of the word "unique." Suffice it to say that I use it because W. E. Arthur bears the particular honor of being the first woman exchange manager in America. She was manager of the Oklahoma office of the Yale Photoplay Company for over a year. That was about six years ago, when the company was controlled (it is still, I understand) by A. D. Flintom, and he can vouch for the accuracy of W. E. Arthur's claim. If any other fair claimant can dispute the title then let her do so now, or forever after hold her peace.

Mrs. Arthur came on to the city from her home in Cleveland, where she had been spending her vacation for several weeks, and she left for Kansas City Monday. She spoke in high praise and appreciation of the cordial reception given her in Chicago by the trade. She told me that she had been received everywhere "with real Western courtesy and hospitality," and that compliment to Chicago means something, coming as it does from a wide-awake woman who has traveled for six years through Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma in the interests of the film business.

The trade of Chicago respectfully bows its acknowledgement, Mrs. Arthur!

Government to Hold Exposition.

The United States Government War Exposition, which will be held in Grant Park from September 2 to 15, promises to be one of the greatest big shows Chicago has ever held within her boundaries. As one traverses Michigan avenue just now the eye is caught by immense rows of buildings stretching for hundreds of yards in Grant Park parallel to the great highway. They have sprung up almost within a night, and hundreds of workmen are busy preparing all the other accessories of the most unique and remarkable show yet seen in America.

One of the real, thrilling spectacles will be the actual replica of part of a battle fought by our boys on the Western front. The real battle line will be duplicated exactly, with "No Man's Land" and the barbed wire entanglements separating our trenches from it. Then relics from hard fought battlefields of every possible description will be on view in the building. Besides, at nights, official British, French, Italian and American war pictures made by the army and navy of each country will be exhibited in several of the great buildings. Joseph Hopp has been appointed to take charge of everything in connection with the showing of these pictures by H. P. Harrison, chairman of the program committee. As many as half a dozen screens will be in use at the same time.

The grounds will accommodate 75,000 people, and everyone of that number will be able to view the realistic war scenes to advantage.

Geraldine Farrar Returns from Cody.

Geraldine Farrar, accompanied by Reginald Barker, Milton Sills, Tom Santschi, and a company of twenty, passed through Chicago Tuesday, August 20, from Wyoming, where they have been engaged in the production of Miss Farrar's second Goldwyn picture, "The Hell Cat."

The last day was spent at Valley Ranch, where the final scenes of the picture were taken, and Miss Farrar considered this work the most strenuous task she has yet experienced in her photoplay career. Seeing that all the railway reservations for the return trip had been made it was highly imperative that the production should be finished the day preceding. The sun, however, was so uncertain owing to the cloudy sky that Miss Farrar, Reginald Barker, and Percy Hilburn, the cameraman, were obliged to dash from point to point in order to catch the shifting sunlight. This was rendered all the more difficult because of the thick sage brush which had to be traversed and the rocky streams that must be forded.

It goes without saying that the entire company was pretty well exhausted when they began the four-hour automobile return trip to Cody. Then, in addition, the packing of all the company's effects had to be done, and this added to the hustle and bustle record to get away in time. The special which bore them eastward left Cody Sunday morning, August 18, and arrived in Chicago Tuesday. Miss Farrar and her party stopped over for an hour in Chicago before leaving for New York on the 20th Century.

Miss Farrar was enthusiastic over her role in "The Hell Cat." She pronounces it entirely unlike any which she has hitherto attempted. Besides, the story is powerful and the picturesque scenes taken in Wyoming serve to heighten the beauty of the production.

American's Selling System a Success.

R. R. Nehls, general manager of the American Film Company, is enthusiastic over the success of the "direct" selling system recently inaugurated by his company. He states that actual figures in his possession prove that the new system is an ideal one.

Mr. Nehls is now receiving daily reports from American representatives at different points which show that contracts at many points in the territory have already been closed, and that the sales are increasing daily for the Minter, Russell and Fisher features. The complete series is comprised of eight five-reel pictures for each of the stars mentioned.

"The Eyes of Julia Deep" is the first of the Mary Miles Minter series, and from all accounts it is likely to prove one of her very best, and better in some respects than some of her former pictures.

"Hobb's in a Hurry" is the first of the Russell series under the new system. Mr. Nehls believes that this is the first man story of the athletic type yet produced where one is impressed that the story has not been written merely to justify the feats of the player, but one is impressed that the feats come in a natural way as adjuncts of the story. The first of Marguerita Fisher series is described as a different picture, serious and whimsical, but never silly.

Committee Favors Amalgamation.

An informal meeting of the executive committee of the M. P. E. L. of A. was held at headquarters, this city, Tuesday, August 20, President Schaefer presiding. Great harmony prevailed during the deliberations on the question of the amalgamation of the league and the A. E. A., Mr. Schaefer told me. It is the intention to have several meetings devoted to the same matter before the final meeting, which will be held Labor Day. Great efforts are being made by members of the league generally to bring about harmony between the rival organizations, and President Schaefer is very sanguine over the final result.

Hopp Starts Work.

Joseph Hopp, Chicago representative of the American Film Company, took up his work in temporary headquarters assigned him in the Pathe's Chicago office Monday, August 19. He informed me that his first contract was signed by Claude E. Elliott for the De Luxe Theater, Wilson avenue, near Broadway, on the first day. Mr. Elliott is one of the shrewdest and keenest film men in the city, and has charge of the booking of programs for the De Luxe and other important theatres. The De Luxe contract is for a three days' run each for the Mary Miles Minter and the Russell productions, the contract covering the entire first year.

H. E. Belford, who has had long experience in an executive capacity and as salesman in Chicago and tributary territory, has been appointed by Mr. Hopp as his chief assistant. The American Film Company productions will be shown to all interested exhibitors in Pathe's projection room in the Consumers' Building.

Lloyd Comedies Popular in Chicago.

H. E. Roach, producer of the Harry Lloyd comedies at the Rollin studios, Los Angeles, just managed to make connection with the train on his way to New York, Wednesday, August 21. The train from the West was several hours late. Manager Rogers, of the Pathe office, this city, tells me that the Lloyd comedies are popular in his territory.

Belgian Film Aids Milk Fund.

"Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief," the official Belgian war picture shown at the Auditorium last spring by the Women's Committee of the National Council of Defense, will be used in a coming campaign the purpose of which is to raise $100,000 for Cardinal Mercier's milk fund. The feature will be shown in this instance at Steinway Hall for one week beginning September 2. Father John DeVille, a Belgian clergyman, of Chicago, who was sent to the city on a special mission by the Belgian cardinal, will deliver a lecture at every presentation.

"A Hoosier Romance" Popular.

"A Hoosier Romance" showed to excellent business during its first week's presentation in Chicago at the Ziegfeld Theatre. The city press had many complimentary things to say about it. The following excerpt is taken from Kitty Kelly's review in the Herald-Examiner:

"Much after the pattern of Griffith it is, with Colleen Moore as the bullied daughter of Farmer Thompson, seen constantly, "close-up," welling tears, quivering lips, stricken fawn eyes, quite in the way of la Gish, with quaint children naturally posed, with artistically lighted love scenes in peach blossom settings, civil war costumes, lingering fade-outs of sentiment, twelve-foot studies in expression, the whole thing sweet and sad."

James H. Seevers Joins Colors.

E. W. Penrod, manager of Universal's Indianapolis office, advises me that another member of his working staff has joined the colors. James H. Seevers is his name, and his address is now Regiment 9. Company 499, Camp Farragut, Great Lakes, Ill.

Fine Programs for the Orpheum.

Aaron J. Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, during his recent visit to New York closed contracts for exclusive first run showings for all Famous Players-Lasky and Artcraft pictures for the Orpheum, and also for Goldwyn and Vitagraph feature pictures. The Orpheum announces an interesting bill for the week beginning August 25, including "By Hook or Crook," with Carlyle Blackwell; "The Marriage Ring" (Paramount), with Enid Bennett, and "The Turn of the Wheel" (Goldwyn), featuring Geraldine Farrar.

See "Behind the Lines in Italy."

"Behind the Lines in Italy" has been shown to appreciative gatherings during the first week of its run at The Playhouse, this city. The original length has been cut to 6,000 feet, with the result that the spectator is given the most condensed view possible of the remarkable war activities of our Italian ally.

The first view of these pictures is marked by a continuous series of surprises, because the average American is wholly ignorant of the mighty efforts put forth by Italy to win the war. If the pictures succeeded in establishing this fact alone they would be well worth while; but they accomplish a great deal more.

One can scarcely believe one's eyes when he sees countless workmen engaged in war industries of every kind. We are astonished to find that Italy came near being the mother of the fighting aeroplane. These are of many types, from the swift-flying, light-engine fighter to the monster Caproni machine.

The great factories in which these war industries are carried on convince us that America, Britain and France are not the only countries conducting war activities on a gigantic scale.

Every man and woman and every boy and girl of intelligence in America should see these pictures—not to be amused or entertained, but to learn many important and interesting things which every American should know.

The picture is being distributed by the George Kleine System.

"Triple Trouble" Has Big Demand.

Manager Whelan, of the Chicago office of the George Kleine system, informs me that bookings of "The Unchastened Woman" are very heavy and that he is working 16 prints of Charlie Chaplin in "Triple Trouble" in the city and tributary territory. Many of the high class houses have booked it, including ten houses on the circuit of Lubliner and Trinz.

Hamm Obeys Orders "Work or Fight."

William Hamm, who has had charge of the booking department of the George Kleine System for some time past, recently decided to follow the Provost Marshal's orders to "work or fight." He will soon begin work for the Government by working on Liberty Motors.

To Be or Not to Be? Is the Question.

The managers of two picture theatres in South Oak Park were recently arrested for showing pictures which had not been censored. They said in defense that they could not afford to pay the two dollars a day per theatre which the suburb has fixed for censorship. The patrons of the houses fearing that they would lose the only entertainment they have, appealed to the trustees. The vote of the latter was a tie, and the president refused to cast the deciding vote, so the end has not yet come.

"Crashing Through" at Auditorium.

"Crashing Through to Berlin," Universal's latest war picture, will be shown at the Auditorium for the week beginning Sunday, September 1. The producing company has aimed at making the picture a chronological record of the war from its outbreak in 1914 to the present time. The presentation at the Auditorium will be continuous, from 11 a. m. until midnight.

The picture has been running at the Broadway Theatre, New York, for three weeks with great success, it is said. The week at the Auditorium has been well timed, as the city will be crowded with visitors from the Middle West, eager to see the big War Exposition in Grant Park, on the lake front.

GRIFFITH FILMS CONGRESS IN SESSION

Producer Engaged on American Propaganda Subject for Government—Foreshadows Big Picture

FOR the first time in the history of the House of Representatives a motion picture of that body in action was secured Saturday afternoon, August 24, by David Wark Griffith, producer of "Hearts of the World" and other big spectacles. Mr. Griffith was granted special congressional permission to set up his cameras in the interior of the House and secure scenes during the activities in connection with the selective draft amendment. Tests were made following the taking of the pictures, and from all accounts both the lighting and the general photography were unusually striking.

Mr. Griffith will use these scenes for a special American propaganda production on which he is at present working for the United States Government. This announcement will not come as a surprise to the many who have followed the work of this producer in recent months, and, while no definite plans are as yet to be made public, it seems extremely probable that in a few months at least the American public will be treated to another big Griffith master work, of which "The Birth of a Nation" and "Hearts of the World" are now the forerunners.

Mr. Griffith has been commandeered, it is said, by the War Department. He is desired for the supervision of a series of important propaganda pictures setting forth the position of the United States before allied and neutral countries. His "Hearts of the World," now passed its 300th performance in New York City, was made under the auspices of the British and French war officers, and with the co-operation of David Lloyd George and other officials. Griffith's unusual ability to secure actual battle scenes and to interpolate them into a romantic and highly dramatic story has made him the most valuable of war producers, and there is every reason to expect something notable in the near future.

Allan Rock, well known in New York as a film publicity man, has been appointed to supervise the publicity of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, a position lately held by E. Lanning Masters, who is no longer in the employ of that concern.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

ADVANCE ON CHICAGO FOR CONVENTION

Exhibitors, Producers and Distributors Will Assemble at "Get Together" Meeting at Hotel Sherman, September 2 to 7

BE IT said in Chicago's favor that the old town has never "pulled a flivver" in the line of motion picture conventions, and it is declared by those who have in charge the meeting scheduled for September 3 to 7, at the Hotel Sherman, that all records for attendance will be broken if advance interest may be taken as any criterion. Frank Rembusch and Louis Frank have been tireless in their efforts, and declare that responses already received from prominent exhibitors indicates that every section of the country will be represented.

"There never has been a meeting where producers and distributors could talk over problems with the exhibitor," says Mr. Rembusch in an announcement delivered to the trade press. "Political meetings have been many, but this time the exhibitor and producer are to be brought together in a new and great opportunity for mutual understandings." Chairman Frank and Secretary Rembusch have announced a tentative program that incorporates discussions of many topics vital to the industry from every point of view.

"Everybody" Will Be There.

The most prominent names among exhibitors and producers are expected to be registered at the convention, and Secretary Rembusch, anticipating a rush for accomodations, urges prospective visitors to make reservations at the hotel they prefer to patronize—although it is logical to presume that most of the delegates will center at the Sherman House, where meetings will be held, starting with registrations at the convention Monday morning, September 2.

The program has been arranged to cover activities morning and afternoons, with entertainments in the evening throughout the week. It will be a genuine old-fashioned "get together" meeting of showmen and producers. Some of the questions to be taken up will be "To Help Win the War," "Equitable Taxation," "The Future of the Business," "More Efficiency and Economy," "Censorship and Adverse Legislation," and all problems that concern the industry as a whole. At the same time each one will be allowed to discuss his individual work.

Rembusch and Frank in Town.

Frank J. Rembusch, secretary of the American Exhibitors' Association, and Louis H. Frank, chairman of the convention committee, were in New York City for a few days during the week of August 19 to 24, stirring up interest in the Chicago meeting which is to take place September 3 to 7. They found that there would be a large New York delegation present, among whom many of the large producers would be numbered. On the question of amalgamation Mr. Rembusch said that invitations had been sent to all the leading members of the National League and he hoped that they would attend the A. E. A. meeting for the purpose of discussing that question.

HOW SERVICE STARS BOOST BUSINESS

Minneapolis Manager Devises Novel Method of Advertising Patriotic Drama Through Daily Newspaper Drive

THE STRAND THEATRE, Minneapolis, and the Minneapolis Daily News staged a unique and patriotic competition to advertise Madge Kennedy in her Goldwyn drama, "The Service Star." The idea was conceived by Charles Branham, manager of the Strand, and so timely and unusual was the plan that the Daily News at once consented to promote the novelty under its own name.

Announcement of the affair had as its caption: The Daily News Wants to Know How Many Stare are in Your Service Flag? This was followed by an explanation, together with the rules and regulations. Complete text of the announcement follows:

"The Daily News wants to know the number of stars in your service flag, and to the mother or father or widow having the most stars in the flags it will give two season complimentary tickets to the Strand Theatre. The competition is not limited to the sons in the service. Brothers, cousins, nephews, uncles, and other relatives, may be included, provided there is a star on the flag for each one in the service. Send your answer to the Service Star Editor, care of the Daily News, giving the name and home address of each man represented on your flag. Winners will be announced in the Daily News and during the performances of "The Service Star," which is shown all week at the Strand Theatre."

It will be noted that the competition was linked solidly with the Strand Theatre and its showing of Madge Kennedy in "The Service Star." The newspaper's announcement and explanations carried a "between the lines" hint for entrants to visit the Strand and see "The Service Star," and Manager Branham's report of business during the week's engagement of the production proves the effectiveness of the campaign.

The event created enthusiasm and no little friendly rivalry among the families of Minneapolis, and everyone having a star or stars on their service flags put in a claim for the complimentary tickets to the Strand. Manager Branham announced the competition by means of slides on his screen and, in addition, posted hand-lettered signs in his lobby announcing that the names would be made known during the performances of "The Service Star."

Ignores Law and Loses Theatre.

The Ontario government carried out a long-promised threat on August 20, when the Provincial license for the Windsor Theatre, Toronto, was canceled for all time and the owner of the theatre, Percy A. Beatty, was fined $10 and costs for offenses under the amusements tax act of Ontario. The exhibitor pleaded guilty to having failed to collect the amusement tax, neglected to use a ticket chopper as required by the law, and failed to make a return to the Solicitor of the Treasury regarding admissions and daily attendance.

A representative of the Provincial Treasurer declared in court it was simply a case of where the amusements tax act had not been put into operation at all, and the few war tax tickets that the accused had secured had been sold and resold many times. In view of the cancellation of the man's theatre license Magistrate Cohen imposed the minimum fine of $10 on one charge and remanded Beatty for sentence on the two other charges. The future of the Windsor Theatre is problematical.

Canada Checks Up Ticket Tax.

Montreal moving picture exhibitors are much worried over the receipt of a questionnaire which they have received from the Quebec Provincial Government, and in which they are asked for details of the number and prices of admission and war tax tickets sold by them. It is believed that the Government is working to find a basis for further or increased taxation, and they feel that they are already carrying a weighty load which comes very close to imperiling their business.

Albert H. Beaulne, secretary of the Canadian Motion Picture Association, of which H. W. Conover, manager of the Imperial Theatre, Montreal, is the president, called a meeting of the association's executive to discuss the situation and to consider the holding of a general meeting of local exhibitors for a definite stand in the matter.

"Lone Star" Week Proves Popular.

R. C. Steuve, of Youngstown, Ohio, manager of the Orpheum Theatre, recently tried out the wisdom of running a big star for a week, showing him in a different picture each day. Steuve's first revue was with Douglas Fairbanks. The result was so tremendously satisfactory that he has arranged with Paramount to run all of their stars under the same policy.

Novel "Stunt" Gains Applause.

Manager Roland Roberts, of the Regent Theatre, Toronto, put over a neat stunt to advertise a coming attraction, "To Hell with the Kaiser," which will be presented at the Regent during the week of September 2. In making his selections from the news weeklies for the program of the week of August 19, Mr. Roberts spied a scene in a Pathe Weekly which showed the soldiers of a western camp in the U. S. A. forming the words, "To Hell with the Kaiser." He immediately made use of it as a trailer, followed by the announcement that the picture would be shown at the theatre. The stunt actually brought applause every time.

Putting "Pep" into Screen Showings.

Our Portland (Ore.) correspondent reports an interesting experiment, followed by excellent results, in presenting to an audience in novel manner the "showmanship" involving a clever novelty. He says:

"The Liberty" is playing Enid Bennett in "The Biggest Show on Earth." They open with all house lights up. A big drop and side pieces like the side show of a circus, showing pictures of the Bearded Lady, Bosco, etc., you all know. The speller is in his box and gets off the regular dope. As he speaks of each attraction the spot lights it up. Jack Walker, known to the "profesh" for years as "Happy," is the spokesman. The stunt took well and got everyone in the right frame to enjoy the picture. Appropriate music during the spell added greatly to its merit. At the end an escaped papier mache lion suddenly appears in front of the drop and the speiler jumps down into the auditorium.

This house also makes its own one-sheets. They pose some of the employes in a tableau to represent the motif of the play, photograph it and make enlargements the size of a one-sheet frame, in which they display it. These stunts are the ideas of Ed Myrick, the manager.

Baltimore Exhibitor Joins Aviators.

J. Louis Rome, who was unanimously elected second vice president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America at the recent convention in Boston, and who is well known in film circles of Baltimore, has joined the aviation corps. He is attending the aviation school just outside of Washington, it is said. He enlisted about two weeks ago.

For several years Mr. Rome has been very actively engaged in film circles of Baltimore. He is manager of the Broadway Theatre and the Baltimore Theatre, and it is understood that he still attends to the booking. When the present Maryland Exhibitors' League was formed about two years ago Mr. Rome was selected to act as its counsel.

He was one of the original company of men who reconstructed the present Broadway Theatre from the old theatre which had been burned. He has a host of friends in Baltimore and elsewhere who will all wish good luck to him in his new undertaking.

Ray Deary Gains Promotion.

Like many other enterprising exhibitors the Manchester (N. H.) Amusement Company, embracing L. A. Rhodenizer and W. T. Howley, issues a herald in the interest of their theatre. We find this interesting item in a recent issue of Star-Light, incorporating an announcement that pays tribute to appreciated service:

"Ray Deary, formerly assistant manager of the Star Theatre, has returned from a much-needed vacation and during the past week has been full of pep and ginger to such an extent that we hereby appoint him 'Manager,' leaving off the word 'assistant.' This has been done with considerable forethought and we can't see any place we can lose. The two jobs will pay the same unless he is able to earn more. This is the first notlfication we have given him, for we want to see if he has enough interest in the business to glance over Star-Light occasionally."

Ideas on "Stunts" Are Solicited.

Readers of the World are invited to send us descriptions of "stunts" or any showmanship ideas they may invent and put into successful operation in theatre management. An idea that will attract business in one town is likely to "repeat" in another. Send us your ideas; we will print them and they will help showmen in other towns to get the money. In this exchange of schemes, stunts and ideas every exhibitor who reads the World will benefit.

BOSTON FILM MEN HOLD JOLLY OUTING

Jamboree at Hull Ends in Love Feast with Ernest H. Horstmann Popular Hero of the Occasion

An outing at Pemberton Inn, Hull, was given to the exhibitors and exchangemen of Boston, Tuesday, August 13, by Samuel V. Grand, manager of the Boston exchange of the Foursquare Pictures Corporation; Bert Cornell, manager of the Franklin Park Theatre, and Charles Ross, manager of the Lancaster Theatre, both of Boston.

The party left Rowe's Wharf on the ten-fifteen boat and landed at Pemberton after a pleasant .hour sail. They soon started things going, for all were out to have a good time. The usual baseball game between the exhibitors and exchangemen was soon in progress, with Stanley Sumner of the Fenway Theatre pitching for the exhibitors and Sam. Moscow of the Boston Photoplay for the exchangemen. Bert Cornell was the catcher for the exhibitors and Walter Camp was catcher for the exchangemen. The line-up was, exhibitors: Catcher, Cornell; pitcher, Sumner; first base, Pinaski; second base, Daniels; third base, Montague; shortstop, Daveling; right field, Wasserman; left field, Jacobs; center field, Seririo. Exchangemen: Pitcher, Moscow; catcher, Camp; first base, Harris; second base, Fecke; third base, Bassett; shortstop, Whiteley; right field, Clarke; left field, Campbell; center field, Brand. The game was won by the exhibitors with a score of 7 to 6.

Other sports followed. The fat man's race was won by Bob Clarke of the George Kleine System. Three-legged race won by Harry Campbell of the Fox, and McQuestin, an exhibitor. Hundred-yard dash won by Stanley Sumner of the Fenway Theatre. The rest of the day was passed in the swimming pool and in various other games.

At four-thirty dinner was served in the private dining room and there they dined and listened to an excellent musical program until seven.

Ernest H. Horstmann was the toastmaster of the evening. He first proposed a toast to the nation's head, Woodrow Wilson, which was followed by a round of applause. They drank a toast to Acting-Mayor Walter Collins of Boston, and the room soon rang with cries of speech.

He said: "Friends and members of the league, this toast was so sudden that I can hardly respond to it, but I do not wish to have anyone take me for the real mayor of Boston, as I am only taking the position for a short period; I really think that my name ought to have been Finnigin, as I am always on again and off again.

Says a Good Word for Casey.

"But I would like to call your attention to one man that is present at this dinner. One who has done a great deal for the city of Boston in the way of censoring pictures. He is always on the job and gives every one a square deal, and that man is John Casey, picture censor of Boston. Another man is John Mahoney, building inspector of Boston, who interprets the law, sees that the theatres are in condition to show pictures, and he is one of the real men behind the gun."

Harry Campbell, manager of the local Fox exchange, said: "Horstmann was a good sport and a good loser, and in behalf of the exhibitors and exchangemen I wish to present this leather bag as a token of our appreciation of the good work that he has done in the past." (Applause.) There were cries of speech from Hortsmann. He said in part:

"Gentlemen, I thank you. I admit I was a good loser. As for the reason I entered that contest you can draw your own conclusions. On the morning of the election I knew that the fight was between Schafer and myself. Schafer was a bigger man than I, and I decided to withdraw, but I only ran at Schafer's request. Now it is up to us to get together. I don't care if I did lose. Defeat is not disgrace, and I am now ready to do my best to help the industry, and I appreclatc the gift very much."

"I am ready and willing to work for the industry as long as possible, and we must get behind Schafer and work to do this. We must attend all the meetings and put the organization on a higher basis. In traveling over the country as the national league secretary I came across no town or city where pictures are shown any better than they are in Massachusetts and Rhode Island."

Stanley Sumner of the Fenway Theatre took the floor and said: "We all know that Horstmann has done more for the league than any ten men. There is one man who has done a great deal and that is Bert Cornell, secretary of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island branch of the league. It was he who ran the Movie Ball and put it over in spite of great opposition."

Cornell Catches a Wrist Watch.

Sumner then presented Cornell with a wrist watch, a token from his personal friends of the league. Bert Cornell was then called upon for a speech, but said that he was wholly unprepared and could only thank them for the gift.

Other speakers were Sargeant Gamble, picture censor of the State of Rhode Island, and Chief Plunkett of the State Police.

At seven o'clock the dinner was over and the party started back.

Those at the outing were: Acting Mayor of Boston Walter I. Collins, Picture Censor John Casey, Chief Plunkett of the Massachusetts State Police, Building Commissioner John Mahoney, Sergeant Gamble of Rhode Island; Charles Bean, president of the New Hampshire Branch of the Exhibitors' League, Rich C. Miller, of Poll's Circuit; Samuel Grand, of Foursquare Pictures; Bert Cornell, of the Franklin Park Theatre; Charles H. Ross, of the Lancaster Theatre; Bob Clark, of the George Kleine System; Harry Campbell, of Fox; Herman Rifkin, of the Eastern Feature Film; Harry Asher, Joseph and John MacConville, all of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Stanley Sumner, of the Fenway Theatre; Samuel Pinaski, of the Modern Theatre; Charles Harris, of the Boston Theatre; Dave Selznick, of Select; Joseph Rogers, of Select; Harry Segal and Bob Cobe, of Metro; Stanley Hand, of Pathe; James Mullen, of Universal; Sam Moscow, of Boston Photoplay; Samuel Grant, of Boston; George Fecke, of World; Frank Saulman, of Vitagraph; Jim Murphy, of Boston Photoplay; Harry Wasserman, of Boston; Thomas Sererio, of the Park Theatre; Louis Boas, of Fall River; Frank Daniels, of Lynn; E. R. Gregory, of Dorchester; Glover Weare, of Beverly; Edward Farrell, of the William L. Sherry Service; Jacob Wasserman, of Boston; P. Lydon, of South Boston; Frank Howard, of Boston; Frank Jones, of the Codman Square Theatre; R. D. Marston, of Boston, and many others. HOWE.

Dayton Exhibitor Enters Politics.

D. H. Thompson, manager and owner of the Mus-us Theatre, Dayton, and who has been president of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League for some time, is one of the first motion picture men in Ohio territory to see that action is better than words in bringing about political reform in regards to the film houses. He is a candidate for member of the Republican Central Committee of Montgomery County. Mr. Thompson has made many friends while president of the local league and is being backed by all of the local exhibitors as well as the League. It will be in this way that motion pictures will be helped, for without political representation motion picture men are considered helpless.

HERE'S A REAL SELLING CAMPAIGN

The Moving Picture World Presents the First Behind-the-Scenes Glimpse of a Real Campaign by a Real Campaigner That Will Interest Other Than Pathe Employes

PROBABLY there is no better known film salesman than Tom North. It is probable that it would be safe to leave out the "known," for that matter, for what Tom North has done most readers of the Moving Picture World already know. As head of the Seattle V-L-S-E office, with the aid of Dan Donellan, he launched a campaign that did more to get that section of the country advertising picture theatres than most exchange managers would have believed possible. Now he is back there for Pathe, and he is making things hum as Western District Manager.

Lately Mr. North inaugurated a campaign for more business and provided a handsome loving cup as a trophy. By arrangement we will reprint his selling letters and give an intimate impression of how he conducts his campaign. This is the first effort on the part of a trade paper to do more than mention such a campaign and we feel it will interest deeply other exchange managers and be of almost equal interest to our exhibitor readers as showing how the salesmen are kept tuned up to their high pitch. The exhibitors know that film salesmen are aggressive. It will interest them now to know that the Man Higher Up is on their tail just as closely as they follow the eventual patron.

The contest, as is explained in the letter reproduced here, is of indefinite duration, for the cup will pass from office to office as the contest runs. The month of April has been taken as a standard because in that month the Pathe salesmen broke all company records in their effort to go over the top in a campaign dedicated to the then new Vice President and General Manager Brunet. The western division consists of W. A. Calkins, Salt Lake; E. O. Childs, San Francisco; Ward E. Scott, Denver; L. O. Lukan, Seattle; F. D. Tate, Los Angeles, and P. D. Carroll, Spokane.

In the first letter Mr. North outlines the campaign plan as follows:

Dear Mr. ————:

The writer has been approached with the proposition several times since his arrival upon the coast, and that means a length of eight days up to this writing, and the proposition is that he make the month of August the competitive month for the branches under his jurisdiction, namely: Salt Lake, Denver, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle and Spokane, and that the office which exceeds the business of last April by the largest amount will receive a suitably engraved silver loving cup, and said cup to be competed for, under same conditions, during the month of September and also succeeding months, and the contest to be brought to a close when the one office succeeds in winning the cup for three successive months. Upon such achievement the cup will remain in the possession of that office.

The month of April netted a gross business for your office to the amount of $———. With the product we have in sight for the August releases there is no doubt in the world in the writer's mind but what each and every one of our Western offices will exceed their April figures without much of an effort.

This proposition will not only incite the interest of your salesmen, and each and every one connected with your branch, but it will mean more business will be obtained, and that item means "Bonus"!

What do you think of this scheme? If it meets with your approval and the approval of the majority of managers of the Western division the writer will put it in force and order the cup made at once, and also lay out campaign, as well as rules and regulations governing the contest, and will see that each and every one gets a full share and full amount of fair play. In fact, the writer is very enthusiastic over this idea, but would not consider placing it in force without the consent of the majority of the managers in the Western division.

Will you kindly give this matter your close personal perusal and advise the writer by wire, care of the Seattle branch, your decision immediately upon your receipt of same.

Wishing you continued success and the best of health, I beg to remain,

Yours very truly,

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC.,
TOM NORTH,
Western District Manager.

The second letter will follow next week.

COL. LEVY HERE TO BUY PRODUCTIONS

Kentuckian Already Has Secured Eight Independent Subjects and Is in the Market for Three or Four More

COL. FRED LEVY, of Louisville, who is spending a month in the North, combining business with a vacation, is one of the dominating figures in southern film circles, but is at the same time a man whose widely diversified activities in other lines have kept him out of the limelight of filmdom to a large degree.

"I am in New York," said Colonel Levy at the headquarters of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit a few days ago, "to purchase a number of productions for the Big Feature Rights Corporation, controlling the First National franchise for Kentucky and Tennessee, of which I am president. At the same time, Mrs. Levy and I are making the most of the fine weather to take in all the new attractions on Broadway and later on expect to spend a few weeks at Saratoga.

"I have already bought eight feature films from independent producers and will probably decide on three or four more to round our our campaign for the coming season. During the current year, the business done by the Big Feature Rights Corporation under the management of my associate, Lee L. Goldberg, has grown to such an extent that we have had to triple our office space and selling forces. This is directly attributable to the great impetus given film entertainment in general in our part of the country by the release of such remarkable box-office attractions as 'My Four Years in Germany,' 'Tarzan of the Apes,' 'A Dog's Life' and other current First National productions.

"'My Four Year in Germany,' particularly, has raised the prestige of motion pictures to a remarkable degree by its dignity and intense dramatic interest. Thousands of people who had no interest in motion pictures before are now flocking to see them in both Kentucky and Tennessee.

"We have also done very well with the Petrova pictures. The recent personal tour of Mme. Petrova on behalf of the Government's War Saving Stamps campaign has stimulated interest in her film productions to an extremely gratifying degree. I look upon Mme. Petrova as one of the most interesting personalities in the dramatic world to-day and wherever she has appeared personally a wave of real enthusiasm for her work has followed.

"The announcement of First National releasing plans for the forthcoming months gives us further assurance of prosperity provided the increased tax on amusements does not discourage the attendance to any marked degree. I believe that Anita Stewart is certainly one of the three leading feminine lights of the screen and under Mr. Mayer's management should turn out the greatest work of her career. We will not have to wait until she appears in the film production of 'In Old Kentucky' to report the establishment of new records with her new pictures in the Blue Grass region."

During his stay in New York Colonel Levy is making his headquarters at the Ritz Carlton. He is a native of Louisville and has built his entire career as a resident of that city. Some idea of the wide diversity of Colonel Levy's interests may be gathered when it is stated that in addition to his work as president of Levy Brothers, the largest clothing store in Louisville, he is president of the Auto Credit Sales Company, managing director of the National Theatre Company and active associate of the United Booking Offices in Kentucky, controlling the National Theatre and the Mary Anderson Theatre, vice-president of the Purisol Products Company and vice-president and treasurer of the Central Pigment Company.

Like all native Kentuckians worthy of the name, Colonel Levy is also keenly interested in racing.

CORPORAL LEE AT BUFFALO.

Corporal Arthur Lee, formerly special traveling representative of Gaumont, who was recently drafted, is taking a course in advanced auto-mechanics at the Technical High School, Buffalo. Mr. Lee is a son of William J. Lee, of the Vaudeville Managers' Protective Association.

RUBY DE REMER RE-ENGAGED.

Because of her capable performance as leading woman for Harold Lockwood in Metro's recently completed "Pals First," soon to be released under the banner of Screen Classics, Inc., Ruby De Remer has been re-engaged by Managing Director Edwin Carewe as leading support to Mr. Lockwood in his next picture now being made.

ATTENDANCE BETTER, ADMISSION HIGHER

That Is the Forecast of S. T. Stephens, New General Supervisor of Mutual, and He Tells Why He Thinks So

PICTURE theatre attendance is greater and generally higher admission prices are being paid than at any time in the history of the industry, according to S. T. Stephens, widely known New Orleans film man, who has just been appointed general supervisor of Mutual exchanges. Mr. Stephens came to New York last week for a conference with James M. Sheldon, president of the Mutual.

In the course of his visit Mr. Stephens discussed the conditions of the business in most optimistic terms. He looks for a record fall and winter attendance, and predicts a constantly increasing standard of production and exhibition.

"The summer business everywhere has been better than it ever has been," commented Mr. Stephens. "I attribute it to a variety of causes, but among the chief ones is the fact that, under new railroad rates, summer excursions have been less frequent, people have stayed at home more than ever and they have spent their money at the picture theatre.

"Excursions to summer resorts, Sunday picnics at watering places as well as resort travel have been noticeably curtailed.

"A contributing factor has been rising price of automobiles and higher cost of maintaining machines. There are more motor cars idle this summer than you would imagine, and picture patrons who would have bought machines in normal times have saved their money.

"Then, too, stay-at-homes have more money than usual. The mother of the family of boys gets regular army allotments. The father of the family and the daughters earn more, too, and mother can afford to go to the pictures.

"Some exhibitors thought their business would suffer immeasurably when the draft took all the unmarried men, but as a matter of fact the women who were left at home—the mothers, and the sweethearts—found relaxation necessary, and after the first weeks of sorrow over family separations turned to the picture theatre for diversion.

"I might mention," continued Mr. Stephens, "that the day of the program picture is gone. Today is a day of specials. The field wants specials and one and two reelers. The special must not exceed seven reels.

"Gradually but surely I believe the industry is getting away from the so-called "star evil." Today the director ranks almost as great in box office importance as the star, and the name of the author or the title of the book, in more and more instances, overshadows them both.

"The screen will see the picturization of widely read stories by widely read authors in the future, to the advantage of the industry and the betterment of quality on the screen. These things now count at the box office. They are going to count more. The tendency is that way and everybody is glad of it."

Mr. Stephens was promoted to general supervisor by A. S. Kirkpatrick, the new assistant general manager of Mutual, from the post of southern supervisor. He has long been in the Mutual organization, and is considered one of its most valuable men. His new position is one of the most important in the organization.

OFFICIAL FILMS AT STATE FAIR.

The Government is planning the most extensive campaign of education through the motion picture medium this year at the annual Tennessee State Fair, which will be held at Nashville in September. The various Governmental departments and agencies will be represented by motion picture men with films covering every subject of Governmental activity. One of the main film features will be a screen version of "The Man Behind the Man Behind the Gun," otherwise known as the man behind the plow. The pictures show the army of the furrows backing up the army in the trenches. Supplementary to these films will be shown pictures of beautiful spots in America, including the national parks and the Far West, showing the reclamation of arid waste lands. Because of the efforts of the department of agriculture to stimulate food production more films will be shown on this subject than any other.

Jewel Carmen, Under Keeney Contract, Will Be Directed by Sidney Olcott

FRANK A. KEENEY, head of the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation, annouces that after a brief summer lull of activities he will resume production in a fortnight or so featuring Jewel Carmen, one of the most popular of the younger screen stars. Miss Carmen is under contract with Mr. Keeney to produce at least eight pictures a year. She will be put out in photoplays by the foremost authors. Mr. Keeney's scenario editor, Bennett Musson, is now engaged in making selections for her from scenarios submitted by some of the best-known screen writers of the day.

Jewel Carmen.

Miss Carmen will be handled by a man who classes among those familiar with the affairs of the screen as one of the ablest of directors, Sidney Olcott. Mr. Olcott has had a remarkable and successful career, having produced pictures in Florida as a pioneer, in England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, Holland, France, Italy, Germany, Austria, Gibraltar, Bermuda, Canada, Algiers, Egypt, Palestine and the Island of Madeira. He is at the head of Sidney Olcott Players, Inc., and recently was with Famous Players-Lasky, directing Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, Valentine Grant and Marie Doro. His last production was "The Belgian," starring Valentine Grant and Walker Whiteside.

About the middle of September Mr. Keeney will resume production with Catherine Calvert, who will be featured in at least eight plays a year.

Another important announcement is that within a few days Mr. Keeney will take over the studios expressly built for him by the Manhattan Studios, Inc., under the direction of the president of that concern, John W. Mahan. They are located at 308-12 East Fourty-eighth street, New York, where the building of the Lee Lash studios formerly stood, and adjoin the Norman Talmadge studios.

Mr. Keeney's enterprise in the moving picture field is further evidenced by the fact that within a month or two he will open two new theatres of his own in Kingston, N. Y., and Williamsport, Pa., the former to cost upward of $100,000 and the latter about $200,000. They will display the Keeney pictures and other high-class photoplays. All Keeney productions are being distributed through the William L. Sherry Service.

DRAW CARDS IN WORLD'S BIGGEST GAME

In Goldwyn's Contribution to Liberty Specials Uncle Sam Shows Kaiser Some Real Poker

THE Story of the Biggest Game Ever Played," that is the title of Goldwyn's all-star contribution to the thousand-foot motion pictures being made throughout the industry to boost the Fourth Liberty Loan. It has been completed at the Fort Lee studios of the company, and soon will be in the hands of the Government's committee for continent-wide distribution.

Five Goldwyn stars have parts in the propaganda drama—Pauline Frederick, Mabel Normand, Madge Kennedy, Mae Marsh, and Tom Moore. Geraldine Farrar, unfortunately, was in Wyoming on location when the picture was begun, so she could not be in it; but she plans to remedy that immediately by making a separate production in which she will be the star.

In addition to the Goldwyn stars a dozen other screen players of note are in the picture, which was written by Willard Mack. Among them are John Sainpolis, Mabel Ballin, Matt Moore, J. W. Herbert, Barry Whitcombe, Captain Joseph Morrison, James Marcus, Clarence Oliver, A. C. Gibbons, Henderson T. Murray and Ed. Sturgis. And Hobart Henley, who used to be an actor before he began to be a director, has a part, as has Carlyle Moore, author of "Stop Thief" and other successful plays, and now an assistant director at the Goldwyn studios.

Hugo Ballin Directed.

The direction of the special film was in the hands of Hugo Ballin, Goldwyn's art director. Those who have seen the picture say that Mr. Ballin has admirably developed the symbolism of the story. Three Goldwyn cameramen—Oliver T. Marsh, Louis Physioc and Arthur Cadwell—are responsible for the photography.

With six companies working, the Goldwyn studio is naturally a pretty busy place, and it was often nightfall before all of the players could be got together for work on the Liberty Loan film. It was midnight many times before they went home. When the electricians, stage hands and carpenters at the studio, called on to work long hours overtime, learned what the picture was to be used for, they got together and resolved to refuse pay for the extra work.

"The Story of the Biggest Game Ever Played" concerns a poker game started by the Kaiser. It opens with a representation from life of Millet's famous painting, "The Angelus," symbolizing the world at peace before the war. Then the Kaiser (John Sainpolis) is seen seated alone at a table idly thumbing a pack of cards. King Albert, of Belgium (Matt Moore), enters, and at the Kaiser's urging joins him in a two-handed game of poker. Albert loses, and France (Captain Morrison) and England (Harry Whitcombe) take a hand, while Von Hindenburg (James Marcus) and a German soldier (A. C. Gibbons) stand at their ruler's elbow. As the game progresses Italy sits in, and the luck changes from player to player, though the Kaiser has the better of it.

At this juncture Uncle Sam (J. W. Herbert) is seen strolling leisurely down a long hall toward the card room accompanied and hastened in his progress by Miss Liberty Loan (Pauline Frederick).

"What do you know about the game?" demands the Kaiser when Uncle Sam asks for a hand.

Uncle Sam Used to Play Pretty Well.

"I'm out of practice, but I used to play pretty well," replies Uncle Sam, modestly.

When Uncle Sam sits at the table Miss Liberty Loan disappears, and there flash on the screen a thousand pairs of hands reaching for the bonds she offers for sale. As the money is received it is turned over to Uncle Sam to increase his already healthy stack. With Uncle Sam and the other Entente Allies arrayed against the Kaiser and making inroads on his rapidly diminishing pile of chips, the picture closes with the Liberty Cry, thus:

"We Buy."
"You Buy."
"They Buy."
"Good-bye."

As each of the characters in the drama is introduced symbolic representation is made of some familiar incident of the war or of history. Symbolizing the spirit of the Allied nations at war, Madge Kennedy is seen as Joan of Arc; the rape of Belgium is represented; Mabel Normand symbolizes love, as the Italian girl pinning the bleeding heart on the breast of her departing soldier boy (Tom Moore). Mae Marsh is the Belgian girl. Mabel Ballin and Clarence Oliver are the peasants in "The Angelus." Carlyle Moore and Ed. Sturgis play two Socialists, and Hobart Henley is an Italian soldier.

Every player in the cast donated his or her services to the undertaking, of course. Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, spent many hours at the studio giving advice calculated to make the production little short of perfect.

Mary Miles Minter to Remain with American

CALIFORNIA'S film colony has watched with great interest the outcome of a controversy between D. W. Griffith and S. S. Hutchinson, the president of the American Film Company. And, of course, all over a young woman. Such is the story that comes to the World from Mr. Hutchinson's office.

Mary Miles Minter, one of Mr. Hutchinson's stars, suddenly began to show a certain interest in some proposition outside of her work at the Santa Barbara studio, and it was soon discovered that the same kind of bee which has stung so many rising stars and caused them to break their contracts was buzzing around Mary—the bee of ambition and fabulous salary.

In this case it proved to be D. W. Griffith, who, it is said, wanted Miss Minter for his next super-production. He put his cards on the table, and, not beating around the bush, admitted to Mr. Hutchinson he regarded Miss Minter as the coming super-ingenue of the screen. Then he began to bid on her.

A whole week's activity of the Minter Company was suspended while personal friends, advisors and relatives of the fair star, who had less regard for a cast-iron contract than for temporary fame, argued for her rushing pell-mell to Griffith's fold. But knowing that any contract made by the American is not a mere scrap of paper, Griffith made an open business proposition direct to Mr. Hutchinson, and raised the price by leaps and bounds.

Hutchinson was obdurate, and declared that not only because he considered Miss Minter worth as much to him as to any other producer, but also because it would be impossible to cancel the many and large contracts that have recently been made for this stars' new pictures, he could not consider selling out at any price. The American Film Company began a direct selling system about a month ago, under which their thirty-odd representatives have signed up direct with exhibitors for a series of eight pictures featuring Miss Minter.

The president of the American is on his way back to the Chicago office, and in a few days everything is expected to run as smoothly as ever.

Find Paramount-Artcrafts in Raid on Royal Cinema

THROUGH efforts of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, aided by the Burns Detective Agency, the district attorney's office and the Military Intelligence Bureau, men who are believed to be the ringleaders in a conspiracy to steal and smuggle motion pictures out of this country have been apprehended and the workings of their scheme uncovered. The first raid took place Wednesday, August 21, when the agents of the district attorney entered the office of William C. Thompson, who is operating under the name of Royal Cinema Company at 145 West Fourty-fifth street, arrested Mr. Thompson, and secured prints of a number of Paramount-Artcraft and Chaplin subjects. A second raid was made on the offices of Casemiro Gonzalez and Tony Lucchesse in the same building, and more Paramount prints were secured, and Gonzalez and Lucchesse were taken into custody.

Thompson is said to have confessed to procuring stolen pictures for a Seattle firm. Evidence is said to be positive that Gonzalez and Lucchesse smuggled large shipments of film into Mexico, where they were taken by Alverez-Arrondo & Company, of Mexico City.

Harold Pitman, of the legal department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, had the investigation in charge, and it is believed the ringleaders have been captured.

EXPOSITION TO SHOW SOUVENIRS.

The exposition of the motion picture industry to be held in New York City October 5-13 will set aside a section for the exhibition of projection and other apparatus as well as publicity of "ye olden days." W. C. Smith of the Nicholas Power Company; Sam Spedon, Moving Picture World; Albert E. Smith, Vitagraph; William Wright, Kalem, and Paul Gulick of Universal, have been asked to serve as a committee of arrangements. Those who are in touch with any material that may serve in this department will kindly address the National Association, Times Building, New York.

COMMUNITY SINGING MADE POPULAR

Hustling Western Manager Tells How He Induces His Patrons to Take the Place of the Old Illustrated Songster, and Gets Away with It—The Psychology That Does the Trick

Note.—Lately the American theatre, Butte, Mont., has been advertising the Patrons' Chorus, and Ralph R. Ruffner, the manager, was asked to explain how he swung the stunt. His reply came in the form of a letter, but it would be a pity to spoil his characteristic style with editing, and it is here presented just as he wrote it.

THE PATRONS' CHORUS" is nothing more than audience singing. You will recall about two years ago my writing you about a Midnight Matinee stunt wherein this feature formed a part of the entertainment. That is where the child was born. I figured if we could make them sing after their standing in line for an hour, paying two or four bits as the case may be and forsaking warm beds at that late hour, our chances of getting them to sing at regular performances were also good. The experiment was tried and with instant, unbounded success. Audience singing has now formed a part of my bag of tricks—if the expression may be used—ever since. After leaving Spokane, the scene of its premiere initiation, it was just as much a success in Portland, Oregon, at the Columbia and on several occasions at the Liberty.

Upon my arrival in Butte in June I introduced it here in the Rialto with greater success, if such a thing was possible, than in the two other northwestern cities. I now attribute any gain in popularity to the experience derived in bringing the stunt to its present polish. There is a trick in making an audience sing. Out of the great mass of songs only a few are successfully used in this stunt. Probabilities are I have twenty-five failures for every good one in my list. One can try a flock of songs in two years.

Gets Good Press Notices.

On our present change we are using "The Long, Long Trail." The audiences are singing two verses, three choruses and whistling two choruses. At first glance that looks like a whole lot of time consumed in handling a big show, but such is not the case. "The Patrons' Chorus" is a feature in itself on our programs—it carries prominent mention in our newspaper advertising—and the song slides are not mixed up with house announcements. It forms a complete, individual unit in the show and is given preferred attention in its position on the bill.

The first notification the audience has that they are going to sing is the slides with which I have always prefaced the stunt "Can You Sing?" After two or three weeks the appearance of this slide will get a big laugh and there will be detected a sort of contagious hustle and bustle on the part of the audience getting ready to go to work. The next slide carries the title, followed by the first verse.

Audience Does It All.

The house is not planted with a singer to start it. This I have never done, for two reasons—first, I have proved to my own satisfaction that it is entirely unnecessary, the expense not being justified, and second I had confidence that the stunt, rightly presented, would accomplish the purpose for which it was intended—to give the audience an opportunity to relax, a sort of seventh inning stretch. It has been my good fortune to discover the angle through which it is possible to gain their confidence and get them to sing without these plants, and I will try and get it down intelligently for those who are interested.

Following the first verse and chorus an appeal is made to their sense of humor with a slide something like this: "The ushers will now pass around the birdseed to those who are not singing" or "Go ahead and sing; we'll keep it dark. "What if you lived in the Canary Isles?" or "Another customer just came in; sing it again; she's a good scout" or "Gee, that was great! Now the other barrel" and so on. Songs with four verses, of the light, airy type can be headed "Firt Lap," "Second Lap," "Third Lap" and "Home Stretch"; we strive at least to keep up a smiling interest.

Sometimes Victimizes Audience.

In some songs I purposely plant a catch line, timed to the meter of the verse, to get them to sing into it before they are aware they are victimized. I can better explain this by the song, "The Red, White and Blue." In the chorus, out of four lines, three lines are the same. In the second chorus the slide reads: "The boast of the red, white and blue, the boast of the red, white and blue. With her flag proudly floating before her, the same thing four lines back." It is absolutely sure fire and stalls the show. It is best to hold that slide on the screen for quite a bit, or until they settle down again, for as they are laughing at each other's stupidity and lack of knowledge of one of our best patriotic songs, they are able to read back, see the trap and realize how gullible they were.

On short, popular choruses we follow with a slide "Now whistle it. Ladies first; men keep quiet." The tempo is increased and the orchestra or organist plays it very softly. This is followed by a general invitation and the velvet drapes are timed to drop over the screen just as the song comes to a close. It makes a very pretty effect. In addition to the whistling, they will hum a chorus, and if the operator is trying to follow them he can generally be found hanging out one of the ports clear up to his socks, for the sound is not intense by any means. The coloring of the slides is of great importance.

The Psychology of Color.

The psychology of color and its effect upon an audience forms as much a part of the idea as the words of the songs themselves. Those slides which play to the high-lights, the humorous and pertinent are always in amber. That is, warm, hospitable and appealing in tone. The slide announcing "The Long, Long Trail" would naturally be done in deep blue or purple, as would the verses and chorus. A song like "Polly-wolly-doodle" would be done all in amber. "When You and I Were Young, Maggie" lends itself to a variety of coloring in the word pictures that its verses paint. This is one of the most successful songs I have met with. I use the following copy in announcing its title:

"That old gem, so dear to the hearts of us all . . . 'When You and I Were Young, Maggie.'"

For Patriotic Song.

In presenting the song "America" I have found it best to place down in the right hand corner of the title slide "Audience will please rise." I have noticed an uncertainty on the part of audiences as to whether it was proper or not to stand and we forestall this by making the request; otherwise people would be getting up all through the song. As soon as they are standing a slide like this will help: "Now that we are standing, the big idea is to SING!" Naturally, at this time, patriotic songs are sure-fire, but we are careful to mix them with numbers that are in themselves established favorites. American timidity is a known quantity and will interfere with the success of audience singing if it is given the least latitude. It is largely, almost entirely overcome by using an absolutely dark house at the time of the song; by appealing to the humorous side of the audience, and through the psychological use of color in the makeup of the slides.

DALLAS EXCHANGE REMOVES.

The Dallas office of General Film Company is doing business in its new location at 1924 Main street, after several weeks of arranging a transfer. The new location is considered an improvement over the old, and the change was made in accordance with the policy of the company to give its managers every facility for doing business.

Motion Picture Men Aid in Defeating Vardaman in the Mississippi Primaries

ONE of the most pleasing pieces of news in administration circles in Washington last week was the fact that James K. Vardaman has been eliminated as a candidate for re-election to the United States Senate from Mississippi and that Representative Pat Harrison had won out in the primaries.

The part played by the motion picture in bringing about Representative Harrison's selection cannot be estimated, but it can be safely said that it had an enormous effect.

Long before it was definitely known that President Wilson was opposed to the re-election of Vardaman instructions were sent to E. M. Clarke, state chairman for Mississippi on the national war council of the motion picture industry, appointed by William A. Brady, president of the National Association, to line up the motion picture theatres of the state in favor of Representative Harrison.

That this work was well done was evident as a result of the primary election. News weeklies were used extensively and the theatres of the state did everything in their power to push the Harrison candidacy.

Senator Vardaman was an implacable foe of the Wilson administration, whereas Representative Harrison was a friend tried and true. As soon as the result of the primary election was definitely known President Brady visited Joseph P. Tumulty, secretary to the President, and apprised him of the part that the motion picture had played in the campaign. Mr. Tumulty expressed himself as very much pleased and said that he would bring it to the attention of the President.

There are several other states where primary elections are to be held this fall and where several other members of what are known as "the willful twelve" group come up for election. There is some talk that the President will take a definite stand against these men in the same manner that he did against Vardaman. In that case it is possible the motion picture may again be called upon to aid in bringing about their defeat.

National Association to Work with Fuel Board

THE Fuel Conservation Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry held a conference with Fuel Administrator Garfield and other officials of the National Fuel Administration in Washington, Tuesday, August 20, at which important plans were made for an intimate co-operation between the Fuel Administration and the National Association.

The subject was discussed from two angles. One was a national campaign to be instituted throughout the motion picture theatres of the country seeking a general conservation in the use of electric machinery which receives its initial power from coal. This campaign will seek to educate the public in the conservation of all electric current used in motors, generators, lights, and all electric household cooking utensils.

The other campaign will seek to bring about the conservation of coal and to educate the public in those sections of the country where there is a shortage. These campaigns will be local in extent, and will only be used in such places where an acute shortage exists. Conferences were held with the director of publicity for the Fuel Administration, and arrangements made for the most intimate co-operation. It was decided that President William A. Brady should appoint an additional committee of five to handle the details of this work. It is probable that the committee to be appointed will plan to use both trailers and slides.

EXPOSITION GOES TO GARDEN.

Since the Government has taken over the Grand Central Palace in New York City for a base hospital, the National Association of Motion Picture Industry has been obliged to reserve the Madison Square Garden for the week of October 5 to 13 for the exposition of the motion picture industry. The refusal of that place has been given the N. A. M. P. I. for that week, and it is the intention of the National Association to go on with the exposition at that time. It has been announced that the Government has already asked the reservation of the south side of the Garden for exhibition of aeroplanes and war relics used in the aero-photographic department in the war.

MERRICK GOES WITH MUTUAL.

Mutual announces the appointment of Joseph Merrick as Coast supervisor, with direct supervision over Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland and Seattle. Mr. Merrick was formerly branch manager for Mutual at Los Angeles and Seattle. He is particularly well equipped for his new position on account of his wide acquaintance with exhibitors and intimate knowledge of conditions in his territory, having formerly operated on the Coast as special representative for Metro.

Famous Players-Lasky Sales Quarters Active

ACCORDING to every indication at the distribution headquarters of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in New York the initial month of the organization's year starting September 1 will present a most pretentious beginning. Following the announcement of the policies and plans concerning the activities of this company for the coming year made two months ago the exchanges, as well as the New York offices, have been extremely busy with arrangements involving thousands of new contracts with exhibitors for Paramount and Artcraft pictures.

In view of the demand for the largely increased output during the coming year reported the entire sales organization has encountered its greatest activity since the inception of the company. With the considerably enlarged schedule of releases for 1918-19 it is possible to take care of many thousands of new exhibitors.

The advertising, publicity and service departments are also busily engaged in fulfilling their ambition to give the exhibitor of Paramount and Artcraft pictures next year the most complete co-operation in exploitation. Various service ideas, some of which are radical departures, such as the national advertising campaign involving the Paramount and Artcraft Week recently announced, are being formulated along lines in keeping with the plans of the sales organization.

Moore's Leading Woman Is an Alabama Bankhead

Carrying out its promise of a surprise in making public the name of Tom Moore's leading woman in his second Goldwyn starring vehicle, "Thirty a Week," Goldwyn announces the engagement in this capacity of Tallulah Bankhead, granddaughter of United States Senator John H. Bankhead, of Alabama, and daughter of Representative Bankhead, of the same state, both serving together in the same Congress. Senator Bankhead, who has been in Congress more than thirty-seven years, is the only Confederate veteran left in the Senate.

Tallulah Bankhead is a comparative newcomer in motion pictures, and Goldwyn believes that in her it has a genuine "find." In "Thirty a Week" she has the role of Cindy, with whom Tom Moore, as the thirty-a-week chauffeur of a disgracefully rich employer, falls in love with and marries. Cindy happens to be Dan's employer's daughter; but that only makes the more fun and drama for the picture.

Others in the cast of Mr. Moore's second Goldwyn picture are Alec B. Francis, Grace Henderson, Warburton Gamble and Brenda Fowler.

FIFTY STARS CONTRIBUTE TO LOAN

Chairman Zukor of National Association's Committee Says Quality of Pictures Will Exceed Highest Expectations —Every Exhibitor Assured a Subject Each Day of Drive

WITH the initial announcement this week of plans for the distribution of the Liberty Loan films being produced by more than fifty of the film world's brightest stars, the Fourth Liberty Loan drive being conducted by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has assumed the definite proportions which indicate that it will exceed even the highest expectations of the association's committee in charge of the movement, according to Adolph Zukor, the chairman. The first of the films have already been received at the New York headquarters of the committee, and enough films have been completed to insure that every exhibitor in the United States will have an opportunity to screen a new Liberty Loan appeal every day of the three weeks' drive which begins on September 28, all without cost to himself.

The first two pictures to reach New York from the West Coast were "A Bullet for Berlin," by William S. Hart, the Artcraft star, and a Liberty Loan appeal by Mae Murray called "Kaiser Bull." Frank R. Wilson, director of publicity for the Fourth Liberty Loan Campaign, who came from Washington Wednesday to discuss plans for the motion picture drive with Chairman Zukor, was one of the first to see these two pictures and expressed himself as delighted with both pictures, and this enthusiasm is shared by all members of the committee and others who have seen them. That the same high quality will feature the other films to be released under the auspices of the committee is indicated by reports from the various studios which have been co-operating in the enterprise.

National Association in Charge.

The outstanding feature of the week's activities in connection with the industry's Liberty Loan campaign was the announcement of distribution plans of Al Lichtman, general manager of distribution for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who was placed in absolute charge of the committee's distribution plans by Chairman Zukor. The distribution of the Liberty Loan specials will be managed exclusively by the committee representing the National Association. A competent film man will be placed in each distribution center throughout the country and will be directly responsible to the committee for this feature of the work. He will also work in co-operation with the Federal Reserve Board in his district. All bookings must be made through the committee's representative, and the exhibitors of the country are urged by the committee to watch closely all future announcements concerning the personnel of its assistants in the various distribution centers. It is expected that a complete list of appointments will be ready within the next few days, or as rapidly as they can be worked out by Mr. Lichtman.

Over 2,500 Prints to Be Made.

Under the plan announced every theatre in the country will have the opportunity of showing a different Liberty Loan film on each day of the campaign. It is estimated that between 2,500 and 3,000 prints of the various subjects will be required to make possible the 100 per cent. distribution projected by the committee. While all bookings must be made through the committee, the physical handling of the films will be attended to by the various exchange organizations which have volunteered this service without charge to the Government. The organizations contributing this service are Paramount, Universal, Vitagraph, Metro, Fox, Goldwyn, Pathe, Triangle, World Film, Select, General Film and Mutual.

Mary Pickford Begins Work.

Definite assurance that screendom's "Big Four," Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart and Charlie Chaplin, would be represented in the great galaxy of Liberty Loan film stars was given during the week when Chairman Zukor received a telegram from Mary Pickford announcing that she had already begun work on her Liberty Loan picture.

While no detailed information as to the nature of the Pickford story has been received in New York, it is said to be of an unusual nature and will carry a big punch. The Hart film, the first to be received in New York, has set a high standard for the others of the "Big Four" to meet, but reports from the Coast indicate that the challenge has been accepted and that the other members of the famous quartet of film players are working night and day on their contributions to the campaign.

D. W. Griffith has wired Chairman Zukor that he has taken personal charge of the filming of the Lillian Gish story, and Thomas H. Ince is making a special production in addition to the ones in which his stars are to appear. Titles for only a few of the special productions have been announced, but the committee is highly pleased over the reports concerning the stories coming from the various studios.

Here's the List of Players.

The stars who have announced their intention of being represented in the motion picture industry's drive are William S. Hart, Mae Murray, Harold Lockwood, Emily Stevens, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Charlie Chaplin, Edith Storey, Mme. Nazimova, Lillian Gish, Dustin Farnum, William Farnum, Charles Ray, Enid Bennett, Dorothy Dalton, Sessue Hayakawa, Wallace Reid, "Fatty" Arbuckle, Alice Brady, Elsie Ferguson, Enrico Caruso, Billie Burke, William Faversham (special), Mae Marsh, Pauline Frederick, Mabel Normand, Madge Kennedy, Dorothy Phillips, Norma Talmadge, Lillian Walker, Clara Kimball Young, William Duncan, Earle Williams, Alice Joyce, Harry T. Morey, Corrine Griffith, Gladys Leslie, John Barrymore, George Beban, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Mary MacLaren, Monroe Salisbury, Harry Carey, Bessie Love, Jack Sherrill, Ethel Barrymore, Fred Stone, George M. Cohan, Marguerite Clark, Pearl White, Frank Keenan, Fannie Ward, Ruth Roland, Harold Lloyd, Bebe Daniels and Baby Marie Osborne.

Mack Sennett Making Two.

Mack Sennett is making two comedies, according to word received by Chairman Zukor, while "Doug" will present a number of entirely new stunts in his appeal for the Liberty Loan. Reports from the Coast are to the effect that the "Fatty" Arbuckle film is a scream, to put it mildly.

Charlie Chaplin has maintained great secrecy as to the nature of the story upon which he is working, but the film is expected to be 1,000 feet in length. The few who have been let into the secret declare that it will be a knockout.

"The committee wishes to stress the fact that these films will be booked to all exhibitors absolutely free of charge," Chairman Zukor has announced.

RORK VISITS MUTUAL EXCHANGES

For the purpose of talking over personally with the first-run exhibitors and Mutual exchange managers the Sessue Hayakawa release, "His Birthright," Sam E. Rork, general representative of the Haworth Pictures Corporation, left New York City for a trip which will take in Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago and Indianapolis. Mr. Rork intends to go over in detail with the exhibitor the merchandising plan which has been worked out by the Mutual.

PENNYBAKER IS MUTUAL MANAGER.

L. L. Pennybaker has been appointed branch manager for Mutual at Oklahoma City, taking charge August 13. Mr. Pennybaker was formerly associated with Mutual as branch manager at Memphis, Tenn. Prior to that he conducted an independent exchange in Oklahoma City. On account of wide acquaintance in Oklahoma City and surrounding territory Mr. Pennybaker will prove a valuable acquisition to the Mutual roster

FACTS AND COMMENTS

ALL indications are propitious for a large and successful gathering of motion picture theatre owners at Chicago on September 3. Such considerations as location and interest will aid greatly in swelling the attendance, and there should be a good attendance, for questions of wide concern for the owner of the motion picture theatre are to be discussed and lines of action are to be determined. Reports from Chicago agree that there is a probability of amalgamation of the two exhibitor organizations. This alone is quite likely to attract to Chicago many exhibitors who otherwise might not have taken the trouble to go there on this particular occasion. An effort has been made in other respects to hold a real convention instead of a little political meeting. Altogether the outlook is excellent. Help it along by being there yourself.

IT is conceded that export conditions have taken a more favorable turn in the past few weeks. Representatives of the Government who sought to regulate the film traffic between this and other countries have acquired a better understanding of the nature of that trade and the methods under which it is conducted, so that now it is possible to do business without so much friction and delay. This brings us to the subject of further extending our foreign business. What are you doing, Mr. Producer, to place your pictures in the theatres of foreign countries, and are you getting them there? Now is the time to spread your propaganda. When America finishes the job of winning the war for democracy every American producer of pictures should be ready to take the fullest advantage of the great facilities for foreign trade that this or any other country ever possessed.

THAT contest for the "Pershing's Crusaders" trophy is nearing its close. Another week and the campaign will be finished in so far as the trophy is concerned, so get busy, you hustlers, and put over your very best punches if you want to be in the running at the finish. You may take our word for it that the trophy is a thing of beauty and will be a joy to the lucky exchangeman who lands it for his headquarters. As a project to stimulate the booking of that justly popular war feature the contest has been a great success. More than two thousand bookings have been reported to date, and the sum in dollars is well over the $200,000 mark, which makes the campaign a financial success for everybody concerned.

SPEAKING of contests, attention is directed to the announcement, made elsewhere in this issue, of a contest which involves the payment each week of a War Saving Stamp by the Moving Picture World to the exhibitor who produces during a given week the best stunt of any description calculated to arouse patriotism in any one of the several war activities such as the sale of War Savings Stamps, Red Cross drives or similar movements to raise money for the prosecution of the war, including the sale of Liberty Bonds. Read the conditions and prepare to get some of our War Savings Stamps. The main point is that we want to learn what you are doing so that we can tell the other fellows how to do it in their communities to the best effect.

THE Zukor committee appointed to mobilize the motion picture industry for the forthcoming Liberty Bond drive is doing great work. Already a large number of the most popular players have produced short and snappy subjects to be incorported in the programs of every picture theatre of the country during the drive. These photoplaylets will be so distributed that each theatre may have a daily change. You can do your own figuring if you want to know how big a job it will be to print and distribute some four thousand prints of nearly twenty separate subjects and then to keep them moving in regular order for three weeks. But it will be done because every theatre owner, manager and operator is going to do his damnedest to keep up to the schedule. Don't forget this: We have got to make a showing in this coming Liberty Loan campaign.

TONS OF WASTED ENERGY

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

GO into any large and well-organized distributing office and note the efficiency devices, those for accounting, rapid figuring, duplication, publicity service and all the well worked-out plans for placing "canned drama" with care and intelligence among thousands of exhibitors from ocean to ocean. It is little short of marvelous.

One might think that inefficiency meant treason.

It does where industrial engineering for government purposes is concerned, and high-grade efficiency is to be desired in all money-making enterprises; but efficiency in the production and distribution of pictures, books or plays does not depend upon labor-saving office devices as other than an adjunct to a main idea so large that they are relatively unimportant, almost to the point of being unnecessary.

Even great capital ceases to lead as a factor.

Concerns backed by millions have gone out of business.

They failed to grasp the power behind this industry.

At the heads of many of those concerns were men quite capable of figuring on the safety and interest to be expected in well-understood lines of investment. Many of them were men who would never let mere wishing and guessing take the place of cold and intelligent reasoning, and they knew how to search into costs and selling prices with the best of us, in no case depending on approximate estimates. They were, in many instances, good financiers, but they were wasters of energy.

Millions have gone astray from ignorance of a principle.

"Think out the art before attempting to practice it."

Consider the relative importance of the elements productive and non-productive.

Optimism is a good thing to carry a man through unforeseen difficulties, but a dispassionate analysis of motion-picture requirements and of effective balance in composition of the product should be first steps in the undertaking. In spite of this, haphazard guesses have been the rule, not the exception, in the making and marketing of screen stories.

Customers do not ordinarily flock to a store as soon as it opens its doors unless it can offer one or both of two exceptional attractions, superior quality, or lower price, but a fake enterprise may win out temporarily through bluff, and all this is true in a measure of manufacture and distribution in general. Take the case of a Western soapmaker who complained of bad conditions in a convention at New York. He had a perfectly equipped factory and one of the best selling forces ever organized, but he complained that taxation and credit exactions kept him constantly on the edge of loss. The head of an established house in the East remarked dryly, "Why not make better soap?"

His business was toppling from lack of secure foundation.

It was out of plumb from lack of structural balance.

The beauty and novelty of pictured motion carried this New Art into popular favor at first. Then a few directors, who were really creative geniuses, advanced it to story visualization. It was then incorrectly reasoned that all directors had creative genius, and a period "directorial" followed. Next a few real stars flashed into prominence, and it was incorrectly reasoned that the flash was nearly the whole picture value. An authorship period may follow. The essential element of artistic success, however, is not in any one of these, but in their grouping, so as to harmonize talent with its expression.

This is the sure route to large and permanent success.

It will result in pictures which become legacies.

In order that moving pictures may enter the company of arts which have given outlet to the greatest human minds, they must enjoy a development commensurate with their wondrous possibilities. They may still concentrate on artistic expression, leaving flash and false pretense to the fakir, but there is something to be considered before the telling of a story—"Is it worth while?" Does it deserve the energy put into its visualization? The highest efficiency in moving pictures is that which makes the product effective. More important to the immediate success of the business, and to its permanence, than all other elements combined, are those relating to vital appeal of subject matter and its artistry of treatment. Without both these, efficiency elsewhere represents just so much misapplied energy.

HEROES AND HEROINES

By Robert C. McElravy.

IT is not essential for the leading character of a story to be either a hero or a heroine. Thackeray took particular pains to specify that "Vanity Fair" was "a novel without a hero." Yet in a great majority of stories the action centers about a presumably strong-willed individual, either man or woman, whose heroic qualities enables them to rise above all manner of trials.

The hero or heroine is usually tested by the fires of circumstance and their fortitude is put on trial at every possible turn. Obstacles are meat and drink to these persons, for difficulties merely serve to bring out the strength that is in them. We want to see them constantly battle against the evils of life, and their manner of doing this is the thing that makes us follow their course with such interest. For many readers "Vanity Fair" would have been a much stronger novel if it had a hero or heroine listed among its characters; its great defect for some readers is that there is no character that awakens entire admiration and love.

The hero or heroine, if there is to be one, must be strong and valiant without being in any way prudish, and the skill with which a story manages this is perhaps the greatest measure of its worth. It is not easy to make the hero honest and fearless without making him a moral prig, and it is just as hard to make the heroine sweet and virtuous without turning her into an impossible creature.

But, to take a frank view of the situation, the average screen production does not err so much on the side of virtue as it does in the other extreme. One cannot help feeling that, while the hero should by all means be kept human and subject to the temptations that beset mankind, it would not hurt him sometimes to have a stronger moral fiber. In these days of genuine heroism, when personal courage and sacrifice is in the very air, certainly a greater exhibition of spirit on the part of leading characters in stories would be acceptable.

Two influences have operated to bring down the level of screen morale; one of these is the crook, or underworld, story and the other the cabaret story. Both of these are now happily passing into at least temporary eclipse, but they have had a devastating effect that is still visible in certain offerings. There are still many stories in which the hero fluctuates so continually between right and wrong that he ceases to command admiration, and others in which the heroine has but small reason for escaping the shame that threatens her.

To cite a couple of instances. In a recent five-reel subject the hero's father meets ruin in Wall Street at the hands of his financial rivals. The hero, for purposes of revenge, joins a gang of crooks and robs each of the financiers in turn, stealing personally in each instance vast quantities of jewels. He later reforms and returns some of the stolen goods, but even so, he has lost sympathy. Such plots as this are frequent in the films, and, while they "get by" with audiences, it is doubtful if they do much to make friends for the screen, for they are built up on false premises. There is nothing to justify the hero in turning thief because his father was crushed in Wall Street, and if there were it is scarcely the course a full-blooded hero would take.

In another story recently shown, the heroine, after wandering about the city of New York vainly looking for a job, decides to invest her last savings in a dinner at a big hotel. She orders the dinner, with an expensive cocktail included, and then again goes out on Broadway. She meets a married man, who has quarreled with his wife, and becomes his housekeeper. That the married man later got a divorce and married the heroine was simply a bit of luck for the latter, for she had chosen the easiest way practically without a struggle.

Weak heroes and heroines make weak stories. We all know how easy it is to do the wrong thing, but what the average observer craves in a story is the inspiration of seeing some valiant soul play the game with a high spirit. He need not always win, but at least a proper effort has been made.

No really strong story seeks to flaunt human frailty for its own sake. Stories about thieves have their place, and so has the story of regeneration. But to take a supposed hero and convert him into a common thief without reason is another thing, particularly if there is any hope of again restoring his first prestige.

It is not weakness, but resistance, in the face of temptation that commands admiration for the hero or heroine. To keep the leading character an individual of fine mettle in the face of almost overwhelming odds is the thing to strive for, and when this is successfully accomplished the story is not readily forgotten. Fortunately, for authors who shudder at the thought of being considered over-virtuous in their plots, the objectivity of the screen usually serves to tone down undue heroics.

FROM SCREEN TO STAGE

By Edward Weitzel.

STAGE dramatists that have become screen scenarioists are familiar figures in the motion picture field. Providers of plots who have reversed the transition and turned from the silent to the articulate stage are but few in number. To the best of the writer's knowledge Anthony Paul Kelly is the first scenario writer to make the change successfully, his spy play, "Three Faces East," having received the unanimous indorsement of the New York daily press and is now playing to crowded houses at the Cohan & Harris Theatre. The many friends of the playwright, in both branches of the amusement world, will join in the heartiest of congratulations over his well-deserved triumph, a triumph that will undoubtedly encourage other screen fictionists to try their luck at writing for the stage.

Such a result will be more far-reaching than appears at first glance.

In his construction of "Three Faces East" the author has brought more than an easily discerned trace of motion picture technic. The story is one in which the chief and almost only emotion aroused is curiosity, a keen and continually baffled desire to know the true names and nationalities of the two leading characters. The development proceeds with the uniform tempo of the screen, and, aside from a declamatory and long-drawn-out profession of German loyalty by one of the Kaiser's officers in the prologue, the performance is pitched in a subdued key that gives it the air of quiet intensity and apprehension best suited to stories of this class. Its treatment is sufficiently novel, as far as the stage is concerned, to add a new note to the spoken drama.

Both the stage and the screen are bound to advance by such an exchange of methods. Anthony Paul Kelly will be a better scenario writer by the experience gained as a stage dramatist, and his co-workers who follow his lead behind the footlights will receive a corresponding advance in the art of motion pictures.

Nashville Churchmen Continue Battle Against Showing of Sunday Pictures

Nashville, Tenn.

THE fight over Sunday movies is on again in Nashville. Some weeks ago an effort was made to introduce Sunday shows here for the benefit of the thousands of new citizens who have come to Nashville as the result of the establishment of the world's largest powder plant here, but Nashville's mayor, William Gupton, who was elected on a strict law-enforcement platform, flatly put his foot down on the proposition, and declared dramatically that Sunday movies should not run in Nashville if he and his police department could keep them from it.

On Sunday, August 11, the Knickerbocker gave a showing of a patriotic film and a free lecture by Chief Red Fox in the interest of navy recruiting and for the benefit of the soldiers' wool fund. The showing was under the auspices of the woman's division of the Council of National Defense and was approved by government war agencies in Nashville.

Following an advance notice in the press anti-Sunday openers got busy and called on the mayor and city commissioners. The mayor declared that he did not approve the showing of the picture on Sunday, but as it was for a patriotic cause and was under the auspices of the Council of National Defense, he did not see how he could conscientiously keep the Knickerbocker from opening.

Anti-Openers Hold Meeting.

The show was held without molestation from the police or other authorities, while at the same time a big union meeting was being held in Waverly place in opposition to the opening of any theatres in Nashville on Sunday for patriotic or other purposes. The anti-openers drafted a protest which was sent to the mayor, city commissioners and officers of the state and county council of national defense.

In enumerating the eight reasons why it is opposed to the Sunday showing of pictures it listed the following as the fifth: "We would rather our boys would go without protection from the cold as did Washington and his army at Valley Forge, than that it should be necessary to resort to such means as a desecration of God's day to procure articles necessary for their comfort."

Mayor Gupton has declared that he cannot oppose the opening of picture theatres on Sunday when the purpose is a patriotic one and under sanction of the council of defense. At the present no shows are booked for Sundays in the near future for patriotic purposes, but the opposition is losing no chance to put the gaff into Sunday movies whenever the opportunity presents itself.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Keep Things Spruce.

LAST Sunday we dropped into a neighborhood house just around the corner from the house. It was a Sunday matinee and Farrar in "The Woman God Forgot" had never been seen in that territory, yet the house was surprisingly empty, with 75 per cent. of the audience under twelve years of age. But there was a reason. The screen had been so badly painted that the last coating was peeling in several spots and the flaps had not even been removed. The side doors were kept open until the performance started, and when they were closed the work was done by a half-grown boy who sauntered down the aisle with his straw hat on the back of his head and pulled the doors shut with his foot to avoid taking his hands out of his pockets until it became absolutely necessary. The projection was poor and the light varied almost to a flicker at times, while over in one corner a pianist made dolefully thin music. It was depressing all through. A few blocks away is a house with none of the advantages of appearance and capacity, but there the show starts on time, there is good projection, and a loud-toned orchestral organ is used for the music. Usually it plays to big business even at the matinees with good average attractions. Which sort of house is yours? It pays to have good music and competent projection.

Watch For the Yellow Dog.

If you work it right you can make something more than a day's attraction of Universal's "The Yellow Dog." There is an actual Yellow Dog club, and by forming a branch in your town you can have an advertising organization working for you long after the picture has gone on. Give a special matinee for boys ten years and older only. Have them addressed by the local chief of police and other officials. You can round up the chief if you let the local paper in on the scheme. Have weekly meetings in the theater Saturday mornings when the members report their work for the week. Give them a couple of comedy reels from the regular program or commercial stuff. "The Yellow Dog" is something more than a motion picture. Make it so.

Signatures.

Here are minlatures of signatures used by houses through the country that will perhaps be suggestive to others who have not yet adopted a trademark for the house announcement. They represent the forms most generally used, and many of them should be familiar to you through their frequent appearance in this department, but here they are segregated from their advertisements and may be compared with each other. The Strand with the large capital letter is apt to be an awkward cut to use in layouts. The Strand with the scroll just below it is a little too fanciful. The reverse cut, showing a white letter on a black ground is largely favored, but it looks bad when the ink does not print up black. Of the reverse cuts, we think that for the Circle, Indianapolis, is one of the best. It works nicely into the black mass of a drawing and comes to be part of the design. Semi-script signatures, such as are shown for the Rialto and Lyric work well where the initial is such that it can be extended to hold the letters together. The Lyric is a very poor example because half of it is lost. At a pinch some unusual type face may be used, in connection with some distinguishing rule work, the latter not too ornamental. But it pays to have some sort of a signature, and it is worth the money to get a good one.

Contrasty.

Here are two advertisements from the same issue of an old Los Angelcs paper that go to prove that the most elaborate advertisements is not always the best. The Grauman advertisement is four sixteens and the Kinema four elevens. The Grauman advertisement is elaborately dressed, but the title is obscured by some Benday flyspecking and the title is lettered in between that and some Benday foliage, so that it has to be searched for. Most of the space is picture, and picture that does not tell much. On the other hand, the Kinema space is distinct and bold and the house information is in legible type as compared with the fancy lettering at the bottom of the other space. Less selling talk is needed, for the bill has been running above a week, but a selling line could have been run in just as well and could have been put where it could he read. "Pretty" advertisements are not always pulling advertisements, and if they are not, then space and art bills are wasted.

Looking Backward.

Monte Crews, of the Alamo, Fayette, Mo., sends in some programs and from one we lift this interesting reminiscence. Can you remember back to the first shows in your own town and draw the same parallel?

AN OLD FASHIONED TALK.

Instead of saying much about the shows lined up for the month of June we are going to call up to your mind your first picture show by relating our Impression of our first show. Years ago in Fayette there happened to be a street carnival. With this street carnival there was one tent which was pitched between Hotel Howard and the Carson Building on Second Main. This was Fayette's first picture show. We were just a small kid at the time, but our uncle was Mayor of Fayette and we had a pass to all shows. This happened to be our favorite and we stayed there most of the time. In fact, we came to know that show by heart. However, let's get back to the heginning from the time the man out front started to beat on the two big iron cylinders with a hammer. You heard the noise and came running. Then the "barker" informed you that the marvel of the age—the wonderful life like pictures—"pictures that actually moved," could be seen inside for the small price of a dime—the tenth part of a dollar etc. You paid your dime and entered. After much waiting there was a great hissing noise from some kind of contraption in the rear and there flickered on the screen in front "The Great Train Robbery." It started by showing the on-coming "Limited." And it was coming! Straight Ahead! The people In the front seats began to make a hasty exit. It was an exciting picture. It was 500 feet in length and took ten minutes to run. Everyone was pleased—well pleased. Now take your picture theater of today. You may go into a comfortable building built for pictures—have a comfortable seat. See pictures built into plays of from 5 to 8 thousand feet, requiring from an hour to fifteen minutes to two hours to run, with no waits between reels (because the Alamo has two motor driven machines). You may listen to the world's best music on a wonderful pipe organ, orchestra. If it is cold outside—the building is heated—if warm, the building is cooled with fans.

All in all, there is some difference between your first "movie" and your latest photo-play. And the price was only a dime, while now it is only a few cents more. The next time you feel like complaining—just stop and remember.

THANK YOU.

The program is efficiently planned, with a half page of talk for the house, and a time table of the railroad trains and the meeting dates of the various lodges in town. Following the list of meeting nights is the line: "If your husband goes to his lodge on these nights you can find a seat at the Alamo." The middle pages carry the program, and it reads well, even if it does ungallantly refer to Mabel Normand as "Fatty Arbuckle's old side kick in a six reel comedy drama of her own." And here is another extract from the same program that anyone can copy with profit, for it is even with the times:

IS THERE SOME ONE IN FRANCE DEAR TO YOU?

Maybe it's your boy, your brother, or your best friend—possibly your sweetheart. Then would you like to do your duty by him? If it's your boy, you are his mother, would he not like to know that the folks back home were taking his absence as well as they could? He goes to the picture show "over there" at the Y. M. C. A. Uncle Sam says it's good for him—gets his mind off his troubles—for you know "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy." If it's good for him, it's good for you. We know of one mother who goes every night to the show. She wants to get interested in other things for the recreation it gives her mind. We know of this case in particular for it's our mother. She's got a boy in the service—our brother. He doesn't want her to sit at home. He wants her to keep herself well—not to worry. You know what worry will do. These boys are coming back some day and when they do they want to see very little change in you. They, no doubt, would like to know you are going to the show—getting your mind off your worries. If your show manager has any sense at all he's giving you shows of the right sort—the kind that will get you interested. Then we say to you, look at our offerings and see if the largest majority are not comedies and comedy dramas. So when you write to the boy "over there" tell him "We go to the Alamo every night and see———." Then tell him what you see. He's interested in anything you are. Send him a program or let us. We're interested in him—and so is he in us. He's one of our friends and we miss him. We want him back when his job is done. We'll be glad to see him—he'll be glad to see the Alamo. So do your duty by the boy. Keep well—don't worry. Come see the Alamo shows—we'll try our best to help you.

THANK YOU.

This can be changed to fit your house and it should make business for you, and at the same time help those who come to forget their sorrows, but get the sort of bill that will ensure that result.

An Ideal Arrangement.

Carrol E. King, who started in as manager of the Johnsonia, Leesburg, Ohio, last winter, is now editor of the Citizen, as well. Naturally Manager King helps Editor King by taking ample space in the paper, and so Editor King helps Manager King by letting him write a column or so of notes and always sees that he gets on the editorial page next to pure reading matter. The advertisements run three columns, one for each day of showing, and drop from seven to nine inches with a greater display for an extra special. The house shows but three days a week, with a matinee only every other week, when a special feature is used. It seems to us that this being the case, Mr. King could sell his Thursday matinee to the merchants for a Farmer's Matinee and not only show a profit but help trade in the town. It has been so long since mention has been made of the Farmer's Matinees that, perhaps, others may be interested. The merchants in town are induced to combine to buy the house. Each is given his pro-rata share of tickets, good only for the matinee, which he sends to his rural trade only, getting the farmers in to do their shopping on Thursday instead of Saturday, and evening up the rush. We think it would pay Mr. King to state his prices instead of merely announcing "regular prices," since the Citizen seems to have a county circulation.

Growing.

L. W. Barclay, of the Grand Amusement Co., Johnstown, Pa., sends in some samples and adds that the Nemo will be shut down to permit a balcony to be built, adding materially to the capacity of this house, which already seats 1,000. Soon, except in the smaller towns, the 1,500 house will be as standard as the 300 house used to be, and the added capacity permits more to be done in the way of advertising and entertainment. We like the way Mr. Barclay advertises the Fox reissues. He makes capital of the fact that they have been reissued. We think that Hall Caine's name should have gone to black type, for there are one that in the lower example gives a nice display for both film title and house signature. The dotted leader should have not been used with the underline rule for the prices, since the rule performs the same service as the leader and does it more effectively.

Gosh! Gosh Again!

Evidently the Grand Opera House, Federalsburg, Md., does not read this department on superlatives, for, in a recent throwaway, it remarks:

> Those who saw Miss Ferguson in her last Artcraft production will remember her as an actress of marvelous dramatic ability as well as being considered the most beautiful woman in the world.

That's giving a pretty large order and doubtless there will be found others to dispute this claim to the beauty title. Seriously, this is bad, even for small town publicity. Even the yaps will not fall for such spreading claims. It is better to talk conservatively and to be believed.

Play Up the Title.

Sometimes the matter of layout seems to rise superior to the prominence given the title. In an eagerness to get in some selling talk, the Princess, St. Paul, seems to have overlooked the matter of title, as shown in this cut. The idea seems to have been to balance the two panels at the top of the display, but in doing this the title has been overshadowed and we think that a bold display of the title would have drawn more than "A most astounding photodrama." Of the four panels the only one of value is that announcing that no battle scenes are shown, for the public is fed up on faked battle scenes. The other three lines have no real value and the omission of the lower panels would have permitted the better display of the title in an extended letter. Good layouts are desirable, but not when they are permitted to crowd the title, for the title is supposed to be a better selling point than "See the big surprise finish."

In Two Colors.

A. L. Middleton, of the Queen, De Queen, Ark., got out a two-color edition of his house organ for "Over the Top" and put that picture over the top. But even better is part of an editorial on going to the pictures. You can write a new lead and use it yourself.

> Sure, some German sympathizers would like to see motion picture shows closed because it would cut the U. S. Government out of some hundred million dollars revenue with which to build more aircraft and ships and guns; because the lack of good, wholesome entertainment would soon bring over the civilian population a melancholy disposition; they would soon be groping around with the blues and long faces; and there would be no means of visualizing the dastardly work of the Huns; no patriotic pictures to wake us up and show us where we stand.
> Ah, yes! A picture show is an awful thing in a town to hear a German spy or a person who has swallowed German propaganda tell it; or a poor, ignorant fellow who wants to do right but don't know how; never sees a picture show and don't know what he is talking about, or perchance some one who has always been admitted free, but now has to pay the war tax or stay out. Awful! Awful!

You cannot do too much to establish in the minds of your patrons the fact that theater going is a patriotic necessity and not a war-time luxury. Start in now before the new tax is imposed to be passed along to the public.

Talking to Some Purpose.

W. T. Howley, of the Star, Concord, N. H., in sending in a weekly program, remarks:

> We're not so very old about this publishing business, but you talk so blamed much about weekly program I decided to give it a whirl. * * * The first edition was 2,000, but they demanded 5,500 last week.

Precisely why we talk about getting out a good program. It makes interest that makes business, and it pays better than any other form of advertising that we know. Here is an issue that has nearly trebled its circulation in four weeks and yet it is only a 6 by 9 four-pager. It is not merely because it is a house organ, but because it is a good one. Mr. Howley is not merely cutting out stuff to fill up four pages. He is writing readable stuff. It's interesting even if you do not live in Concord, and already it carries three trade advertisements and a "want" column that carries four bona-fide advertisements. If Mr. Howley will keep on as he has begun he will work it into an eight-pager that will pay, even in these days of costly white paper and expensive printing. But we think he grinned when he asked for a criticism. We bet he knows darned well how good it is, both for matter and typography.

Tying Up.

Here's a good example of tying up to national advertising. The three sixteens on the right inserted by Paramount and the four thirteens on

From Council Bluffs.

From P. J. Throp, Council Bluffs, Iowa, we have the following:

> We are using 220-volt three-wire system. Get strong, white light. Project 13½-foot picture at 103 inches on Gardiner Velvet Gold Fiber screen, using 5½ E. F. Gundlach Manhattan lens, 2½-inch diameter and 6.5 and 7.5 condensers set 15 inches from aperture. Projectors are Power's 6-B, recently installed. Am having some trouble with shutter with regard to flicker. Will you kindly give me some pointers as to latter, also why figures on screen seem to move across with a jerky motion? Have noticed this latter in several recent pictures. Do you advise trying to decorate stage around screen, as some are attempting to do? Is not the black frame, with as little light as possible in front end of auditorium, best?

Had you told me your amperage I could have checked up your lens system and advised as to its correctness from the light-conservation standpoint. As to shutter, you should set it at as nearly as possible the correct distance from lens, and then reduce its main blade to least possible width, as directed in detail (to repeat it here would take pages) in Handbook. If shutter cannot be put at dissolving point, then remove same from shaft and hold white sheet of paper over lens. If there is a distinct outline of brilliant light, with weak light around, then mark around brilliant light and cut metal stop for lens, which will just let the brilliant light pass. This is of little value, however, unless it will act to reduce lens opening. The weak light outside the center spot is of some value in screen brilliancy, but on the other hand it to some extent injures definition of picture. If you can thus reduce the lens diameter without cutting into center beam, you can probably then trim down main shutter blade and get a better proportioned shutter, thus reducing flicker. Would advise study of these matters in Handbook. Study the lens system and the Shutter, latter under General Machine Instructions, pages 469 to 476, inclusive. If I rightly understand you it is figures moving directly across the scene. The cause is too-slow camera speed or too-fast movement by the actor, or both. The effect is that the figure moves too far between photographs, in the taking, and when it comes to reproduction the result is visible to the audience because the movement is too great to blend one photograph into the next perfectly. In my opinion there is no better result possible than is given by the black screen setting, with no light near screen. Anything near the screen which is visible simply serves to distract the eye and divide the attention to the detriment of the picture. Some exceptional men, such as Rothapfel, are able to create such a general effect that the distraction from the photoplay is compensated for, or more than compensated for, but I have very seldom found a theatre with stage decorations which I thought gave the general effect equal to the dark setting. Of course we freely grant that while the lights are on the effect of stage decorations is excellent, but the audience attends the motion picture theatre for just two things, viz.: the photoplay and the music. It does NOT pay an admission to look at stage settings, and unless these settings produce an amusement value sufficient to offset their detraction from the screen production they are a detriment instead of a benefit.

Two-Signal Change-Over Signal.

Edward W. Smith, Mitchell, S. D., says:

> Have been constant reader of Projection Department for several years, and most certainly have profited therefrom. Have all your handbooks and a set of Hawkins, Hallberg's Motion Picture Electricity and Hawkins Electrical Dictionary, which latter is great help in connection with the other works. Am projecting a 16-foot picture at 128 feet, using two Power's 6-As. Use 80 amperes A. C. Results fair. Notice you condemn all change-over signals because of only one signal. (No, I have not condemned them for that cause. Merely said, and still say, that a two-signal device would be much better, provided it be in practical form. Ed.) Am enclosing sketch of a device I am using, which gives two signals one about 50 feet, and another about five feet from end of film, which latter is about average length of tail-pieces in use now. You will probably have to guess at the meaning as expressed in my drawing. Enclosed find money for both question booklets.

I am afraid your drawing leaves something to be desired. Apparently you have two arms, and two rollers running on the film, so arranged that contact is made to ring a buzzer at different times. I am not condemning any device or anyone's ideas; just setting forth my views. First, in order to give full service there must be two signals, one for lamp-lighting and one for actual change-over. These two signals must be positive in their action, else they would be worse than useless. They must be certain to work at the distance from end they are presumed to work. These signals must be of such nature that there will be no danger from fire. This is imperative. Rollers running on the film must perforce run on the emulsion side, and that is not good, especially with first-run film. With first-run there is possibility of serious damage. If rollers are to be used they should by all means be ball-bearing and have a very soft rubber face. This combination would, I think, be sure to roll, not stick and slide, in which latter event they might, especially with first-run films, accumulate deposits and seriously injure, if not ruin films. You may say, "mine never did any damage." You mean it never did any damage which you could see. But maybe if every one used them there would be a very different tale to tell. One device may do damage imperceptible to the eye, just as one worn sprocket, or one too-tight tension does, but continued every day the damage becomes a serious matter. To date, this department has seen no device for change-over to which it felt it could give its unqualified approval.

Five Hundred Volt Current.

T. H. Luneman, Madison, Wisconsin, asks:

> Can we safely use 500-volt current in our arc lights and where can we obtain the necessary equipment? At present we are using A. C. and have very bad flicker in picture. Project a 14-foot picture. Use one Ft. Wayne compensarc and one Power's inductor. Have two brand new Simplex projectors. If unable to advise as to how we may use 500-volt current direct, can you aid us in eliminating flicker? Would appreciate any suggestions that you may give.

From your letter I take it your 500-volt current is D. C., though that is an unimportant detail. You cannot use it direct, if for no other reason than that it would be very dangerous to the projectionist. You can, however, use it by means of a 500-volt motor and a 60 or 70-volt generator, or by means of a motor generator set with motor and wound for 500 volts. Such apparatus may be had from any manufacturer of motor generator sets, and will work very well indeed, provided the projectionist use ordinary caution and horse sense in handling the motor, which same he will do after he gets just one good "jolt" from it. Unless I be in error the United Theatre Equipment Corporation (see their advertisement) carries such a set in stock. As to the flicker you now have you have not told me the cycle of the current. If it is 30-cycle or less you cannot get rid of a flicker which is inherent in the current itself, due to low frequency. If it is 60-cycle current the trouble lies in your shutter, which is poorly proportioned and most likely cannot be brought to very satisfactory proportions because you are using a short focal length lens—so short that the shutter position probably comes inside the lens barrel. These matters are of such nature that it would require pages to deal with them in detail. Would suggest that you get (if you have not one already) a Handbook and study "The Revolving Shutter," pages 469 to 476, inclusive; also Figure 18 and text which goes with it on page 146. In fact, study the whole subject matter, pages 90 to 192, very closely. With a 14-foot picture and short throw maybe it might pay you to investigate the Mazda projection proposition. It is also possible that your trouble is not flicker at all, but a flashing of the light, due to synchronism of a three-blade shutter with one side of the alternations. If what I have said does not seem to fit please send FULL details of entire optical system, as follows: Cycle and amperage of current; pattern of revolving shutter; distance from apex of one condensing lens to other; distance, center of condenser to aperture; distance from lens barrel to revolving shutter; diameter of projection lens; focal length of condensing lenses and whether plano convex or meniscus bi-convex. Use National A. C. White Special or Speer Alterno carbons for A. C.

Can Dig It Out.

F. L. Rinehart, Newport Beach, California, sends 40 cents for question booklets and says:

I wish to thank you for the information with regard to the flicker due to synchronism with A. C. Your advice has made it easy for me to keep out of step with it, and I find that at a speed of 62 or 63 R. P. M. am able to maintain a practically flickerless screen. In fact it would be hard to tell if the machine was running or stationary, only, of course, it is somewhat darker when shutter is revolving. I remember a long time ago reading of your description of the Baird machine, where you stated that at a speed of 65 it produced the best results, but I presume that was with D. C. It would seem that at 62 or 63 turns to the minute it is farther away from the current alternations than at any other speed, being 24 above and 24 below respectively of the 3,000 dark periods per minute in the 50-cycle current, but as to that I don't know, except that it works better at the speeds mentioned. At 60 turns to the minute, which means 60 feet I guess, it develops much flicker and seems too slow to suit the action of the picture. In fact it is none too fast at 62 or 63, but better a trifle slow than faster with flicker. Seems like whenever I get stuck I can dig out the answer in some of your articles in the World, which I have always kept, or from the Handbook. I use a 4¾-inch lens, with a 60-foot throw, which made it necessary to move the shutter almost to the extreme end of the shaft in order to cut the light where it crosses, or converges; also the best focus from the lamp to the aperture is with the lamp house at the extreme back of the stand. Some of the boys think this an abnormal adjustment for the conditions. The condensers are 6½ and 7½ concave-convex in the back, plano-convex in front.

Had you told me your amperage I could have told you what condensers you should have, what the distance from condenser to aperture should be and what your projection lens diameter ought to be. All these are based on amperage. Your adjustments are not necessarily abnormal. Many a projectionist who would criticise your adjustments might discover that it is his own which are abnormal. A very large number of projector optical adjustments in use today are abnormal, and causing great loss of light.

Intermittent Lubrication.

C. O. Smith, Fort Wayne, Indiana, says:

Will now make my debut in the department by making the following inquiry: As you know, I have one Simplex and one Power's 6-B. The boys told me to use light oil in the Simplex intermittent. Why is this? I use Mobile B in the Power's intermittent, and for light oil use Elite Dynamo, a very light and a very good generator oil. I use the light oil on the Power's, except its intermittent oil well, and on the Simplex, including the oil well. Is that all right? Will very much appreciate an answer; also wish to thank you for the service you rendered projectionists and the industry in Washington recently.

As to the oil, for certain mechanical reasons I would myself prefer a somewhat lighter oil in the Simplex oil well than in the Power's oil well. While new there would be no difference in the two, and in so far as lubrication goes there would never be. However, the Power's intermittent parts are much heavier than are those of the Simplex, hence will stand a heavier lubricant and the heavy oil serves an excellent purpose in deadening any click there may be. What you are doing now is all right.

The primary office of oil is to form a film between moving parts so that the metal of one part does not touch the metal of the other part. Any good oil will do this. Certain grades of lubricant are suited to certain classes of service, however, and will perform that service better, even though basically their actual lubricating qualities may be much the same. Mobile B is excellent for Power's intermittent oil well. The other oil is good for the Simplex oil well and for general lubrication.

Stereoscopic Pictures.

H. R. Kiessig, Berkeley, California, whom I suspect is working on something stereoscopic, says:

Would like to know what has been done in the way of developing stereoscopic motion picture projection.

So for as I know, just nothing—that is is to say, in the way of actual, commercially practical accomplishment. True, we may at any time have excellent stereoscopic motion pictures if we make films in a certain way and provide each one of the audience with spectacles made for the purpose. There have been many attempts at stereoscopic motion pictures, but to date they have all fallen by the wayside when it comes to commercial practicability. Some of these were described, from time to time, in the Moving Picture World, but it would be an almost impossible task to dig out the various articles now. There was one very promising plan shown me in Chicago, tow or three years ago, or maybe it was four. The thing loked reasonable on the face of it, but we never heard of it afterward, so I suppose it went the way of them all at the final atest. This particular thing was described in the account of my visit to Chicago at the time. I think likely the patent office would be your only comprehensive source of possible information on stereoscopic projection inventions.

A Further Denial.

Ralph Freeman, Business Manager Local Union 171, Pittsburgh, Pa., writes at some length denying that the union committee went to Washington asking that projectionists be declared non-essential. He ends with: "I know you have made a mistake in getting the statements of the two committees mixed. I have done the best I could for my organization and still have a clear conscience and a clean record. I hope you will see your mistake and the justice done Local 171, Brother James Sipe and myself."

If there is any error, Brother Freeman, it was caused by the company, yourself and Brother Swipe were in. Certainly Colonel Warren understood the Pittsburgh committee, which consisted, as I understand it, of partly exhibitors and partly projectionists, to make the statement accredited to them in my first article. Mixed committees of this kind are, it seems to me, not to be commended. The thing has ended well and we will accept your statement as made. Next time take my advice and go as a committee of projectionists, then there will be no possible chance of mixup.

Wants Terminals Changed.

James H. Pooley, Toledo, Ohio, sends sample of wire terminal and says:

Received sample of Curban wire terminal recently, and would like to make a few remarks concerning it and terminals in general. The Curban looks like a good terminal, but like all others it is designed for use with one size wire only. I fail to understand the line of reasoning of a man who makes one size of terminal for three sizes of wire. It is a cast iron cinch that if one size is a perfect fit, the others won't be. I will close with best wishes to yourself and our department.

Whether or no the Curban is made for more than one size wire I do not know The remarks of brother Pooley are respectfully referred to makers of terminals for consideration.

Cannot Be Done.

Ray C. Smith, Chicago, Illinois, says:

Am in trouble as to right condensers to select for local conditions. Have Third Edition of Handbook, which makes the matching up of the lens system very simple, but what I want to know is: If I were to set up two outfits, select the projection lenses desired and, not having a handbook, attempt to select the proper condensing lenses, how would I go about it? What formula would I use for deciding the condenser focal length, projection lens diameter and back focus being known?

I am afraid you have not been keeping up with the work of this department, Brother Smith. We are moving ahead in knowledge all the time. The handbook tables and data were the best we had at that time, and represented a great advance over pure guess work, which was absolutely all we had to go by before the publication of that data. But we have advanced still further since then. The chart published in March 17, 1917, issue superseded the handbook tables, and should have been "tipped" into your handbook when published. We now have in hand a revision of all data, bringing it up to date, and a little later will have something of very great value to projectionists, in the shape of a chart designed for framing for the projection room walls. This chart will show, at a glance, the necessary condenser lenses, both plano convex and meniscus bi-convex, distance from aperture and diameter of projection lens. This data is by Brother John Griffith, President Local Union 273, New Haven, Conn., whom you all know.

Condenser combinations are based on amperage used. There is no formula by the use of which you can figure out combinations for any condition, or at least I know of none. Projection lens diameter is determined by the distance of condenser from aperture and back focus of projection lens, and back focus of projection lens is determined by E. F. of the lens and its construction, some projection lenses of a given E. F. having much longer B. F. than others. It is all a very complicated matter and the tables and charts are the only thing I know of which the projectionist can use successfully. A trained optician might be able to give correct data for a projector lens system, but I don't believe he could adapt his data to the local conditions.

Raise in Prices Indicated.

Talk of higher prices for the downtown Cincinnati theatres which pay for first-run pictures is more persistent than ever, and it is pretty certain that before the coming fall season gets into full swing a concerted move in this direction will be made, at least by those houses which are still sticking to the ten-cent charge established years ago. It is of course well known among exhibitors that good pictures are costing more in rentals than ever before, and that wages to employes, as well as other items of expense, are much higher than ever; and yet, as far as Cincinnati is concerned, admission prices are just about the same as they were several years ago.

Commenting on this fact, I. Libson, who manages three leading downtown photoplay houses, as well as being interested in several elsewhere, pointed out this his companies have already raised their prices, as a matter of necessity, in Dayton, Columbus, Louisville and Pittsburgh, and while he did not state that similar action would be taken in Cincinntai, he indicated as much.

"Official War Review No. 8" (Pathe).

A NUMBER of important subjects come in for exploitation in this informing issuc. The opening scenes picture prominent aviators and their machines. Fighting along the upper Piava in the Monte Grappa region is a fine featurc, also the work of the British fleet in conveying troops across the English Channel. Another feature is the transportation of food to the French front.

"The Salamander's Secrets Revealed" (Universal).

One of the interesting subjects shown in the 86th issue of the Screen Magazine gives us a fine idea of the life and habits of the salamander. The scenes of the picture were taken under water at the New York City Zoological Park. The various stages of the life of this animal are shown in illuminative close-ups.

"Outwitting the Hun" (Universal).

The making of optical lenses the American way is illustrated in the 86th issue of the Screen Magazine. Once upon a time Germany bluffed us into believing that only she could manufacture the perfect lens. Since being thrown on our own resources we have discovered ourselves in a great many ways, and one of the things we have learned is that we can make optical lenses superior to those formerly made by the Hun. The scenes shown in the picture give a detailed idea of how they are made.

HOW SILVER IS MINED IN MEXICO.

Educational Films Corporation of America Presents Interesting Subject at Rialto.

AMONG the numerous interesting things that we have learned about Mexico by means of the screen none has been more instructive than the Educational Film Corporation of America's picture, one of the "Mexico Today" series we believe, entitled "In the Silver Country." This film was exhibited at the Rialto Theatre, New York City, during the week of August 11, and was much appreciated.

The scenes of the picture were photographed in Pachuca, Mexico. At Velasco, near by, silver was discovered in 1524, and it has been mined in ways more or less primitive until the entry of modern methods brought in with foreign capital. Here they are now using the most modern means in extracting the silver from the rock. As it is taken from the mines it is conveyed to the crusher by electric power. Close-ups of the stamp mill are interesting. There are also close-range views of the machines which separate the metal dust from the sand. The metal dust is then seen being mixed with cyanide, which further clears it of the dross, and after being left to settle in vats the liquid is poured off and the silver is placed on jigging tables. Later there is the melting of the metal and the converting of it into ingots. It is interesting to note that it takes five tons of rock to produce one shovelful of bullion

RIVOLI SHOWS AMERICAN TROOPS.

Films Give a Good Idea of the Splendid Manner in Which the French Entertain Our Soldiers.

DURING the week of August 11 the Rivoli Theatre, New York City, exhibited some scenes photographed by the Cinematographic Division of the French Army showing the enjoyable times which our soldier boys in France have when they are on furlough. Some of the scenes were take at Aix les Bains, where they were escorted by pretty French girls and their brothers on a sight-seeing expedition. One of the show places was the castle of the Duke of Savoy, but the most delightful experience was a ride by cable car up Mount Renard. Arrived at the summit an excellent view of the Alps can be had. Here they sported about in the snow and indulged in a good old American snow-ball fight.

Viewing these pictures one cannot fail to feel a sense of deep appreciation to the French people who are not too busy nursing their own troubles to try to keep our fighters in good spirits.

THE BIG LEAGUERS IN ACTION

Marty McHale Shows Up at Rivoli with Third of Baseball Series Introducing Famous Stars.

WHILE we take off our hats to Marty McHale for thinking of giving us a series of pictures wherein we are privileged to become more intimately acquainted with the personalities of the famous baseball stars we have to admit that "Bugs" Baer has helped him out considerably in the game of making a good impression. It was for "Bugs" Baer, of the New York Evening World, to "lamp" the humor of the situation and turn it over to us in subtitle.

The third of the series shown at the Rivoli the week of August 11 introduces among others Ed. Walsh, George Stallings and Grover Cleveland Alexander, who brought the nice little sum of $75,000 when sold to the Cubs.

The unique method of disposing of the house "en bloc," which has proved so successful during the engagement of "America's Answer," the official War Film at the George M. The season at these houses opened August 12, after an intensive campaign by special representatives of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, under the direction of Ryerson Ritchie, chief of the community section.

In "18 to 45" William Fox Has Timely Story of Draft

ANTICIPATING the action of Congress on the bill, which was passed the other day, extending the draft ages from 18 to 45, William Fox has just completed a feature length subject entitled "18 to 45," which is declared to be an accurate and appealing story of the draft. The production was made under the direction of R. A. Walsh, who has made many of the big Fox pictures. It is stated that Mr. Walsh has been working upon this subject for several months after it first became apparent that there would be a material increase in the scope of the draft law.

The picture is now ready for release except as regards the completion of a few laboratory details, and contracts are being accepted at branch offices on a basis of independent bookings.

It is pointed out by the Fox company that the timeliness of this production will be the important advertising feature from the standpoint of the exhibitor. The subject has not yet been shown to reviewers, but Fox officials declare that "It is a big patriotic masterpiece that emphasizes the necessity of the draft and points the opportunity it affords to the whole population of the nation. It is a picture that will inspire patriotism, encourage optimism and powerfully fan the leaping, crackling flames of American democracy. "18 to 45" is a picture that will interest every exhibitor personally and that will have the strong and dominating appeal of individual interest to every human being, rich or poor, sick or well, who lives under the protection of the Stars and Stripes. It is a definite and valuable contribution on the part of the motion picture industry to the great work now in progress for the freedom of the world and the triumph of liberty."

By special arrangement with the Treasury Department, Douglas Fairbanks is to make a propaganda film, the proceeds of which will be given to the American Red Cross. It also will contain a Fourth Liberty Loan message, thereby killing two birds with one stone. A small rental will be asked the exhibitors for the use of this Fairbanks propaganda picture, suggested by an official in Washington, and to be handled absolutely independent of all other Liberty Loan trailers. The Fairbanks picture will be almost a thousand feet in length. It is laid in a spectacular setting, and deals with the biggest question of the day.

Marshal Neilan Signs Up with Garson as Supervising Director of Production

MARSHALL NEILAN has signed a long-term contract with Harry Garson, as supervising director of all the productions to be made under Mr. Garson's management. This means that the services of one of the best directors in the country comes into the Garson camp at a time when the name of Garson is becoming known as a producer. Besides Clara Kimball Young, who is making eight pictures a year, Blanche Sweet has cast her talents and fortunes under the Garson banner, and will make six pictures this coming year under his management.

Mr. Neilan will supervise the direction of both Miss Young's and Miss Sweet's productions, having entire charge. In addition to this Mr. Neilan will personally direct Miss Sweet in her next picture "The Unpardonable Sin," by Rupert Hughes, a story which recently ran as a serial in a magazine and which has just been published in book form by Harper Brothers.

Miss Sweet has left for California to begin work on this picture, having been in New York for three weeks purchasing gowns. While here Miss Sweet saw her first picture under Mr. Garson's management, "The Hushed Hour," which she finished before leaving California for the East.

Mr. Neilan is best known for his high grade artistic work in many productions which have taken their place in the first ranks of filmdom. His most recent productions are "Stella Maris," "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," and "Amarilly of Clothes Line Alley," Pickford vehicles; Bret Harte's "Melisse," and "The Little Princess." Stars directed by him have been George M. Cohan, in "Hit the Trail Holliday," Elsie Ferguson in "Hearts of the Wild," and Marguerite Clark in "Out of a Clear Sky," "Three Men in a Boat," and Mary Pickford.

Mr. Neilan is classed as a "top-notch, sure fire" director, as his long line of successes easily indicates. It has been his ambition to make pictures independently, where he could give full sway to his artistic tastes without being hampered. With Garson "Mickey" has made just the sort of a connection for which he has been in search, for not only will he have complete charge of productions, but he will also have a voice in the material to be used by the Garson stars, and will have unlimited finances to carry out the Neilan ideas. Mr. Neilan will leave for the Coast shortly.

Duprez Engaged by World.

World Pictures has just engaged Charles J. Duprez, who for nine years has been with Brown Brothers, as publicity photographer. Mr. Duprez in his new capacity will have charge of the taking of unconventional photos of stars and studio scenes to be sent to fan publications, newspapers, etc. In a desultory way the World has been doing this work for some time, but from now on will lay special stress on this interesting accessory of publicity work.

His home is in Bayonne, N. J., where he is well known as a former laboratory man for several film companies.

A letter dated July 26 was also received from young Simone himself, in which he gives a flash of his experience. In it he wrote:

"I am out of the fighting game—a bullet in the groin did the trick. They got me, but, oh, how we are getting them! The good old Yankee smile and spirit is aiding us in driving them in the biggest drive like cattle could ever be driven. It's great to see them run for all they are worth and hollering loudly, 'Kamerad! Kamerad!' Wounded, but for a worthy cause. Don't worry."

BRUNTON IN NEW YORK.

Robert H. Brunton, general manager of the Brunton Studios in Los Angeles, is in New York, where he was called by wire to confer with a number of producers and to complete details to the arrangements that will result in a number of big productions being taken to the west coast.

Mr. Brunton says that the Brunton plant on Melrose avenue, in Los Angeles, is large enough to take care of any number of film organizations and that every advantage and facility for the staging of the most elaborate productions can be found at the plant.

Mr. Brunton will also look after the interests of Paralta Plays, Inc., and enjoy a get-together meeting with Benjamin B. Hampton while he is in the east.

As a child her voice gave promise of what it is today.
She cried in soprano.
Like many other singers she captured Europe first.
Then she came to the Metropolitan in New York.
Her favorite ballad is Nevin's "Mighty Lak a Rose."
She loves everything that's blue.
Her favorite river is the Blue Danube.
That is the shade which most nearly matches her limpid eyes.
She is fond of tea, and prefers Blue Oolong.
She likes all simple food, blue salads particularly.
Her ambition is to continue work forever.
She adores the plaudits of the multitude.
Without them she is blue.
Her days are laid out with the accuracy of a railroad timetable under government control.
Never does she allow her maid to touch her hair, preferring to arrange it herself.
The wave is natural, as with the ocean blue.
When she sings she never strikes a blue note.
The novels and poetry of John Galsworthy delight her.
The mimeographing of Dwight Perrin, ditto.
Her fad is blue shoes.
She never appears in public wearing the same blue shoes twice.
Ice cream and baseball she loves, and American Blueties with long stems.
She will not tolerate women who are not fair and free from jealousy.
Consequently, she tolerates very few.
All her letters she answers herself.
She carries on a correspondence with a small boy who will not call her Geraldine because it sounds too much like jelly bean.
She revels in gorgeous clothes, and fittings never tire her.
Nothing does, in fact, except people who are slow to reach a point in mimeographing.

The Eloquence of Silence.

"Volumes might be written about an audience's soul," says Maurice Tourneur. "The mute way they express their minds, the electric currents of sympathy, antipathy or indifference which hovers over their heads, if you are an author, an actor or a director seated in the dark in the midst of this silent jury your heart beats faster, your thoughts go jumping, and a single slip or a bad subtitle is enough to whiten your hair."

General Film is distributing the Red Cross issue, and John Hammell gave it a good start-off in vaudeville.

Oh! Look! A Japanese Contrib.

Since becoming a householder, Bennie Zeidman, the well known propounder of Fairbanks' productions, in company with Harry Havens, trade review representative in Los Angeles, has acquired a Japanese culinary expert who caters to the appetites of the two bungalowists and their guests. Mr. Oki, the gentleman in question, when interviewed recently, remarked:

"From observings I note facts following: Mr. Zeidman are greatest film magnet, attracting much of company who eat largely and in refined manners. Mr. Haven are decorously delighted in obtaining from film gent and lady much of publicity dopes. Mr. Ziedman are companionable with Bull Montana, largely gent with extra collar sizes. Also with Doug, who are rapid young gent with wide smiling capacity and much leaping. Filming industry in infantry as yet but futurity winner. Banzai!"

High Power Sport Marks Power Plant Annual Outing.

(Reported by G. Warren Landon.)

IT cost a pot of money, but it was worth it. "It" being the annual outing of the Cameragraph Club of the Nicholas Power Co. Despite the advertising THE RAMBLER has given it, New Jersey has to stand for much, and an extra burden was put upon its shoulders in the town of Fairfield, where this crime was committed on Sunday, August 18.

Be it known that the Cameragraph Club is composed of the various factory heads of the Nicholas Power Company. Just once a year they do something like this—and then go out and talk about it.

It was a fine day. There wasn't a cloud in the sky—then, and they met at the Hoboken ferry at ten o'clock. In fact they were "well met," being over one hundred strong, including wives, sweethearts, and other fellows' sisters.

Fairfield has lots of things in it, among them a fine, large inoffensive grove, with a hotel, orchard, and by-products. Arrived, our handsome heroes and brave heroines took to refreshments like the proverbial duck, and then to a few games.

Came dinner time, when men and women bravely bit their bit through a fine course dinner, and then they started in on games in earnest. You say woman doesn't do her share in a contest? She contests everything that ever happens. Lookit!

First (100-yard dash), won by Mrs. Boos. First (potato race), won by Mrs. Stawicki. Second (potato race), won by Mrs. Lazeski. First (needle race), won by Mrs. Elwood. Second (needle race), won by Mrs. Till. 100-yard dash won by Mrs. Moser.

Hooray! Votes for Women!

Mere man took part in the following:

Running broad-jump, won by Mr. Tulak; half-mile walk, won by Mr. Bower; high jump, won by Mr. Julius; shoe race, won by Mr. Rigger; hop, step and jump, won by Mr. Wickerheimer; three-legged race, won by Mr. Dojahn; 200-yard race, won by Mr. Lang; 100-yard dash, won by Mr. Kron; 100-yard hop, won by Mr. Horst; 50-yard blindfolded walk, won by Mr. Ruloff.

Also there was a drawing for glove, bat and ball. They were won in the order named by Masters Reese, Elwood and Uhlemann. And that's all—except the ball game. Except the ball game.

Base ball is the national game, sometimes it is a calamity. This game was calamitous. It was composed (only it wasn't) of two sides (not nines) called the Intermittent Movements and the Loop Setters.

The Intermittent Movements moved all the time, and the Loop Setters sat about all the time. When the game was over each side claimed the victory, and, as there was no scorer, each received it. Like 'Gene Fields poem of "The Gingham Dog and the Calico Cat," each ate the other up.

Notes of the Game.

Edward Earl was very busy 'round third base telling everybody how to play the game.

Mr. Uhlemann made a home run. He promptly walked away with the bat, and, as the ball was lost, some one stated that the bat had a nail in the end of it.

Will C. Smith made a great hit because he made two. As there was no umpire he managed to horn in with two runs, and then at once started for Washington to attend a meeting concerning the essentiality of motion pictures.

Players were continually being benched, presumably because that is where they kept "it" (meaning "stone fence").

After both sides had won they had some more, and then some dancing and then home.

One of the crew was asked if they had the whole place to themselves. He replied, "No, the police reserves were there."

It only remains to say that all reached home safely, sadder and wiser. They left Fairfield in the same condition.

How Terry Ramsay Meets Our Ideas of "Good Stuff."

EDNA GOODRICH, who looks better on horseback and rides more than any other actress in the films, has just added to her string of geegees a pink-eyed Albino Arabian with short barrel and long legs that was imported by a rich New Yorker for his own use when he thought the regiment of which he is colonel was going to war as cavalry.

The fortunes of war turned this unit into an artillery regiment and as the colonel didn't want to see his $2,000 pet dragging gun limbers, he disposed of it to Miss Goodrich, who is always a safe refuge for anybody with a horse to sell.

Residents in the vicinity of One Hundred and Fifty-sixth street and Marmion avenue, were startled a few mornings ago to observe the antics of a milk-white steed with ears laid back and eyes bloodshot, engaged in a desperate effort to dislodge from her tall perch a very handsome girl, who was equally determined not to be dislodged.

The Arabian began by bucking in true Wyoming fashion, coming down stiff-legged on the pavement, but as this seemed to jar his aristocratic frame, the horse switched to side jumping—a highly dangerous form of exercise for any but expert riders.

Miss Goodrich took it all with a smile on her face. She seemed in nowise perturbed, though a large crowd had gathered and two solicitous policemen offered assistance, closing in on the prancing palfrey.

"Please keep away!" called the star—"he's just getting acquainted with me—he'll be all right tomorrow."

By swift turns the Arabian tried all the tricks of his rather profuse collection and then, as an afterthought, stood on his hind legs and fell over backwards.

Was Edna hurt? She was not. She wasn't there. When the pink-eyed steed landed on his back with his heels in the air, Miss Goodrich was standing beside him, bridle in hand. With a grunt he rolled over and struggled to rise. A quick smack of the Goodrich hunting crop brought him up all standing, and Edna was on his back.

The crowd cheered, but Miss Goodrich didn't even bow. She patted the horse's neck and he trotted tamely to the Biograph studio nearby, where Miss Goodrich is putting the finishing touches on her new Mutual productions.

Issuing Transfers with Kisses.

In May Allison's picture, "The Return of Mary," the Metro star has to play opposite a mustache, the wearer of which is Darrell Foss.

Miss Allison says she detests lip adornment no matter who wears it.

Foss' mustache isn't his own. It's cameraflage. He puts it on in two sections, to give the effect of a neat part in the middle. So much he does for the sake of art.

The second day of Miss Allison's work a big scene was "shot," and Darrell had to kiss May in a "close-up."

Director Wilfred Lucas said to make it a real kiss.

Darrell didn't need any orders. He pressed May to him in a fond embrace. The cameraman ground fifty feet of it. Star and leading man drew apart, and then it was seen that Foss was wearing one half of his mustache and May the other.

Only momentarily, however, for Miss Allison's half portion of cameraflage slipped from her lip and, as she was in semi-decollette, got lost. And she couldn't find it right there on the stage!

"There's many a slip," mused Foss, "between the brush and the lip."

The Fickle Movie Queen.

(By Thomas Bedding.)

Say, Jim, she's a dream! An' it's true
She wants to have you for keeps?
On the level? Who's thought it of you?
Why—she's got money in heaps
And you—you're a cute movie pet
(You "screen" like Adonis, the gent).
But you're up to your eyebrows in debt,
And your landlord ses: Where's my rent?

As for her: she looks kind of nice,
She's the most dressed doll that I've ever seen;
But her heart; it's as cold as ice,
And she'll shake you sure, will this movie queen.

Say, Jim, what do you want with a Vamp?
Ain't I all that a girl could be?
When we first met, you were a tramp.
'N I staked you—for you seemed good to me.
I got you a job—as an extra, Jim;
I bought you clothes; you rose to fame;
Your Cupid's face in the movie film
Pleased all the fans—and this young dame.

Say, Jim, she's getting tired of you;
Yer face ain't what it was—I see:
I pay my dime at night and take a view;
She's never with you, as she used to be.
She vamps another guy; and so,
They chin it; they flivver; and they dance.
She pays. She's got the dough
'Nn you ain't. So—go and fight in France!

* * * * * *

Say, Jim, you'll think of me out there?
And if you live, you'll come back?
And I'll forgive you, Jim, for fair—
But, first cut loose from that clothes rack.
You won't? Alright! You don't think you're canned?
But I know you are; for she's N. G.
See; there she goes! Yes! He's on hand!
You're through with her but not with me!

As for her: she looks kind 'er nice,
She's the most dressed doll that I've ever seen;
But her heart; it's as cold as ice;
And she's shook you for another, this movie Queen.

Enter the Shirt-Tail Drive!

June Mathis, of Metro's scenario department, has inaugurated a shirt tail drive at the Sixty-first street studio and requests that every actor playing in a Metro picture, whether he be there one day or six weeks, every member of the crew, the directors, the office staff, all males in fact, bring to her office their frayed and discarded shirts. Silk shirts, cotton shirts, flannel shits, shirts of any size, color, or style—all are most welcome to Miss Mathis, for she has arranged with the Stage Women's War Relief for the shipment to their headquarters of all such donations.

Miss Mathis says in making her appeal: "Gentlemen, send or bring to me your shirts, frayed at the cuff and worn at the collar band, with the glory of the front dimmed by washing. From each article that comes to me a little child's gown is fashioned, beautiful in coloring, charming in design.

"The shirt-tail drive has begun. The Stage Women's War Relief want to make in their workrooms, thousands of these frocks for the children of France and other beleagured countries.

"Kindly send or leave your offerings at my office, Metro studio, 3 West 61st street. And remember this: one shirt will bring a smile of satisfaction to one miserable baby face."

"Douglas Fairbanks' contract for distributing his films with the Artcraft Pictures Corporation," writes Bennie Zeidman, "is nearing its end, and offers have already been made him amounting to over two million dollars for his next eight pictures.

"The progress of Douglas in the past two years in the film game has been nothing short of marvelous. He first started work with the Fine Arts Company at a salary of seventeen hundred dollars a week, followed by twenty-five hundred, leading to the formation of his own company, netting him a million dollars during his last twelve months in pictures.

"Fairbanks' productions cost double the amount of any other film star, because he believes in giving the public the best possible in return for their patronage. The screen rights to his next picture, 'He Comes Up Smiling,' cost ten thousand dollars, while the picturization, excluding this amount, is estimated at one hundred and seventy thousand dollars. It is his belief that you have got to spend money to make money.

"His producing organization includes the best executives in the profession, who receive salaries that are justified by their ability. With all his success Fairbanks is still entertained with his cowboy friends, who worship the ground he walks on. Only recently one of these cowboys shot a fellow who remarked that Douglas faked his movie stunts. The judge was amused by this loyalty, and, being a Fairbanks' fan, dismissed the case from court."

Press Agent on the Firing Line.

Bob Haughton, who used to be a publicist for the Fox Film Corporation, but who is now a bugler in Battery A, 306th Field Artillery, somewhere in France, has postcarded as follows:

"Just discovered that the hardest thing in the world to do is put a gas mask on a horse in the middle of the night when it is raining and trying to feel things out with your own gas mask on."

The postcard was sent to Gerald Speiro, who formerly was in the Fox publicity bureau. Jerry will soon see just how difficult it is to mask a horse, because he is now on his way to France, or has already reached there.

But here's a point:

Is there any subtle connection between being a press agent in peace and a bugler in war?

A determined yet anxious voice of the feminine gender made busy the wires at the Henry Lehrman Sunshine Comedy studio, Hollywood, the other day. Upon "lending an ear," the telephone operator was asked:

"Is dis Sunshine Comedies?" When the affirmative answer came, back flew this startling information:

"Well, I want to see about becoming a colored motion picture star. I want to work in comedies especially, for I know that's whar I shine.

"When it comes to slinging the rolling pin, I'm thar; for that darn fool husban' of mine shure does come home late, and I can sling pies too, for I suttingly throw things when he gives me the sign."

An Eye to Mutual Interests.

Mlle. Marcel, who has an important role under J. Stuart Blackton's supervision in "The Common Cause," isn't losing any sleep over the incident, but thinks it funny that Fate, after forgetting various scenes of the film in which she and Lieutenant Grossmith and Philip Van Lorn are concerned, brought Lieutenant Earl Carroll, her husband, and Mrs. Grossmith to the French village location as visitors on the day that the very ardent love scenes between Celeste (Mlle. Marcel) and Private Tommy Atkins (Lieutenant Grossmith) were filmed.

Publishing the "Low Down" on "Hurry Home" Van Loan.

(Mimeographed by Pete Schmid.)

THE announcement that Dorothy Dalton, the Thomas H. Ince star in Paramount pictures, has started work at the Ince studio in California on "Vive la France," a story by H. H. Van Loan, will be read with keenest interest by hundreds of newspaper and publicity men in New York in whose affections "Hurry Home" enjoys a secure place.

Van was born in Athens, N. Y., thirty-three years ago, and after breaking every window in the main street and whipping every boy of his size in the village he migrated across the Hudson River to Hudson, N. Y., and got a job as "devil" on the Morning Republican. At the end of two years he had occupied all the chairs in the office except that of the boss.

At this juncture, with the assistance of the local undertaker ("Hurry Home" himself gives him the credit) went West and assumed the position of city editor of the Aberdeen (S. D.) American. But Van Loan refused to remain buried, and passing through the offices of the Sioux Falls Eagle, Minneapolis News and Buffalo News it didn't take him long to land in New York on the Times.

Later he went to the capital, where he joined the staff of the Washington Herald. Soon afterward he went with the International News Service, covering in turn the State, War and Navy Departments, and the Senate. In the fall of 1911 he was called back to New York to be sent to London as correspondent of the New York American.

During the three following years he covered the coronation of King George, the death of J. Pierpont Morgan at Cairo, and was one of five newspapermen present when Arthur Balfour resigned the Premiership of England under the most dramatic circumstances. After being stationed for awhile at Paris he was sent on a trip which took him nearly around the world, arriving at Melbourne the day that Captain Amundsen reached there after his discovery of the South Pole.

Returning to New York he went with the Evening World, and later was Director of Publicity for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. Recently he returned from a trip to the Hawaiian Islands, where he went as hero of an empy serial.

Amid all these perigrinations, in which being arrested as a German spy in the Bahamas was merely a tame incident, Van Loan found time to marry and to write many a good short story for the magazines. Touching upon the subject of his story in which Miss Dalton is to appear, he recently wrote to John C. Flinn, director of publicity and advertising of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, as follows:

"I am happy. I had always thought that in case I should ever do anything worth while it might be made into a picture."

Refreshing Your Memory on Matters Five Years Ago.

"Stop That State Right Feature Rental Talk" was the Universal's slogan supplemented by the assertion that "you don't have to look any further than the regular Universal program for features that will pack your house." "The Harvest of Flames" was one of the crops then ripening.

Cohan & Harris were booking George Kleine's "Quo Vadis?" 28,429 people entered Keith's Hippodrome, Cleveland, in seven days, with a first night audience of 3,249 admissions. How does that compare with business at your house last week?

Eugene Moore was promising to appear once more—just once—in pictures. Thanhauser was on the eve of turning the trick. Since then Caruso has shied his clown castor into the movies. This might be captioned "Compensation."

Barbara Tennant was having her pictures in the papers as leading lady for the Eclair American Company. Vacations must have been rare in those days, because Miss Tennant was illustrated on the eve of a fishing trip she was then undertaking. We may later run a "follow up" on how many she caught and what length, with gross tonnage.

"The Green God, or the Flower Girl of Montmarte" was a Union Feature with a title about as long as some of the 1918 vintage—and more flowery. "It is scarcely necessary to dwell on the excellence of photography in a film made by the Eclair Company," wrote a certain W. Stephen Bush—whoever he was.

Doris Mitchell had just been engaged by Essanay, heralded as fresh from triumphs as leading lady of the Marlow Stock Company. "Possessed with unusual beauty and exceptional talent" was Doris—exactly as stars of these days come recommended by press agents.

"Augustus Thomas Joins the M. P.'s" was headlined with said Thomas pictured in graceful poise leaning his left arm comfortable on a convenient piece of atmosphere. All-Star Feature Corporation induced Augustus to take what then seemed to be a venturesome step. It was none other than Harry Raver, who helped the playwright into focus. Harry Raver was then, still is, and always will be a showman of serenely keen acumen.

"George Kleine to Use Broadway Stars" was a headline. Keep it standing. He may some day need it again.

Warners Features, reorganized with increased capital, has P. A. Powers as president. That's the same Powers who is now manufacturing film at Rochester and doing a big man's service to Uncle Sam in war work. Sure as you live that man Powers yet will be heard from in the picture business!

"The Return of Florence Lawrence" is not quoted as a film title, but as a fact. Where she had been was not expatiated upon, but there was joy in the knowledge that she had returned. The film she returned to was Universal—and she's every bit as pretty today as she then appeared in the picture used to ornament the cold type announcement.

"Chicago Pastors Differ Over Merits of M. P. Shows"—and that stuff is still going on!

"Mr. S. S. Hutchinson and Family in California" was a pioneer headline since and frequently serviceable with changes in the personal mention. Oddly enough, Mr. Hutchinson made no "statement of policy on the eve of his departure." That science has since developed into an industry within the industry. Everybody who goes to California makes a statement going, coming and while they are there—to the pleasure and profit of the well-known publicist.

"A Prince of Evil" had Rogers Lytton, E. K. Lincoln, Harry Northrup and Edith Storey all mixed up in the entertaining art of unraveling its plot.

"Marc MacDermott and Miriam Nesbitt, the well-known Edison players, who this summer are making pictures in England, recently were introduced to the audience of a London picture theatre," declared George Blaisdell in Flaming Arcs Department. "The Gauntlets of Washington," worn by Mr. MacDermott, in which he was featured, was shown as the subject to start the "personal appearance" movement in England. Right now Mr. MacDermott is getting his breath after a siege in a hospital, while Miriam Nesbit, his wife, keeps the Polar Bear fan pointed in his direction.

They wore furs in summer then as now. How do we know? By gazing at Betty Nansen's picture, to be sure. Betty was a new acquisition to the acting staff of the Great Northern Players. She carried her muff.

The Lubin Company, under direction of Romaine Fielding, were making pictures at Silver City, N. M., a town born previous to any of Billy Bryan's adventures in politics.

New York motion picture exhibitors were considering a plan to reorganize and try to get together. Union Square Hotel was the scene of a confab. Are they together yet?

Lillie Langtry was in pictures via Famous Players. So was Mrs. Fiske. Mary Pickford also ran.

Shelly Hull was carrying Florence X. Roberts up-stairs in "Sapho." The Majestic organization conspired to consummation of the deed.

J. Parker Read, Jr., and C. A. Willat were fortune-telling picture promoters. They were circulating "the world's greatest spectacular war drama" a year before the thing started. That they were good guessers and true patriots here's the title, "Victory."

All-Star Feature Corporation made their first announcement—written, we believe, by Joseph White Farnham, who is now "cutting" serials and writing cutting paragraphs for the Harpoon. "Arizona" was the subject of a big splurge—with a lot of other well-known plays in the loom.

"The Greater Love," by Harry Raver's Itala, preceded "The Great Love," by Griffith, just about five years—almost to an exactly!

Then there was "The Battle of Gettysburg," Mutual distribution, by New York Motion Picture Corporation. "Wars and rumors of wars" went unheaded by unprepared America—five years ago. It's different now.

The Right Men in the Right Jobs Will Win The War

THE true American wants to work where he will help win the war. He wants to fit in. America needs the Right Men in the Right Jobs. Only when this comes about can maximum production be obtained to support our armies at the front.

The needs of all war industries can be anticipated and met by the Government if employers and laborers will avail themselves solely of the nation-wide machinery which is at hand. The length of the War depends directly on our Country's ability to supply all War Industry with the best workers the country can produce the moment they are needed.

The U. S. Employment Service is the official bureau of the Federal Government in charge of the distribution of labor. The President has declared that it is the official agency for recruiting and distributing unskilled labor for war work.

PRESIDENT'S STATEMENT

"Industry plays as essential and honorable a role in this great struggle as do our military armaments. We all recognize the truth of this, but we must also see its necessary implications—namely, that industry, doing a vital task for the Nation, must receive the support and assistance of the Nation."

"Therefore, I solemnly urge all employers engaged in war work to refrain after August 1st, 1918, from recruiting unskilled labor in any manner except through this central agency [the U. S. Employment Service]. I urge labor to respond as loyally as heretofore to any calls issued by this agency for voluntary enlistment in essential industry. And I ask them both alike to remember that no sacrifice will have been in vain, if we are able to prove beyond all question that the highest and best form of efficiency is the spontaneous co-operation of a free people."

WOODROW WILSON.

It has over 500 branches throughout the nation, and 20,000 U. S. Public Service Reserve enrollment agents. Ask the local post office or newspaper for name and address of the nearest representative, or write to the U. S. Employment Service, Washington, D. C.

Those employers in war work who seek to get labor through their own or private recruiting agencies are interfering with the Government's machinery and preferring their interests to those of the nation. Only through strict compliance with the Government's program can the constant, restless shifting of labor from one war job to another, with the consequent diminution in production and efficiency, be prevented.

Above all, the Government urges every man engaged in war work to stick to his job until the Government recommends that he change. Any man not engaged in war work should put himself at the disposal of the nation by registering with the Public Service Reserve. This is a tremendously important duty! The war worker ranks with the fighter in the trenches. He will help beat the Hun.

Universal Sends Cameraman to Record Vacation of Edison, Ford and Firestone

HARRY LEVEY, head of Universal's Industrial Department, dispatched a cameraman last week to accompany Thomas A. Edison, Henry Ford and H. S. Firestone on their vacation. The trio of notable men will pass several weeks camping in the woods on Mr. Firestone's estate in Ohio.

When announcement was made of their plan to get together in this fashion word gained circulation that the real purpose of the campers was to work, not rest, and to combine their particular genius in devising some new war invention. Each of the men is pre-eminent in his field of effort, and each has contributed big service to the nation in its war task.

Mr Edison is credited with having invented several sensational instruments of land and sea warfare. Mr. Ford's efforts have encroached a half dozen divisions of war service. His plant has turned out thousands of conveyances for the government, and he has helped greatly to put over Liberty Loan and other war fund drives. Mr. Firestone, as head of the Firestone Rubber company, has been a leading producer of materials for the government.

Their friends suspect that the three are mapping out new service for the country that will be of history making character. The films taken by their camera companion may prove a store of information.

Educational Is Filming Carranza and His Officials

UNDER date of July 26, George D. Wright, the clever gringo, who has had such success with his "Mexico Today" pictures, writes that he is starting to take motion pictures of President Carranza and the members of his political and military staff for the next Mexican series to be released by the Educational. Mr. Wright is very popular in Mexico. As an instance, he was asked recently to prepare a motion picture drama of sacred theme, which was subsequently indorsed by the archbishop at Mexico City and witnessed by great crowds of the faithful. In the present "MexicoToday" series the director had many nooks, byways and corners of Old Mexico opened up to him that escape the attention of the average visitor.

One of these is "A Mexican Venice," a single-reel picture which goes out to the regular Educational houses the week of August 26. It deals with the Viga Canal, where river life that was old when Cortez went to Mexico in 1520 is preserved almost unchanged today.

On the same release date (August 26) the International distributes through the Educational its newest Happy Hooligan cartoon comedy entitled "The Latest in Underwear." This is a truly black-and-white rumpus in 500 feet, in which Happy, a Chinese laundryman, a colored washerwoman and a goat are the participants.

How McGovern Helped to Put "Mickey" Over Big

MUCH in the way of praise has been written about the W. H. Productions Company's feature, "Mickey," all of which is likely to cause the reader to ask, "What is it that makes 'Mickey' so good?" Of course, it is admitted that the story and the direction had a great deal to do with the excellence of the picture, not to mention the rare ability and personal magnetism of the leading player, Mabel Normand. But after all that is taken into consideration there is still the work of the film editor to be reckoned with, and this brings us to the subject of this story: Elmer J. McGovern, the man who is credited with having cut down the many thousands of feet of negative exposed to get the "Mickey" picture to the seven thousand feet that is in the picture now being shown to the public.

Mr. McGovern began his career as a film editor with the Keystone Company in New York, which gave him an opportunity to study the methods of Mack Sennett, the director of "Mickey." He, therefore, approached the task of editing "Mickey" with much of the knowledge required for the job of taking out extraneous matter, quickening the scenes, sometimes changing their order of sequence to make the story more logical and convincing. It is the manner in which this work is done that frequently makes good pictures out of bad ones. That Mr. McGovern has proved his capabilities as a film editor no one will deny after having seen "Mickey," for it is these little details that have helped a great deal in making that picture the pronounced success that it is.

LUCAS BUYS SIMPLEX FOR ROAD.

The Lucas Theatre Supply Company, 158 Marietta street, Atlanta, Ga., the exclusive distributors for the Simplex products in the states of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee and Southern Virginia, has sold a number of Simplex projectors to A. S. Guckenheimer for several "Hearts of the World" road companies organized by him for touring the majority of the Southern states. Mr. Guckenheimer, who is the owner of the Arcadia Theatre, Savannah, one of the city's foremost motion picture houses, has been a successful exhibitor in that city for a number of years.

It is understood that the "Hearts of the World" companies controlled by Mr. Guckenheimer will open at Atlanta and New Orleans during the week of September 1.

Sablosky Looks 'Em Over and Says They're All Good

THAT the public, at least that part of it who visit the motion picture theatres by the thousands daily, will be given rich treats this coming season in the way of unusual photoplays and other film features is the opinion of Lew Sablosky, general manager of the Stanley Booking Corporation, who has just returned from a tour of the principal producing companies, and he expressed himself as delighted with the prospects for a most successful year in the annals of the cinema industry.

"It is evident that patrons of motion picture theatres will be accorded unusually interesting entertainment in the new pictures promised for the next year," said Mr. Sablosky. "It is surprising how many new plays of more than ordinary interest are either completed or will be ready for delivery soon, and the whole output of the producers of moment is far above anything that I have ever seen before, and we have had many fine pictures at that. Favorite stars and screen actors and actresses are given greater opportunities in the forthcoming productions, the comedies are funnier than ever and the other smaller films are well worth seeing in every detail. With such an aggregation of splendid program material there is no reason for either patrons or exhibitors to worry about the future. I venture the prediction the coming season will be still more successful than ever despite the conditions that exist owing to the great war."

DANFORD MANAGER FOR GENERAL.

Effective immediately, C. D. Danford takes charge of the Atlanta office of General Film Company as branch manager. Mr. Danford is well known in Atlanta and the surrounding territory, being known to film people as a former exhibitor. He was more recently connected with the Paramount-Artcraft office in Atlanta in a responsible capacity.

Engrossed Memorial Executed by Sing Sing Prisoner Expressing Appreciation to Goldwyn.

Sing Sing Prisoners Send Fine Memorial to Goldwyn

IT has been a Goldwyn year, and in the years to come may they all be Goldwyn," reads part of an illuminated engrossed memorial received by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation from the Mutual Welfare League of Sing Sing Prison in appreciation of the company's action in sending prints of all its releases for the delectation of the prisoners. The memorial is the work of an artist known to the world only as No. 66,460, but a man certain to make his mark in the world after he has paid his debt to society. The card is 24 by 30 inches in size and in the center in blue and gold is a lion—the Goldwyn trademark—and the memorial is edged with a beautiful border of blue and gold.

In the inscription particular stress is laid on the visit to the prison of Goldwyn executives, directors and stars in August last year in conjunction with the presentation of Goldwyn's first production, "Polly of the Circus," starring Mae Marsh. The Sing Sing inmates were so enthusiastic over "Polly of the Circus" that the prison monthly organ, "The Star Bulletin," devoted a page to a glowing review of the production. Later the Mutual Welfare League wrote Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, pleading that prints of other Goldwyn pictures be sent to the prison. The request was answered.

Famous Players-Lasky Takes Measures to Push Sale of War Savings Stamps

THROUGH its chairman, Frank A. Vanderlip, president of the National City Bank of New York City, the National War Savings Committee has approved a scheme to utilize in raising money to lick the Kaiser, the collection of photographs of picture players.

The particular plan, while not new in its essentials, was suggested by Charles Ray and Thomas H. Ince. Mr. Ryan receives several hundred requests a week for his autographed photo. The aggregate of such requests to all picture play stars is estimated at ten thousand a week. Messrs. Ray and Ince agreed that if these photo collectors were as zealous in buying Thrift Stamps as in hunting free photographs the Government would profit materially. So they proposed that hereafter no motion picture stars should give their photos unless the applicant enclosed a Thrift Card with four Thrift Stamps attached to show that he was lending the Government his savings. The Thrift Cards were to be returned with the photo requested. That is, stars were to offer their autographed photographs as prizes to Thrift Stamp buyers.

The only thing lacking to make the plan one hundred per cent. effective was some way for the public to get in touch with the stars whose photographs are wanted. This lack was supplied by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which not only undertook to enlist the interest of all its stars, but has also offered to forward all letters to stars, whether under its management or not, that may be addressed in care of its main office, 485 Fifth avenue, New York

SIMPLEX MEN VISIT NEW YORK.

Two strong Simplex advocates were visitors in New York City last week. Mark L. Swaab, son of Lewis M. Swaab, and manager of his father's organization, the headquarters of the Simplex distributor for Eastern Pennsylvania, Delaware and Southern New Jersey.

F. W. Spreter, of the Auburn Film Company, Auburn, N. Y., was a visitor in New York on August 23. He took a flying trip from the upper part of New York State, and remained in the Metropolis only one day. Mr. Spreter reports a very satisfactory growing demand for the Simplex projectors in the territory in which he operates.

Evelyn Nesbit to Make Series of Fox Pictures

WILLIAM FOX has signed Evelyn Nesbit for a series of five productions, all of which are to be adapted from big Broadway stage successes or well known novels. The intention is to capitalize the opportunity to the utmost, linking star and story in a combination which will be irresistible from a box office standpoint. This is in direct line with the William Fox policy of getting stories or stage plays which already have established their worth.

The work of the new Fox star will be under the direction of Kenean Buel. The first production is now under way at a studio in New Jersey, and announcement is expected shortly of the details of cast and the name of the first picture.

Will Make Five Productions.

By the contract which Miss Nesbit has just signed she will devote all of the coming season to the five productions. No expense will be spared, as the reputations of the novels and plays which Miss Nesbit will film demand a lavish expenditure of money and great care in production.

In announcing the acquisition of Miss Nesbit to its list of stars the Fox corporation calls attention of exhibitors to the box office success scored by the play "Redemption," which Miss Nesbit appeared in recently. This play had a sensational triumph wherever it was shown, largely on the drawing power of the star. The Fox corporation believes that the coming plays which she is to do will be far superior to this and will prove of even greater value to exhibitors.

Announcement will be made shortly of the names of the pictures Miss Nesbit will film and their release dates. Announcement also will be made in a few days of the casts which will support Miss Nesbit. In the male role opposite her will be one of the best known leading men now acting before the camera

BRITISH NOTES.

By J. B. Sutcliffe.

THROUGH timely and energetic intervention by our leading Anglo-American film importers the serious designs threatened recently by the Board of Trade upon the import branch of the industry have been temporarily checked. At first there were many diverse interpretations of the U. S. Government embargo upon exports, and in many quarters of the film import trade it was confidently felt and foolishly taken for granted by some people that the American restrictions would not affect moving picture films. Inquiries at the Import Restrictions Office of the Board of Trade, however, soon established contrary evidence, and practically immediately a hurriedly called committee of leading importers were discussing the vital matter with Mr. Henderson at the Board of Trade offices. The outcome of the hasty council reflects credit upon the deputation, Messrs. Reed (Fox), York (Trans-Atlantic), Nicholls (M. P. Sales), and T. E. Davies (Western Import), for a promise of facilities for dealing with shipments on hand and pending was provisionally given by the officials of the department. No obstacles are therefore anticipated in the fulfillment of current contracts by importers with stocks on hand in New York either through shipment or customs, but no guarantee has been given for the future. At the request of the Board of Trade a detailed statement of shipments of film from America for the present and past year has been filed by each importing house with weights, lengths and values of consignments, and it is hopefully assumed that should import restrictions be necessary in the future they will be prescribed on the basis of former returns.

The Stoll Film Co. has made its debut with an American feature drama, "Thais," starring Mary Garden. The first trade view was held at the Alhambra, a Stoll vaudeville house, and attracted a merited attendance of exhibitors, critics, and others.

The deputation from the Kinematograph Exhibitors' Association to the Chancellor of Exchequer petitioning for a reduction in the entertainments duty presented its case with convincing lucidity. Although only four officers of the association were received, the president, vice-president, secretary, and treasurer, the evidence placed at the disposal of Mr. Bonar Law was a striking exposure of the inequality of the existing impost, especially in its effect upon the small exhibitor. One special point extended by the president, A. E. Newbould, for the consideration of the Chancellor was a compact schedule of increased working costs. It shows conclusively and indisputably what the British exhibitor, circuit or individual, is up against:

	Per cent.
Electricity is up	26
Gas is up	45
Film Rentals are up	40
Wages are up	60
Paper is up	75
Coal and coke are up	90
Carriage is up	20
Carbons are up	85
Electrical sundries are up	150
Advertising is up	25
Cleaning materials are up	50
Insurance (aircraft risk, etc.) is up	100
Repairs and renewals are up	100 to 200

Introducing this, the president said: "In spite of this enormous increase our prices of admission, without tax, are substantially what they were before the war. The tax is so devised to make it impossible to increase prices of any category of seats without bringing that seat into the next higher category and thereby subjecting it to a higher rate of tax. For example, the tax on a second seat is ½d, and if you increase the price to 2½d or 3d the tax becomes 1d, so that a 2d seat becomes 4d, or exactly double, and as these seats are patronized mainly by children or the poor such an increase is out of proportion and must materially reduce the attendance. The tax on a 6d seat is 2d, and if you increase the price to 7d the tax immediately becomes 3d and the price of the seat becomes 10d. The Exhibitors' Association asks for a revision of the tax to allow the exhibitor to recoup himself by raising his admissions without mulcting his patrons into increased taxation.

How Brisbane Put Over Fox's "Les Miserables"

AN unusual and very effective advertising campaign was conducted by the Strand Theatre, Brisbane, Australia, in exhibiting the Fox production of Les Miserables." Eight days before the opening of the picture, which had a week's engagement at special prices, the Strand ran a four-column nine-inch advertisement in the four papers of Brisbane.

Each day for the next six days the Strand carried a one-column five-inch advertisement in the four dailies. These daily advertisements were illustrated with drawings of incidents in the play. Each advertisement centered around an episode in the production.

The first of these one-column advertisements carried a drawing of the book written by Victor Hugo, with an inset of William Farnum. The advertisement told an interesting story of the writing of the book, what effect it had in France, the place it holds in literature, and other facts relating to it. The second advertisement had to do with the arrest of Jean Valjean for the theft of a loaf of bread.

The third recounted how Jean Valjean, the galley slave, escaped by wrenching the bars of his prison window. The fourth related the incident of the Bishop's candlesticks, and in the fifth installment was told the story of how Jean Valjean was discovered by Javert. The sixth daily advertisement showed Jean Valjean in the sewers of Paris, the copy of the display paraphrasing the remarkable description given by Victor Hugo of this episode in the book.

On the day before the opening, a Sunday, the Strand ran a four-column, page-length advertisement summing up all the incidents and carrying a big cut of William Farnum. In this way the public's interest was carried right over into the day of the opening.

During the showing daily advertisements were also carried in the different newspapers.

Vollmer Bombards St. Louis for "Freedom of the World"

ST. LOUIS was the target for an advertising bombardment by Charles J. Vollmer, manager of the Columbia Theatre, the former home of Orpheum circuit vaudeville and now devoted to vaudeville and big feature pictures. The Columbia manager, well known in the Mississippi Valley for his advertising aggressiveness, booked Goldwyn's big star special, "For the Freedom of the World," and was so enthused with the patriotism of the production that he determined to inoculate all St. Louis and adjacent territory with the spirit of the play.

Mr. Vollmer billboarded St. Louis and East St. Louis with lithographs and blocks and placed more than two thousand one-sheets of the production throughout the city. Further demonstrating his initiative, Mr. Vollmer appealed to the local Canadian recruiting station for the purpose of having Canadian officers do recruiting work in front of the Columbia during the engagement. The exterior of the big St. Louis playhouse was literally covered with twenty-four-sheets and one-sheets, special action pictures in colors, cut-out, enlarged scene stills attractively framed and various other special advertising posters.

The outdoor display was said to be one of the most striking and vivid ever arranged and the crowds which entered the Columbia to see the picture were strong proof of the effectiveness of the outdoor campaign. Manager Vollmer employed large display advertisements in the daily newspapers, and these were supplemented by an exceptional amount of newspaper publicity. The St. Louis Globe Democrat in its Sunday edition carried a full half-page photographic layout and articles devoted to the picture.

ANDERSON SIGNS WITH SHERRY.

Gilbert M. Anderson, known throughout the world for his characterization of Broncho Billy, arrived in New York last week and immediately got in touch with William L. Sherry. The result is that the new G. M. Anderson features will be released exclusively through the William L. Sherry Service. Contracts were signed and sealed after Mr. Sherry had had one look at the new productions. He pronounced them to be of a high order and capable of ranking with the best of the strong, virile, masculine western plays that are so much in vogue at the present time.

The first release will be September 22, a five reeler entitled "Red Blood and Yellow." This will be followed October 6 with a special two-reel subject entitled "Shooting Mad," followed by a five-reel subject entitled, "Son-of-a-Gun," to be released October 20. There will be a long list of pictures following these, in which Mr. Anderson will be seen in the modern style of Western plays. Mr. Sherry and Mr. Anderson are both desirous that it should be understood that none of these pictures will be reissues.

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON

Our Message Meets with Instant, Hearty and Spontaneous Response

COMMUNITY singing has swept the country in every conceivable form and the enthusiastic reception of our Patriotic Song Singing idea, as outlined in these columns in the issue of August 3, has been extremely gratifying. Exhibitors everywhere have seen its merits and propaganda purposes, its innovation appeal and its advertising possibilities. Theatres all over the country are adopting this educational feature and placing it in the best possible position on their programs.

The Strand of New York has made it a part of its show and works in a lecturer, who gives the history of the song selected for that week. Pretty lighting effects are brought into play and the audience becomes imbued with the idea by the time the speaking is over. Booklets, in which the words and music are printed, are handed to the patrons. Then led by a singer, the audience sings the song about which it has just heard.

This method of application is not altogether what it should be. There is a distinct reluctance upon the part of a large body of people to sing where they can be seen by their neighbor. In order to read the words, the house must be lighted. The singer cannot be heard far back and the baton of the musical director is the only guide to tempo. This means watching the leader and trying to read the music at the same time, by no means an easy task even when attempted by musicians. The use of song slides would overcome the difficulty. We suggest that, immediately after the lecture, a tableau be shown, followed by the projecting of a word slide with darkened house. This will mean better singing and more patriotic inspiration.

The Eighty-First Street Theatre on Broadway holds a short song fest every performance, the people being requested to sing while the splendid orchestra leads them. When the writer was present, a slide was thrown on the screen called, "A Prayer for Our Soldiers," sung to the tune of America. The volume of sound was mighty inspiring as everybody joined in lustily, but we believe that the education angle is of sufficient importance to restrict the songs to patriotic hymns or American folksongs. However, it frequently happens that one week's program will show a patriotic trend, while the program of the following week will lean toward the educational entirely.

Under the direction of Frank Buhler, the Stanley Theatre in Philadelphia has had fine results in community singing for some time and the work is progressing more rapidly than was anticipated. The patrons have learned the songs and are now singing "by heart" pieces that hitherto they have known by name only. The fine orchestra at the Stanley makes an excellent accompaniment, and the people have taken up the innovation in a serious manner. Judged from the standpoint of the box-office receipts, which are usually light in the summer season, it has been a success.

The Alhambra Theatre in Milwaukee is right up to the minute in this matter. Frank Carberry of Chicago leads the singing for twenty minutes in each performance, the words being thrown on a screen, so that all can readily read them. Only patriotic and folksongs are used. This is the nearest approach to our original idea that has thus far come to our attention. Let the good work go on.

On September twenty-eighth, there will be launched a new Liberty Loan drive. Now is the time to get your people interested in community singing, so that it may become a mighty factor in collecting six billion of dollars for the propagation of the war. Little speaking will be necessary if the people join heartily together in song, for as Cicero said:

"The songs of musicians are able to change the feelings and conditions of a state."

We received an interesting letter from Mr. W. W. Houston, Chairman of the Four Minute Song Men, offering the services of this splendid organization in furthering the movement. In every state there is a branch of this organization and the exhibitor has no excuse for overlooking the opportunity of obtaining voices trained specially for this work. Mr. Houston writes:

My Dear Mr. Beynon:

I have been very much impressed by the article entitled "Let's Sing" in the issue of August 3 of Moving Picture World.

The organization of which I am chairman, the Four-Minute Song Men, was formed some months ago for propaganda purposes. It now numbers some 75 men, with many exceptional voices. These men, like the Four-Minute Speakers, are all volunteers, and have time and again demonstrated their efficiency, as well as that of music as an agent of patriotic propaganda.

In your article you say that it may be necessary at first to obtain the services of a professional singer to lead the people, as there seems to prevail a timidity among the laity to show their vocal accomplishments in public. We are just such an organization as would be needed to meet this difficulty, and we would be delighted to co-operate with managers of moving picture theatres in New York City in singing for and with the people.

The songs we sing might be grouped under four heads:

1. National Anthems of the Allies.
2. American Folk Songs.
3. Fine Choral Compositions.
4. Songs which have become popular during war.

Yours very truly,

WM. W. HOUSTON,
Chairman Four-Minute Song Men.

A practical demonstration of the idea does not mean a large investment and the results will more than compensate the live exhibitor who gets busy at once. If the other fellow has already adopted the plan in your town, that does not mean that you should shy at it. Remember that the purpose is national, not local. It is patriotic propaganda clothed in melody with the additional incentive of being education.

From our earliest childhood, we were imbued with a love of country through the patriotic singing in the school-room. The churches are responding to the cry and are instituting a service of song. The most progressive department stores in our large cities assemble the employees and devote a few minutes each day to singing our national airs. Shall the Motion Picture industry, still only a child, and the fifth largest industry in the world, be left behind in this splendid work? When we sing, we are happy and a happy nation is a patriotic nation. Again we say: "Let's sing!"

Strand Musical Program Too "Peppy."

Boy, page Harold Edell! He's not in? We thought not.

The absence of the genial managing director evidently accounts for the infirmities of the performance of the week of August 18. It opened fairly well, the overture being Flotow's "Stradella." Under the baton of Conductor Edouarde, it took on its usal rhythmetic beauty and was greeted with applause.

As indicated by its name, a march is for marching—it is not for running. The tempo of marching soldiers is about 100, while processions or parades seldom exceed 85. The Strand topical review was played at 155, but sounded about 420. It resolved itself into a speed and dexterity contest in the orchestra. The vilest hurdy-gurdy we have ever heard sounded really pleasant in comparision. The violin solo, Faust's "Fantasie" by Gounod, played by Mlle. Zentay, was very pleasing in itself, but the orchestra made life miserable for the soloist. They could scarcely be regarded as accompanying the artist, as their efforts did not in any way coincide with hers. Pure carelessness, that's all!

The feature, "Our Mrs. McChesney," consisted chiefly of a musical setting devoted to the organ and the ringing of a telephone—the latter never in time.

However, there was one shining gem of artistry offered to the patrons of the Strand which ameliorated their sufferings. Grace Hoffman contributed Polonaise from "Mignon," by Thomas, with a style of production which brought forth thunderous applause. Miss Hoffman is a true coloraturo soprano who sings with perfect ease and great beauty of tone.

The comedy, "Know Your Neighbor," was well handled musically. The film told the story of family disruptions caused by a piccolo. Naturally the piccolo played the chief role. Under a lesser artist, the setting would have been a continuous hodge-podge of piccolo, victrola and saxophone effects, but Mr. Edouarde only permitted it in the opening scenes, where it capitivated the audience.

The usual organ solo closed.

Brooklyn Rialto Music Wins Applause.

"SIXTY THOUSAND MEN ARE MAKING CANDY!"

This is the greeting we received from Robert Robertson, Managing Director of the Rialto Theatre in Brooklyn. The exclamation is indicative of the man. First comes his patriotism, then his art and, lastly, his shrewd Scotch business acumen. By his untiring efforts, the Rialto Theatre, in Brooklyn, has risen from a neighborhood house to an automobile rendezvous. Seating 1,800, it shows the finest class of pictures and has consistently refrained from the running of double features in spite of the fact that this is the general policy of the opposition. Mr. Robertson depends upon the little artistic touches and frequent innovations to make his show interesting to his patrons.

We had the pleasure the other evening of reviewing a rather remarkable performance. The feature was "Old Wives for New," admirably set to music by Director Weiss. This boy is endowed with marked talent for violin virtuosity and has a keen insight into the demands of feature fitting.

Carrying out the atmosphere and idea of the picture, Mr. Weiss arranged an orchestra fantasie which the orchestra played as an overture. It consisted of, and was programed as, "Old Songs for New." It opened with "Come Back to Erin" and the Irish flag was projected upon the tableau curtain. This brought a spontaneous hand from the lovers of the Emerald Isle. Following with a violin solo of "Annie Laurie" with a spot light upon the soloist, and red, white, blue and green lighting effects, representing the Scotch plaid, it reached the hearts of those whose fathers wore the "tartan." America was represented by "Silver Threads Among the Gold," the American flag being projected to the great delight of the audience. Next came a cornet solo of "Last Rose of Summer," when we were shown the Union Jack. As the solo progressed, the house lights dimmed away and, when darkness came, the orchestra broke into "Auld Lang Syne," the flags of the Allies covered the large curtain and the audience burst into the song, the climax bringing the house flooded with light.

We have heard applause and applause. But never before in a picture house have we seen people rise and yell at the conclusion of an offering of this sort. The action speaks for itself and for the clever ingenuity of the Managing Director. Mr. Robertson has done great things. He will do greater and the future will hear of him in no uncertain or mediocre manner.

"America" Never Became National Hymn

This fact seems a bit surprising when one takes into consideration the dignity of the music and the patriotic spirit of the lines. But there are probably two very good reasons why the song we have all sung and loved since childhood has never been elevated to the dignity of recognition as emblematic of our national spirit. The words are sectional, breathing the atmosphere of New England alone, and the music is foreign.

Although the way in which we received it is a matter of history, the origin of the tune has always been shrouded in mystery and not a few controversies have been held on the subject. Most authorities now concede the honor to Henry Carey, the composer of "Sally In Our Alley." It was first given a public hearing in 1740, later being adopted as the national hymn of England. Afterward several Continental powers adapted the music to their own patriotic words and made it representative.

For ourselves, it came into being in the year 1832. Samuel Francis Smith, a graduate of Harvard in the class that gave so many brilliant men to the nation, was, at the time, a divinity student at Andover. A friend brought him a book of German melodies and requested him to translate them. Mr. Smith glanced over the contents of the little volume. The air of "God Save the King" arrested his attention. He read the German words. Then, under the inspiration of the moment, on a scrap of paper, he wrote, not a translation, but an entirely original American set of words.

Mr. Smith was born in Boston in October, 1808. He was twenty-three years of age when he wrote the hymn and lived to be over eighty-seven. He was a Baptist clergyman, Professor of Colby College, a teacher and an editor. But the patriotic hymn, hastily scribbled, laid away and forgotten for many months, elevated him and set him apart from the vast family of Smiths. It placed him among the men whose names cannot become common and who never die.

Speaking of the success of his work, Mr. Smith said: "If I had anticipated the future of it, doubtless I would have taken more pains with it. But, such as it is, I am glad to have contributed this mite to the cause of American freedom."

At a reunion of the famous Harvard Class, Oliver Wendell Holmes read a poem dedicated to his classmates. He referred to the author of "America" in these words:

"And there's a youngster of excellent pith.
Fate tried to conceal him by naming him Smith."

Many years later, at another banquet, Dr. Holmes again eulogized Mr. Smith. He pointed out the cleverness and wisdom in writing "My Country 'Tis of Thee," instead of speaking in the plural. As he said, every time we sing these words we feel a personal ownership and responsibility in our native land that any generalities, however glittering, would not convey to our minds.

Edward Everett Hale relates the circumstances under which he first heard "America." He also unconsciously gives us a charming picture of himself as a boy at the same time. On July 4, 1832, when he was ten years of age, he had spent all his pocket money for the joys of the day and was wandering aimlessly along, wondering how he could live through the remaining hours before bedtime. Passing a church, he heard a choir of five hundred voices blended in singing a hymn which was new to his ears. He entered the church. Thus, by the merest chance, he was present at the first public recognition of the hymn national enough to be called "America."

The Rivoli Presents a Splendid Bill.

During the week commencing August 18, the Rivoli Theatre offered for its patrons one of the finest programs we have had the pleasure of reviewing for some time. There was a sweet simplicity to it that made it soothing in its effect and fulfilled the true mission of refined entertainment.

"Finlandia," by Sibelius, was the overture rendered under the baton of Mr. Rapee. "Finlandia," called by its composer "a tone poem for orchestra," first saw the light in 1894. This was before Finland had been merged into Russia, thus loosing part of its musical identity. The atmosphere has nothing Russian in it and the overture truly portrays the Finnish spirit. The Rivoli Symphony Orchestra played it remarkably well, especially the first and second movements. The last movement, which is a grandiose form of the first motive, lacked the fervor of triumph.

"A Sun Kissed Isle" showing scenes in Grenada was well fitted by music that smacked of the Oriental, not too Oriental but just suggestive of a different clime and people.

Following this, the curtains parted showing a prettily robed woman reclining upon the steps outside the church. On either side was the shadows of the holy edifice while overhead the blue sky showed clear save for one bright star. Alberto Bachman played his own composition called "Meditation on Bach's First Prelude" accompanied by organ and harp. Bach's first prelude is the basic of Gounod's "Ave Maria," and for that reason there was a reminiscent melody running throughout the piece. Mr. Bachman did not do himself justice in his playing, but it was acceptable as an offering because of the unique stage setting and the newness of the idea. We would suggest that the lady refrain from dazzling the eyes of the audience with her diamond ring. One star is enough.

The pictorial was played with that careful interpretation upon which Mr. Rothapfel insists. Personally editing it, he gets the underlying thought and his choice of music is always very exacting. The singing of the "Marsailaise" was most effective in that the orchestra sang it pp in perfect synchrony with the French scene. Their singing of "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here," although perfectly correct from the standpoint of picture fitting, met with some unfavorable comment because of its vulgarity.

Josephine Garavelli sang the "Waltz Song" from Gounod's "Mireille." We refrain from criticising this lady until she has had more experience along these lines.

One outstanding feature of the setting for "Heart of the Wilds" was the use of "The Story of a Rose" as a theme. Nothing could be more fitting. It was softly hummed by the audience and when Professor Swinnerton wove into it strange and beautiful contrapuntal melodies it took upon itself a style that was luscious. The entire setting was fine and the orchestra seemed to enjoy it as much as the patrons.

"The Mikado" selections, played by the orchestra as an entr-acte, the comedy, and organ solo closed a splendid show.

Rev. James H. Darlington, Composer.

Our boys in the trenches are no less valorous because they dream of the day when they can go back home. This element of the soldier's psychology was recognized by the Reverend James H. Darlington, Bishop of Harrisburg, when he wrote "We'll Be Going Home."

The Bishop has several sons and nephews already in the service, and he felt that the fighting men needed a home-going song. He has made an exception in the general rule, whereby we, for the most part, speak of the soldiers and sailors—always slighting the boys in blue in favor of the army lads, a fact which the navy has felt for some time.

These publishers have also shown their interest in the suggestion of the Moving Picture World, to the effect that the motion picture theatres can serve a patriotic purpose by encouraging "Community Singing." Accordingly, the publishers have had a number of projection slides made of this song and any moving picture theatre which secures a copy of the orchestration and the song may have a slide without charge upon request, as will be seen in their advertisement on another page of this issue.

The publishers are keeping in touch with the leaders of the motion picture orchestras and they maintain a general supply service of a rather intimate and personal nature, not only throughout this country, but with many blanket orders for shipments to Cuba, Porto Rico and South American orchestras.

This house has been quick to recognize the value of the suggestion of the Moving Picture World as to the use of high class songs as themes in connection with the pictures, and are preparing some song orchestrations of several of their most popular numbers.

The Moving Picture World hopes that the houses will take advantage of this opportunity to give a good trial to "Community Singing," and send in for a slide of "We'll Be Going Home" before the supply is exhausted. The popularity of the song has been most gratifying both to the publishers and the author and they are most anxious that theatres introducing "community singing" shall have access to it.

Questions Answered—Suggestions Offered

Q. I own a very old violin, bearing this name and date: "Antonius Stradivarius Cremonensis, Faciebat Anno 1713." I am anxious to sell it and would appreciate any advice as to its history, its value and also any suggestions as to whom to offer it for sale.

A. The instrument you have in your possession doubtless is a very valuable one, its actual worth depending upon the authenticity of the make and the state of preservation. Stradivari dropped the Amati model in 1690 and used one of his own. This model he adhered to for several years and followed it quite closely for the entire period of his lifetime. In 1700, he entered into what is generally called the "Golden Period," so named because for over twenty years thereafter he produced a great many splendid instruments. You will notice that your violin comes within this period, and was made when Stradivari was nearly seventy years of age. Most authorities claim that he reached the zenith of his ability in 1720, but he continued to put out violins up to the year of his death, which occured in 1737. Beginning in the near future, we will publish a series of articles in this department giving the history of musical instruments. We can then go into the matter more fully. Rudolph Wurlitzer of Cincinnati, Ohio, is an acknowledged authority on violins. He can give you an expert opinion as to the value of the instrument you mention. When you write him, give description of the instrument in full. Variations in color, measurement, etc., very materially affect the value of the violin.

Q. Do you consider the harp a woman's instrument exclusively? Would it be possible for a man harpist to have an equal chance in his professional career? Will you give me the names and addresses of several harp teachers who live in or near New York City?

A. Replying to the last part of your question first, had you inclosed your address, we would gladly have mailed you a list of several excellent teachers of the instrument. Later in the season, there will doubtless be found in our advertising columns the necessary information. As to the sex of a harpist, there seems no good reason why a man should not be as successful as a woman. True, it has been looked on as a woman's instrument and quoted as such. But there have been many celebrated harpists of the male sex. We wish you success.

Q. I have been told that an opera called "Il Barbiere di Siviglia" was written many years before the one composed by Rossini. Can you throw any light on the subject?

A. About the year 1780, Paisiello, a favorite of his time did compose an opera with the above name. His work was so popular that when the opera by Rossini appeared, the Romans bitterly resented what they termed a borrowing of the title of an older master and Rossini was branded as an upstart. But the public soon saw the merit in the new opera and "Il Barbiere di Siviglia" has celebrated its centennial and is still enthusiastically received.

Q. I see in the papers that the Paris Symphony Orchestra is coming to America this fall. Will you kindly give me some information on the subject.

A. The Paris Symphony Orchestra, under the auspices of the French government, has arranged a number of concerts to be given in leading American cities this autumn and early winter. The number of performances will be limited to fifty, as the whole eighty-six members of the organization are professors in the National Conservatory in Paris, and must return to France by January 1. The French Association for Musical Art of New York will supervise the tour, the details of which were arranged by the French High Commissioner, assisted by the United States government. The first performance will be given in the Metropolitan Opera House, New York City, early in October. The entire profits derived from the tour will be devoted to war relief purposes.

Q. I am playing a No. 40 American Photoplayer Orchestral Organ. I am writing to enlist your aid in procuring music for this instrument which will "fit the picture." During the winter, we have an orchestra, but in the summertime the music is left to the organ and your humble servant. Can you give me the names and addresses of companies where I can procure rolls suitable for my work? If you would devote a little space to an article on the subject, I feel sure organists all over the country will be deeply grateful.

A. The article for which you have asked will be possible, a bit later, we hope. In the meantime, we trust these addresses will bring you what you need and help you out of the present difficulties: Universal Music Co., Aeolian Co., Auto Playing Co., American Piano Co., all of New York City, and the Vocalstyle Music Co., of Cincinnati.

Q. I am a good organist and pianist and can read music readily. I want to learn to play for pictures. I understand there is a school where that art is taught. Will you kindly direct me to a good school for moving picture organists? How long must one attend and what is the expense?

A. As you know, the length of time required to learn any subject depends largely upon the ability and application of the student. There is only one school for picture playing of which we know. It is situated in Los Angeles and is a professional school for picture playing. We suggest that you write to Mr. Johnston at the above address for necessary information.

Q. Will you kindly tell me where I can get "Vanity Fair," by Clutsam?

A. The song you desire can be procured from the publishers, Chappel & Co., 41 East Thirty-fourth street, New York City.

Q. A friend tells me that he read in a musical maagazine some time ago that Sousa has never conducted the band which goes under his name, but has always received a royalty from the man who does the conducting. I am sure my friend is mistaken. Will you set me right on the subject?

A. Your friend is most certainly mistaken. No reputable magazine would publish a statement so obviously false. Mr. Sousa always conducts his band. The great success that the band has attained in the favor of the public has been due in a very large sense to the ability and personality of Mr. Sousa. His enthusiasm and understanding with the men under his baton has been a source of delight to every musician who has ever heard his band. Sousa is loved by all patriotic Americans who understand and appreciate what he is doing for his country.

Q. In community singing, should the entire time be given to chorus work, or should solos, instrumental and vocal, be introduced?

A. Solos are absolutely out of place in community singing. The entire time should be devoted to chorus work. The object is to bring every person who has a voice into the work. It is very interesting to watch the rapidly growing interest in this work throughout the country. It has brought together the people in the small towns in a manner very gratifying, because it has caused a unity never before accomplished. And the work has just begun.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"Hun Within" Is First Paramount-Artcraft Special

THE first of the Paramount-Artcraft Special Productions to be released during the year 1918-19 by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has been announced for initial presentation on September 8. This production is "The Hun Within," in which Dorothy Gish, George Fawcett and a special star cast are featured. Chester Withey, who has been identified with many successful pictures, including the Paramount releases, "On the Quiet," with John Barrymore, and "In Pursuit of Polly," with Billie Burke, directed.

The story of "The Hun Within," which was written by Granville Warwick, reveals the machinations of German spies that work in this country, the big situation being an attempt to blow up the first American transport carrying troops to Europe. It presents in dramatic and spirited detail the problem of adjustment and conflict that the government has to deal with in this country, with the bulk of the people working to win the war and some few others endeavoring to hinder the workers.

Douglas MacLean is cast as a young American intelligence officer, with Dorothy Gish playing an American girl with whom he is in love. Charles Gerard has the part of the son of a loyal German-American, who prior to the war has been sent by his father to Germany for a course in chemistry and who returns at the outbreak of hostilities between this country and Germany and sets about to ruin as best he can the land of his own birth and his father's adoption. As Herman Wagner, the loyal German-American, George Fawcett is said to have admirably conceived the contrasting character of the young man's father. The elder Wagner is pictured as heartbroken by his son's perfidy.

For "Italy's Flaming Front," the new Official War Picture of the Italian Government, the First National Exhibitors' Circuit has provided a 22 by 28 card, blue and green on white, with catchy descriptive matter—convincing etchings calculated to stimulate the keen interest of the theatre "shopper" and replete with beautiful halftone cuts of stirring scenes.

"Crashing Through" Kept Up to Date.

Jewel Productions has inaugurated an original method of picture-making in its handling of the seven-reel attraction, "Crashing Through to Berlin." The picture is a complete review of the war from its beginning four years ago to the present time, and as time unfolds new events in the world history they are added to the screen spectacle.

Cameramen all over the world are working unceasingly on this film, even while it is being shown in the theatres. As rapidly as the late news pictures are received Jewel Productions makes a place for them in the final episodes of "Crashing Through to Berlin."

It is necessary, in some instances, to cut out some of the less important incidents of the picture to make room for the fresh material. The latter is dispatched without delay to all Jewel exchanges and the picture is the war history up to the last minute happening.

It has frequently happened that persons viewing the picture were able to recognize loved ones in the scenes.

Affiliated Closing Deal for Its Initial Release

EXECUTIVES of the Affiliated Distributors Corporation have been conferring daily during the past week preparatory to putting into physical operation the co-operative booking plan inaugurated by them. A deal involving the acquisition of a motion picture spectacle by Affiliated which will be used to actually launch the Affiliated project is now in process of consummation.

The production, which has been many months in the making and which is regarded as the motion picture plum of the year, is said to be one that most of the largest distributing and releasing companies has been bidding for with keen competition. The acquisition of this feature by the Affiliated should be indicative of the buying strength of the latter organization and also of their intentions to make good their promises to the exhibitors who have allied themselves on a co-operative basis with the Affiliated Distributors Corporation.

The coming week should mark the actual advent of the Affiliated in the field as a motion picture releasing organization. The national directors from the various Affiliated units who attended the conferences report that the deck is all clear for action.

"Untamed" and "The Mask" Lead Triangle Sept. 1

THE first Triangle production for the week of September 1 offers Roy Stewart in "Untamed." Kenneth B. Clark, who wrote the play and scenario, will be recalled as the author of "Until They Get Me," which was screened with Jack Curtis and Pauline Starke, and met with considerable success as a Broadway feature production.

A small but important member of Stewart's supporting cast, chosen by his director, Cliff Smith, is little May Giraci, whose screen name is Tina Rossi. In fact, the story of "Untamed" centers around the love of this little youngster for Roy Stewart and his new leading woman, Ethel Flemming.

Carmelita, the little Spanish orphan's attempts to enrich the happiness of her two friends, are said to furnish this picture with a sentimental appeal rich in human interest, and she is finally successful in bringing Ruth and Jim together to their mutual happiness through the aid of her pet calf, "Bonita," which Jim has fondly given to her in acknowledgment of his admiration for this sweet little lady.

Thomas N. Heffron directed "The Mask," Triangle's second release for the first week in September. The story and scenario were written by E. Magnus Ingleton.

"The Mask" is said to display to advantage the varied talents of Claire Anderson, Triangle, comedian, who is featured in this play with a cast including Rae Godfrey, Lillian West, John Guilbert and Juan Dela Cruz.

Jack Gilbert and Claire Anderson in "The Mask." Tina Rossi in "Untamed."

Roy Stewart in "Untamed."

"Mother, I Need You" Is the Initial Lloyd Carleton

IT is a far cry from the creation of the earth to 1918 and from the Garden of Eden to Los Angeles, but Lloyd Carleton Productions took both hurdles in one jump in "Mother, I Need You," which has just had its premiere at Los Angeles.

The picture is in six reels with a biblical prologue claimed by its producers to be one of the notable achievements of filmcraft, in that it shows the creation of the dry land from the face of the waters, the beginning of vegetation, the birth of man from the dust and of his consort Eve, the temptation and the expulsion from the garden. Then follows the modern story dealing with the heritage of Eve as exemplified in the life of a girl of the present day, whose mother is too absorbed in uplift work to hear the plaintive cry of the daughter at her side.

"Mother, I Need You" is the first offering of the Lloyd Carleton Productions and with such talent as Enid Markey, Edward Coxen, G. Raymond Nye, Clarissa Selwynne and Eugenie Besserer in the cast it is evident that the dramatics were in good hands.

Direction was looked after by Frank Beale, who originated the clever work of the prologue, and introduced the novelties in lighting.

Lloyd Carleton took such pains in editing that the release is quite a bit later than scheduled, but the results achieved are said to compensate.

The peculiar nature of "Mother, I Need You," together with its ambitious scope, caused the producers to consider an elaborate musical embellishment, and Louis F. Gottschalk was engaged to write original music and arrange the cues for organ and orchestra.

Ernest Shipman, of New York and Los Angeles, has contracted with Lloyd Carleton Productions to handle the state rights of "Mother, I Need You," and the encouragement already received by Mr. Shipman has made him enthusiastic about his new offering.

Essanay Reports Chaplin Comedy Doing Big Business

ESSANAY'S new Charlie Chaplin comedy, "Triple Trouble," is booking exceptionally strong, according to the reports of Essanay and the George Kleine releasing system. They also state that exhibitors running the picture are reporting that they are doing an exceptionally large business and pleasing their audiences thoroughly.

Many of the first-run houses which booked the picture for one week held it for a second week's run, so great was the interest of the public in the picture.

Essanay has had to make a number of new positive prints in order to take care of the increased bookings, these coming in faster even than was anticipated.

Essanay quotes a telegram from Sheehan & Lurie, proprietors of the Rialto theatre, San Francisco, as a sample of the way the picture has pleased both the exhibitors and patrons alike. The telegram is as follows:

"Charlie Chaplin in 'Triple Trouble' played to capacity from 10:30 in the morning until 11 at night on the opening day, Sunday, establishing a new record for us. Crowds trying to get in continue to increase steadily each day. Picture pleasing our audiences. Have decided to retain the picture for a second week."

"Laughing Billy Hyde" Coming Along.

Goldwyn is bending every energy at its Fort Lee studios to produce from Rex Beach's widely-read novel, "Laughing Bill Hyde," a motion picture commensurate in strength and interest with the original story. With Will Rogers, famous lariat-throwing wit of the Ziegfeld "Follies," in the name role and a cast of unusual distinction, including John Sainpolis, Anna Lehr and Mabel Ballin, work on the production is rapidly progressing under the direction of Hobart Henley.

Rex Beach delves into the psychology which keeps down the "under dog" in this story of the redemption by kindness he had no right to expect of a cast-off of society. It has been called "the story of the man who licked Fate." Laughing Bill Hyde does just that, but the impetus for the fight comes from without rather than from within. Bill doesn't even begin to fight until he is ashamed longer to lie flat on his back and let the world tumble over him.

Mutt and Jeff Get the Kaiser.

How many persons have expressed the wish to be the Kaiser's dentist? Mutt and Jeff have done much to satisfy this wish. The Fox Film Corporation announces that one of the coming Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons will show Bud Fisher's famous characters in "The Kaiser's New Dentist."

Knowing the Imperial family of Prussia has a penchant for American dentistry, Mutt and Jeff sneak into Berlin and open a painless extraction parlor. Mutt's idea is to corral the trade of the all-highest and his six squareheaded sons. He figures that by treating the sons nicely they will bring their father in. Mutt only wants the Kaiser in the chair once.

Eventually the Clown Prince calls as a patient. The prince shows Mutt the aching molar, and Mutt shows the prince the painless system. The system is a big hit with the prince. Mutt's ruse works, for the Kaiser shortly afterward also appears. When Jeff, who is Mutt's office assistant, sees the Kaiser he knocks him down, wraps him up in a bundle, and sets out for the American lines.

"Italian Battlefront" Booming.

Notable response is chronicled for "The Italian Battlefront" by General Film Company, which has the distribution of this Italian government fighting line production in important territory. The strong popularity this picture developed during its initial showing in New York is being reflected by extensive bookings by exhibitors who are impressed by its tried attraction power. The picture, which is a multiple-reel presentation of how Italy is actually fighting, is controlled by the Fort Pitt Theatre Company in this country. The General Film Exchanges through which it is being released are those in New York City, Philadelphia, Detroit, Washington, Denver, Atlanta and New Orleans.

General is supplying it to exhibitors in optional form—either as an eight-reel or ten-reel special attraction, or as a series of two-reel program units to be run on separate days.

Interest in "Bread" Growing.

Universal is focusing much of its energy these days on its Special Attractions. "Bread," the production featuring Mary MacLaren, has procured heavy booking and interest is reported to be growing fast in the films of that series scheduled to follow. The titles of the forthcoming Special Attractions convey a suggestion of good things. They are "Modern Love," set for release September 9; "Talk of the Town," September 23; "Vanity Pool," October 7; "Three Mounted Men," October 21; "Danger—Go Slow," November 4; "Kiss or Kill," November 18; "Till We Meet Again," December 2; "The Big Little Person," December 16, and "Boiling Over," December 30.

Nestor Makes "A Bum Bomb."

"Far Flung Battle Line" Starts Pathe's September

PATHE announces a program of unusual interest for release the week beginning Sunday, September 1. The first of the series of two-reel pictures to be released under the general title, "The Far Flung Battle Line," will be released by the Pathe Exchanges, Sunday, and the title of the first production of the series is "Training of Britain's Land Cruisers." Great things are anticipated from the Official French and British war pictures series. In the first place, the scenes shown in this series are new and exclusive. The first of the series, "Training of Britain's Land Cruisers," presents that modern engine of destruction, the tank. Great Britain is responsible for the introduction of the armored caterpillar tank in the present war. This production, showing the most modern of these tanks, shows an entire "fleet" in action.

The third episode of the latest and what many consider the best of Pathe serials, "Hands Up," will be released. The title of the third episode is "The Phantom and the Girl," produced by Astra. The "Hands Up" serial is considered by exhibitors to be on a par with the other excellent serials produced by this company, and "The Phantom and the Girl" continues the thrilling episodes, the love interest and the pretentious and expensive scenic effects instituted in the preliminary episodes. Charming Ruth Roland is given many and varied opportunities for emotional and sensational work.

"Two Scrambled" is the title of the Harold Lloyd comedy to be released. Supported by Bebe Daniels and Harry Pollard, Harold Lloyd keeps the fun fast and furious from beginning to end.

The Post Travel Series No. 12 is entitled "After Twenty Years, Porto Rico," and presents interesting and odd scenes in this locality.

The Allies Official War Review No. 10 continues the presentation of exclusive and sensational pictures along the firing line of the Great War.

Prominent Citizens Praise Work of "Yellow Dog"

SPEAKING of the story that inspired the formation of Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs throughout the country, Albert Bigelow Paine, biographer of Mark Twain, says that Henry Irving Dodge's story has the force of a regiment of soldiers. In a letter addressed to the author of "The Yellow Dog" and founder of the nation-wide movement to suppress Yellow Dog-ism, Mr. Paine says:

> Dear Mr. Dodge:—I want to thank you for having written "The Yellow Dog." It stirred me and brought the tears, too. It's perfectly great and will do a world of good. You are worth a regiment of soldiers. I hope your splendid truth will go marching on. Don't stop.
> ALBERT BIGELOW PAINE.

The "win the war" value in this semi-humorous piece of fiction, that in no sense could be considered a "war" story, is also appraised highly by George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information. In a letter addressed to Clinton T. Brainard, president of Harper & Brothers, publishers of the "Yellow Dog," Mr. Creel says:

> My dear Mr. Brainard:—I had already read the story, "The Yellow Dog," by Henry Irving Dodge, and am in hearty agreement with you as to its inspirational value. It sounds a note of robust Americanism that is vitally needed at this time when destructive gossip and petty unfaith are so calculated to sap the foundation of courage. It is my hope that it can be read by every American citizen, particularly that type of person who puts the malicious satisfaction of rumor-mongering above the country's good.
> GEORGE CREEL, Chairman.

The inspiration value that Mr. Creel speaks and the forcefulness mentioned by Alfred Bigelow Paine have had the effect of aiding in creating a degree of patriotic activity throughout the United States that is submerging every trace of German influence. The Jewel Productions, Inc., which is visualizing "The Yellow Dog," states that the number of Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs now in active operation has become so great that a special force is necessary to keep account of their number and locations and to take care of the tremendous volume of correspondence continually being exchanged between the branches and the national headquarters at New York City.

The membership in the various Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs throughout the country has grown to such an extent that the attempts to keep records of the individual members have been abandoned.

Publisher Asks Extension for Gerard's "Four Years"

THE action of publisher Hanson of the Birmingham, Alabama, Daily News, is said to be perhaps the first time in the history of motion pictures that a newspaper has regarded a production so worthy as to request an extended engagement on a picture.

"My Four Years in Germany" had been seen by thousands the previous week, but many had to be turned from capacity houses. The extraordinary request read as follows:

> My Dear Mr. Mudd—I want to congratulate you upon having brought to Birmingham what I believe to be one of the greatest productions ever seen in a local photoplay house in Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany." In this connection it occurs to me that the week your announcements limit this engagement to is too short to permit all to see this splendid American propaganda who would like to do so if given the opportunity, and I am taking the liberty of suggesting that the engagement be extended if such an arrangement is possible.
> I believe if you can accomplish this you will be rendering a real service to the people of Birmingham, and incidentally a patriotic service to the country.
> Yours very truly,
> The Birmingham News,
> W. H. HANSON, publisher.

Manager Mudd wired the First National Exhibitors' Exchange and was successful in securing three more days.

Lillian Walker Pictures To Be Made on the Coast

LESTER PARK, president of the Lillian Walker Pictures Corporation, has completed a contract with Robert Brunton whereby the remaining seven of the series of eight Lillian Walker productions will be filmed in the Paralta Studios, in Los Angeles. Miss Walker, accompanied by Edward Dillon, her director, and the other members of her producing staff, will leave for the Coast next week to remain throughout the winter. Mr. Park will likewise go to Los Angeles to take personal charge of the productions.

During his absence from New York the affairs of the Lillian Walker Pictures Corporation will be handled by E. Lanning Masters, who has been closely associated with Mr. Park in his producing activities.

"Pictures cannot be made as effectively or as economically in the East as on the Coast," Mr. Park said. "A recent rainy day cost a producer whom I know $3,000. This is not an unusual experience. Somebody has to pay for such waste, and that is usually the producer.

"If the time ever does arrive when all the moving picture activities are centered on the Coast exhibitors are going to find a big difference in their film bills."

Rialto De Luxe Has Striking Trade Mark

RIALTO DE LUXE PRODUCTIONS is calling attention to the adoption of a novel trademark first used in its announcement in the Moving Picture World in a recent issue. The word "Rialto" appears in a striking display, the style of letter being Old Italian, which while artistic and distinctive, is also readable and striking in appearance. A background in gray and white shows a moonlight Venetian scene with the Bridge of the Rialto in silhouette. The literary flavor which clings to the word "Rialto" is thoroughly in keeping with the aims and ideals of the Rialto De Luxe Productions.

This firm of producers believe that what makes a successful play has the elements of a successful picture. An all-dialogue and no-action play rarely achieves the much to be desired distinction of a "run on Broadway." Those which do merit this good fortune are full of action, sparkling with bright lines and clever situations and complications, all so necessary to screen adaptation and to successful title-writing. Rialto officials are of the opinion that the "studio" picture is doomed. In fact they are so sure of it that they are heavily backing the production of pictures that are of the extremely opposite type.

With high class productions shown in theatres that rival and surpass the stage houses in class and comfort, the moving picture patron has become critical. The very plays that he or she has read about in current newspaper and magazine theatrical comment may never reach his town (especially is this true under the present abnormal railway conditions), yet it is this particular type of play that the best kind of moving picture patron most wishes to see.

Gail Kane Has Double Role.

Gail Kane will be supported by a distinguished cast in her new Mutual production from the novel of Mario Thompson Daviess, "The Daredevil."

The story is a thrilling bit of modern international fencing, in which the French patriot, the German spy and the American girl born in France manage to keep the pot boiling merrily.

Miss Kane hits the high spots in eight suits of male clothing before she surrenders and returns to petticoats. The star has a double role in a double sense. When she is in "pets" the men are crazy

Among the cast are Norman Trevor, Mildred Marsh, Duncan McRae, Roy Applegate, Henry Sedley, Walter Hyers, Walter Dowling and W. W. Crimans.

Big Promotion Plans for "Italy's Flaming Front"

PROMOTION plans quite as extensive in scope and novel in execution as any that have been undertaken in months signalized the release on August 26 of "Italy's Flaming Front" by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Special attention has been given the matter of providing attractive and practical publicity aids to exhibitors booking the multiple-reel news drama, twenty-four "ready-to-print" stories; sixteen columns of prepared newspaper advertising, varying in size from one column three inches, to seven columns twenty-one inches in size; twelve coarse screen illustrations, in both cut and mat form; twenty photographic newspaper stills; one, three, six and twenty-four sheet posters in three colors, together with complete sets of window cards and lobby displays, giving the wideawake exhibitor just the kind of common-sense assistance he should find most valuable in putting over the production in a way to enforce general attention.

Prior to the publication of the material mentioned above the First National executives submitted the press campaign to a committee of well known film authorities. Signed statements indorsing the picture and testifying to the truth of all advertising claims made for it were secured from all these men, and are expected to be of considerable value in arousing widespread interest on the part of American and Canadian exhibitors.

"Italy's Flaming Front" first attracted the attention of Robert Lieber and E. H. Hulsey, president and director respectively of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, during its release in weekly installments at the Rivoli theatre, New York.

So enthusiastic were Messrs. Lieber and Hulsey over the box-office possibilities of the film, if released in multiple-reel form as one big production, provided it were given adequate publicity promotion, that they were chiefly instrumental in bringing about its purchase from the Italo-North American Commercial Union at the meeting of the directors of the circuit which occurred shortly after.

Third Kenyon Is Selected.

Doris Kenyon's third production at the head of her own company, De Luxe Pictures, Inc., will be "Wild Honey," picturized by Louis Joseph Vance from the original story by Vingie E. Roe, which appeared early this summer in a magazine which reaches 1,500,000 homes each month.

Metro Announces Five Productions for September

FIVE great Metro productions headed by an equal number of favorite stars comprise this firm's contribution to screen attractions for the month of September. In addition to these two de luxe Screen Classics, Inc., superfeatures will probably be released. In Metro's All-Star Series the players represented in September releases will be Edith Storey, Ethel Barrymore, Emily Stevens, May Allison, and Bert Lytell, appearing in the order named. The features present stories delightfully varied in theme and treatment.

First on the list is "The Silent Woman," starring Edith Storey, to be released on Labor Day. "The Silent Woman" is a powerful, mysterious photodrama of the North woods, the scene being later moved to suburban New York. Miss Storey plays the part of Nan McDonald, who, as a clerk in a Hudson Bay trading post, is called "The angel of the lumberjacks." Lois Zellner is the author. Herbert Blache directed. The cast includes Frank Mills, Joseph Kilgour, Mrs. Mathilde Brundage, Baby Ivy Ward, Lilie Leslie, and T. Tamamoto.

"Our Mrs. McChesney," with Ethel Barrymore as star, is scheduled for general release September 9. This feature had its premiere and preview at the Strand theatre, where it delighted thousands. It is a picturization of Miss Barrymore's stage success made from the famous "Emma McChesney" stories by Edna Ferber, dramatized by Miss Ferber and George V. Hobart. Ralph W. Ince directed. In the cast are Lucille Lee Stewart, Wilfred Lytell, Huntley Gordon, John Daly Murphy, William H. St. James, Walter Percival, and Ricca Allen.

"Kildare of Storm," a screen romance of vitally dramatic features, comes next. Emily Stevens plays the star part in this picturization of Eleanor Mercein Kelly's brilliant novel. There is a Southern setting. Harry L. Franklin directed. The cast includes King Baggot, Crauford Kent, Florence Short, Edwards Davis, Helen Lindroth, and Maggie Breyer.

May Allison is the star of "The Return of Mary," her first picture completed since her arrival in the California studio. The picture will be released in the All-Star Series September 23. It is a swiftly moving dramatic romance with a railroad background. In the cast are Darrell Foss, Clarence Burton, Claire McDowell, Frank Brownlee, and Joseph Belmont.

A Bert Lytell feature, "Unexpected Places," completes Metro's list for September. It is from the pen of Lieutenant Frank R. Adams, and was originally published as a novelette. It was directed by E. Mason Hopper. Mr. Lytell's cast consists of Rhea Mitchell, Louis Morrison, Edythe Chapman, Rosemary Theby, Stanton Heck, Colin Kenney, John Burton, and Jay Dwiggins.

New Fox Pictures Interest Exhibitors.

The interest in the trade caused by the announcement by William Fox of his policy for 1918-19 has found its echo in a flood of bookings for the four big, timely pictures to be issued, for the new Victory brand of pictures, for the new Excel, and increased bookings for the Standard Pictures.

A statement by the corporation is to the effect that Fox exchanges have telegraphed reports of demand by exhibitors for "Why America Will Win," "The Prussian Cur," "Queen of the Sea," and the picture based on the life of the most beautiful woman in the world, "Why I Would Not Marry."

First Russell-American Ready.

The first of the William Russell productions to be marketed through sales representatives of the American Film Company and sold direct to the exhibitors is now ready for exhibition at the various Pathe exchanges throughout the country. It bears the title "Hobbs in a Hurry" and has to do with the sale of a mine in Arizona, and much of the action takes place aboard a private car of a New Yorker, attached to the rear of a limited train westbound from New York.

Winifred Westover enacts the leading feminine role and Hayward Mack is seen in a double role, appearing first as one twin brother and then as the other, while the minor parts are assigned to players particularly chosen for their roles.

Miss Clayton's First Set for September 8.

After an absence of several months from the screen, Ethel Clayton, now a Famous Players-Lasky star, will be welcomed by exhibitors and public when her first Paramount vehicle, "The Girl Who Came Back," is released September 8. The story is that of "Leah Kleshna," C. M. S. McClellan's popular emotional drama of several years ago.

Beulah Marie Dix wrote the scenario. Elliott Dexter is leading man and Theadore Roberts has a fine character part. James Neill, Charles West, Marcia Manon, Jack Bramhall and Jane Wolff make up the rest of the cast. Robert G. Vignola directed.

"The Bargain True" (Bluebird).

"The Bargain True" will be Bluebird's release for October 7. It features Ruth Clifford, with a supporting cast including Edward Hearn, Harry V. Meter, Elizabeth Janes and Janet Sully. The story, written by Nalbro Bartley, appeared in the Saturday Evening Post recently, and received high favor. Fred Myton wrote the scenario. Elsie Jane Wilson is the director.

"Money Isn't Everything" First Fisher Production

MARGARITA FISHER in a Fred Jackson Story—that is the announcement from American Film Company, Inc., as to the first of the new Fisher offerings to be sold direct to exhibitors by personal representatives of the American company stationed in each of the Pathe exchanges throughout the country.

"Money Isn't Everything" is the title of this first five-reel comedy-drama, which is an adaptation of Fred Jackson's novel, "Beauty to Let," which has been read by millions. Edward Sloman, responsible for many of the William Russell successes, directed it. In Miss Fisher's support will be found such popular players as Jack Mower, J. Morris Foster, Wedgewood Nowell and Kate Price, many of whom have personal followings of their own sufficient to pack any theatre at which the attraction is shown.

Comedy dramas are the order of the day just now when the world is demanding lighter thoughts as a relief from the grim news it faces daily in dispatches. "Money Isn't Everything" has to do with the forming of a "Beauty To Let Corporation," which has for its object the leasing of the services of Miss Margery Smith, a stunning beauty, who agrees to act as a companion to wealthy young bachelors at teas, dances, theatre parties, etc., upon the understanding that while out with one of the clients of the "Beauty To Let Corporation" she is to remain speechless. Almost any exhibitor can imagine for himself the fun possibilities that lie in such a situation and can visualize the big way in which this production will "go" at his house—can almost hear the laughter of his audiences.

"Secret Strings" Completed.

"Secret Strings," Olive Tell's first vehicle as an individual Metro star, has now been completed at the Metro studio under the direction of John Ince. "Secret Strings" is a romantic screen drama from the pen of the clever writer, Kate Jordan, originally published in Ainslee's Magazine, and June Mathis has picturized it. Miss Tell's introduction to Metro audiences came through her portrayal of the role of Alice Monroe, the American girl, in the Screen Classics, Inc., superfeature, "To Hell with the Kaiser." Her success was such that in "Secret Strings" she is a star in her own right.

Heavy Bookings Reported for the Success Series

THE Success Series of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is being heavily booked, according to Walter E. Greene, Managing Director in charge of Distribution, the demand for these reissues having already resulted in the placing of orders by the branch offices for additional copies.

While these extensive bookings are gratifying," says Mr. Greene, "they are not surprising when it is considered that the determination to launch this series was in acquiescence with the demands of exhibitors throughout the country who had not forgotten the success attained in showing these subjects in the past. For the coming year, beginning September 1, fifty-two subjects have been carefully selected from a list of nearly four hundred."

Frank Meyer, technical director of the Famous Players, declares that the reissues will prove a pleasant surprise to the exhibitors and the public. "The technical end of the industry has advanced tremendously since many of these pictures were made," says Mr. Meyer, "and the reconstruction and retitling of these productions and the addition of art titles and other little touches that mean so much to the modern picture have made a new dress for the Success Series that makes them compare favorable with our latest releases."

An entirely new department has been created for the reconstruction of the Success Series in charge of H. J. Streyckmans, under the personal supervision of Mr. Meyer. The first release is "The Eagle's Mate," in which Mary Pickford scored a great success, and this is followed by "Wildflower," the vehicle in which Marguerite Clark made her debut to the picture public.

Ashby of First National Pushing the "Crusaders"

FOR the Honor and Glory of Colorado, Utah, New Mexico and Southern Idaho is the compelling slogan adopted by J. H. Ashby, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit at Denver, Colorado and Salt Lake City, in his intensive campaign to secure 100 per cent. bookings of "Pershing's Crusaders" for his territory.

When Manager Ashby learned that the United States Government, through the Division of Films, was going to present a handsome "Victory Screen Pledge" to every exhibitor throughout the country who booked "Pershing's Crusaders," he then and there vowed he would practically paper his territory with these pledges.

He quickly got in touch with his printer and two days later every exhibitor in the territory received two very striking circulars one of them in two colors on a long quarter-sheet. A halftone reproduction of the "Victory Screen Pledge" was centered on one circular with some clear and concise descriptive matter, testifying to the drawing power of this first Government film feature, and the honor roll of those exhibitors who had already booked "Pershing's Crusaders" was also published.

Mr. Ashby urged that exhibitors get their contracts in before September 1, although the play dates could be arranged later. He also declared that this was a patriotic and loyal duty and was for the "honor and glory" of that particular territory. According to all reports these two novel and attractive circulars have brought forth impressive results.

"'Ception Shoals" in Work for Screen Classics, Inc.

"'CEPTION SHOALS," with Mme. Nazimova starring in the role she created on the New York dramatic stage, has been placed in production by Screen Classics, Inc., at the Metro studio under the direction of Albert Capellani. Mme. Nazimova appears in the opening scenes of the screen version in the character of Faith, the young mother of Eve, whose vitally dramatic experiences make up the major portion of the story.

Mme. Nazimova is confident that the picturization of "'Ception Shoals" will be even greater than the stage version. This special production de luxe will be issued as a Screen Classics, Inc.

Charles Bryant has the part of Captain Blake, the role in which he appeared in the stage production. Mr. Bryant has played opposite Mme. Nazimova in many pictures. Henry Harmon has been cast as the keeper of the lighthouse. Mr. Harmon played this role in the stage production in Mme. Nazimova's support. Hugh Jeffrey, a Metro favorite, plays the constable.

Henry Kolker, Mr. Capellani's principal aide, has gone, accompanied by Henri Menessier, art director for the Nazimova working force, to Gloucester and adjacent points in search of picturesque bits of coastline as a background for the vital fundamental story which "'Ception Shoals" provides.

Nestor Puts Over Highbrow Stuff.

Nestor's release for August 26 is a study in psychology, as well as solid laugh. The farce elements, built around one of the soberest problems of science—the twists of the subconscious mind—are here carried to a high altitude of fun. The story, entitled, "When Paris Saw Red," concerns the adventure of a clergyman who goes to a strange town and loses his mind. The town is Paris Green. In his mental lapse the clergyman, by a strange conditions that psychologists talk learnedly about, passes into the personality of the town's roughest character. The things he does in this state and what happens are worth the price of admission. Neal Hart and Janet Eastman portray the leading characters to perfection.

Vitagraph Sets September 16 for Two-Reel Comedies

VITAGRAPH'S new series of two-reel feature comedies, the first of which will be released on September 16, will bear the brand name of "Big V Special Comedies," to distinguish them from the single reel "Big V." Three of the comedies already have been completed, and are now being printed for shipment to the company's distributing branches, where they will soon be available for screening to exhibitors.

The company will continue to release one-reel Big V comedies until the last week in September, and one of these, "Mutts and Motors," featuring Lawrence Semon, was featured on the program of the Rialto. In addition to playing the leading role in the picture Mr. Semon also wrote and directed it.

Vitagraph promises to give out a release list of the first group of two reel "Big V Special" comedies within a short time, but it is known that two of them, "Misfits and Matrimony" and "Roffs and Riots," in both of which Earle Montgomery and Joe Rock are featured, have been finished, together with another bearing the title of 'Danger and Dynamite." Lawrence Semon has completed "Huns and Hyphens" and is nearing completion of another and a thriller which has for its locale the colorful night life section of San Francisco.

The Big V's are declared by Vitagraph to have proved the most popular comedy subjects they have released, because they are suited to every class of theatre. Not the least important part of Vitagraph's comedy plans is the weekly release. Exhibitors are assured a release each week in the year, on the same basis as the five-reel feature or the company's serial product. The fact that four two-reelers are already prepared for shipment indicates that the company will maintain a production schedule which guarantees exhibitors they will get their Big V Special comedies each week on time.

World Pictures Has Many Negatives Ahead

IF World Pictures closes its Fort Lee studio at the present moment it would still be able to release a new picture every week until the first of next April. The World has 27 completed negatives made from novels and original scripts, in its vaults. It also has the raw film stock and chemicals with which to make prints of these negatives. In other words, if the government should close up the making of new pictures for six months or even a year, World exhibitors need have no fear of being forced to use reissues now and then in order to fill out—they would still be getting their weekly releases of original subjects from the World.

At the present time World production is going forward as rapidly as it has been going during the entire summer. By the time that snow begins to fly at Fort Lee the World will have a sufficient stock of completed negatives on hand to permit closing the studio for the entire winter. But the World also has a sufficient supply of coal on hand to keep the studio going all winter if it desires.

Fox Announces Eleven Productions for September

AS an indication of the magnitude of its plans for the coming season the Fox Film Corporation announces that it will release eleven big productions in September. This number includes three big, timely pictures which will be available for booking on an independent basis September 1; three Standard pictures, two Victory pictures and three Excel pictures. This number does not include the regular weekly Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons or the Fox-Lehrman Sunshine Comedy releases.

The three big, timely pictures which will be available for bookings September 1 on an independent basis are: "The Prussian Cur," R. A. Walsh's drama of the invisible embassy, and the enemies at home which have been working to hamstring America in the prosecution of the war; "Why America Will Win," a production based on the life of General John J. Pershing, commander of the American Expeditionary Force; "Queen of the Sea," which will show Annette Kellerman as the star in a great submarine phantasy.

The Standard Pictures which are scheduled for release in September are: William Farnum in "Riders of the Purple Sage," which was made from the book of the same name by Zane Grey; Theda Bara in "When a Woman Sins," a story of the regeneration of a modern vampire, and "The Caillaux Case," a stupendous drama which reveals in intimate detail the international scandal that rocked two continents.

Two Victory pictures are scheduled for release in September. They are Tom Mix in "Mr. Logan, U. S. A.," and Gladys Brockwell in "Kultur." The Mix picture was written and directed by Lynn Reynolds, and shows Tom Mix in the role of an American Secret Service agent who uncovers a plot to cripple a mine which is needed by the Government in the prosecution of the war. "Kultur" is a tremendous drama which reveals the hidden story of the beginnings of the Great War. Gladys Brockwell portrays the role of a favorite of the late Emperor Franz Josef, and it is shown that her private affairs formed an important factor in the start of the war.

Peggy Hyland in "Bonnie Annie Laurie," Virginia Pearson in "The Queen of Hearts," and Jane and Katherine Lee in "Swat the Spy" are the Excel picture releases scheduled for next month.

Every one of these pictures is either based on a story which should prove a box-office sensation or has been made by a star of marked drawing power.

Pathe Reports "Hands Up" Doing Large Business

CONTRACTS already closed on "Hands Up," the new Pathe serial, represent a larger business than has ever been done before on a Pathe serial up to the time of release. This fact is evidenced by a statement given out by Paul Brunet, Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, this week.

"Figures talk," said Mr. Brunet. "We see in this most gratifying business ample evidence that not only do exhibitors appreciate the tremendous effort we have made to make 'Hands Up' a serial of true feature quality, but also the national advertising we are doing to help them sell the serial to the public. July was the biggest month in our history, despite the hot weather. August has already beaten our July record. 'Hands Up' has materially aided in putting August ahead of July."

Every Pathe branch office has done its share in making the enviable record which "Hands Up" has already made. The Atlanta office has, among others, sent in bookings from Birmingham showing that four houses in that city, among them the Odeon, will run the serial for two days or more a week.

Dallas reports that the Queen and Wigwam, of San Antonio, will each show the serial for three days a week. This office also is proud of the bookings in Houston, Fort Worth and Dallas.

Boston has many three-day bookings. Pittsburgh boasts of many two and three-day bookings also.

Cincinnati has closed the Apollo, of Dayton, for three days, the C. & M. in West Virginia for five days, and many others.

All the other Pathe offices have sent in long lists of houses which will participate in the benefits accruing from Pathe's national advertising campaign.

Director Apfel's Way of Explaining Things.

Montagu Love and Barbara Castleton started a love scene for Director Apfel, but the facial expressions were not up to the standard, so they are marched in front of a big looking glass that is handy and are coached by the director and shown exactly how they will look. Can anyone think of a better way to get the idea across to the leads?

Geraldine Farrar Returns from Trip to Wildest West

THE ENTIRE production of "The Hell Cat" completed in Wyoming, Geraldine Farrar and her company of twenty are back in New York after five weeks away from civilization. Far from fatigued by what she declares to be the most strenuous undertaking in her entire career, and the long railway journey, the star is eager to begin her third Goldwyn picture at the studios in Fort Lee.

Her last day at Valley Ranch, Wyo., she will never forget for many reasons, some of which are pointed out in our Chicago letter in this issue.

The party arrived in Cody late in the evening of the stay and found a reception in prospect arranged by the Sammy Girls of Cody, an auxiliary of the Red Cross, in honor of Miss Farrar. But first the star kept a promise made to herself and drove out to Sulphur Springs, five miles from Cody, for a bath in the curative waters. Then she hurried back to the hotel and appeared for a short time at the reception, giving the Sammy Girls a substantial check to further their good work. After that Miss Farrar tore herself away from the shower of flowers which greeted her gift and prepared for the next morning's leavetaking.

At the station a crowd awaited the Goldwyn players, and once again Miss Farrar was deluged with flowers. Each of the cowboys assisting in "The Hell Cat" brought her an individual offering—mounted elks' teeth, beaded moccasins and a magnificent buffalo rug, presented by Jimmy Tuff. Finally the star boarded a private car reserved for the party.

"The Street of Seven Stars," the first picture produced by Doris Kenyon at the head of her own company, De Luxe Pictures, Inc., has been booked by the William L. Sherry Service for the entire circuit of Marcus Loew theatres. The booking consists of fifty-five days, all of which will be played in the Loew theatres during the week of August 25.

This big booking in New York is in line with the cordial reception accorded "The Street of Seven Stars" in Chicago, where the picture is booked to play the Ascher Brothers-Lubliner & Trinz circuit of theatres. Week runs of the picture have also been booked in the principal houses in Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

More Educationals for West.

The Educational Films Corporation's outdoor and travel pictures are having a great vogue on the Pacific Coast, where bookings have increased 200 per cent. within the last four months. As an instance of the eagerness for the product is this wire just received by E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager, from E. J. Myrick, of the Liberty Theatre, Portland:

"Please advise us when Seattle Consolidated Office will receive the first reel of your 'Mexico Today' series. We wish to know several weeks in advance, as we intend to put on extra and advance publicity in connection with this series. Just finished running 'Ridge Roamers' and 'The World of Dreams.' Both of these are positively the most wonderful pictures I have ever seen."

The Educational is now serving San Francisco, Seattle and Los Angeles exchanges, but will have to put on more prints to meet the demand for this outdoor series.

"Heir of the Broken O" Is a New Wolfville

FOLLOWING "The Wooing of Riley" as the Wolfville Tale for the first part of September, another production of an Alfred Henry Lewis short story will be "The Heir of the Broken O." The Wolfville Tales are released by General Film Company on the Broadway Star Features program, each new Lewis subject alternating with a new O. Henry story.

So far there are a dozen of the Wolfville tales of cowboy life released or scheduled up to October 1, identifying this high-class type of Western comedy drama thoroughly before the public. Featured players now working in the releases include Patricia Palmer, Carol Holloway, Bob Burns, George Holt, Kate Price, Otto Lederer, William Lester, and other well known West Coast players.

In the Wolfville Tales the plots revolve about the local celebrities made famous in the Lewis books dealing with the picturesque settlement known as Wolfville. The town is said to be a portrait of Tucson in its earlier days, and many of its types founded upon real characters, all of them extremely red-blooded.

Fall and Winter Vitagraphs in East and West

PRODUCTIONS which will be released during the fall and winter on the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon program are now under way at both the eastern and western studios of the company. Everyone of the featured stars is engaged in the making of five-reel subjects and some of them have almost completed their tasks.

At the Western studio Earle Williams is in the midst of a five-reel subject bearing the title of "My Country First." This is a strong, timely story, written by Bess Meredyth and being produced under the direction of James Young.

Bessie Love, who will also produce at the Western studio for an indefinite period, started work on "Sue," her first Blue Ribbon feature, which is scheduled to introduce her to Vitagraph's followers the first week in November. This picture is being made from the stage play of the same name in which Annie Russell gained fame two decades ago. It was originally adapted from Bret Harte's story, "The Judgment of Bolinas Plains." David Smith, who directed Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman in "Barea, the Son of Kazan," will direct Miss Love.

At the company's Eastern studio Alice Joyce began work in a play adapted from "Cap'n Abe, Storekeeper," a romance by James Cooper. It is a seacoast story, with many opportunities for fine exterior scenes, and these will be made on the coast of Maine, the original setting of the story. Tom Terriss is directing Miss Joyce in this, and following its completion will start work on "The Notorious Miss Plummer," a story by Marc Edmund Jones. In this latter picture Miss Joyce will wear many stunning gowns.

Harry T. Morey, supported by Betty Blythe and Jean Paige, is now engaged in the making of "Hoarded Assets," a story which ran in Scribner's. He is under the direction of Paul Scardon, who just recently completed "The King of Diamonds," with Mr. Morey as the star, supported by Miss Blythe and Miss Paige. Another story already selected for Mr. Morey bears the tentative title of "Dan La Roche." It is an original creation of Lawrence McCloskey, whose "Golden Goal," in which Mr. Morey recently was released, has found so much favor in the theatres of the country.

Corinne Griffith, under direction of Henry-Houry, began scenes for "Miss Ambition," an original play by Rex Taylor, and will follow this, in all probability, with an adaptation of H. W. J. Dam's play, "Diamond Deane." Miss Griffith, in her new play will be supported by Florence Deshon, Denton Vane and others who were seen with her in "Love Watches," and who also are soon to be seen with her in "The Clutch of Circumstance."

The next picture to be undertaken by little Gladys Leslie, Vitagraph's sunshine girl, probably will be called "The Jam Girl." It is by Frances Starrett.

In connection with its statement of producing activities, Vitagraph announces that a large number of play subjects are now under consideration for all of its stars and that material is already under negotiation sufficient to provide all of them with vehicles for a year to come.

Post Travel Shows West Indies.

With the same first class photography, the next (fourteenth) issue of the Post Travel Series released each week by Pathe, entitled "Georgetown-British West Indies," shows rare and interesting views of that insular possession founded by the Dutch in the early years of the sixteenth century. The selection of interest points was made with great care, and views heretofore unseen by the American people will be afforded them for the first time. The ancient and now obsolete system of irrigation is particularly amusing when compared to our more modern ones.

"Road Through the Dark" Is Next C. K. Y. Picture

PRODUCTIONS plans for Clara Kimball Young's forthcoming Select pictures have been slightly changed in regard to the order in which pictures of Miss Young's new Select Star Series will be produced. "Cheating Cheaters," a photoplay version of the noted stage success which was announced as the production to follow "The Savage Woman," Miss Young's current picture, will not be the next attraction in which this star will be seen. Miss Young will make first "The Road Through the Dark," a picture based on the short story of the same name which appeared in the Metropolitan Magazine for March, this year. The author of this story is Maude Radford Warren, whose work is characterized by virility and strength.

"Cheating Cheaters" has not been abandoned by Miss Young, as the play has been definitely purchased by her and at an unusually high figure. In all probabilities "Cheating Cheaters" will follow the filming of "The Road Through the Dark." Both of these productions will be made in the West, at the Sunset studio, Los Angeles. The Sunset, which is D. W. Griffith's old studio, has been leased by Miss Young for several of her forthcoming Select productions.

In "The Road Through the Dark" Clara Kimball Young will have a new leading man in Jack Holt, who has done excellent work on the screen in a number of recent productions. Mr. Holt has appeared before in support of Miss Young, having portrayed the role of Maurice Stair in the recent Select picture, "The Claw."

A Tale of a Bee and a Tail.

Henry Lehrman, who makes Sunshine Comedies for William Fox, has long been an exponent of the use of animals in film comedies, but in one of his most recent comedies, which he has just completed at the Fox studios at Hollywood, he surpasses himself. Not only does he employ a dog, a cat, kittens and a mouse, but he also uses a bee—a real, live bumblebee, with a sting.

The bee stings the tail of a mouse, and said tail swells so rapidly and to such an extent that the mouse is carried aloft by its balloon-like tail. There, through circumstances that the press agent does not make clear, the bee reunites a couple of lovers who have become estranged.

Regular Mix Punch in Fox's "Mr. Logan, U. S. A."

TOM MIX, in "Mr. Logan, U. S. A.," which is described as a play in which grim duty outweighs the call of love, is announced by the Fox Film Corporation as the first picture to be released under the new William Fox Victory Pictures brand.

It is expected that "Mr. Logan, U. S. A.," will be acclaimed by exhibitors as the most thrilling picture that Mix has made. Tom Mix has always been noted as being able to put a punch in an ordinary scene, but in "Mr. Logan, U. S. A.," he has numerous scenes of power.

The story is of an agent of the United States Secret Service who has been sent by the Government to uncover the work of enemy agitators in the mining fields of the West. The scene of their operations is centered on a tungsten mine that is furnishing important supplies to war industries.

The Fox corporation declares that in "Mr. Logan, U. S. A.," it is particularly fortunate in being able to inaugurate the new Victory Pictures with the best example of those Western plays for which Mix is noted.

The cast includes Kathleen Connors, Dick Larceno, Charles LeMoyne, Jack Dill, Val Paul, Don Bailey, Jack Curtis and Maude Emory.

Official War Review Maintains High Standard

OFFICIAL War Review No. 9, presented by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, and released by Pathe, lives up to the high standard of interest created by its predecessors. The scenes shown are about equally divided among Great Britain, France, Italy and the United States. All of them are described as being of more than ordinary interest.

Among them are some showing the throngs of British troops advancing to take their part in the latest big offensive which has already reclaimed so much of the soil of France. "Tommies" are depicted aiding the helpless refugees who must start life anew with little more than the clothes on their backs.

Interesting scenes are those which show the use to which the French are putting "the dogs of war." The intelligent and daring animals are pictured carrying messages and the like.

From France the War Review takes us to Italy, where we see the calibre and something of the number of men which that gallant kingdom is daily sending to the shell-torn North. If Italy's morale ever suffered at the time of the Austrian advance these men show nothing of it now. No commander could ask for better troops, and the camera catches something of the spirit of victory which animates each man.

America's army receives its due and fitting mention, with interesting scenes showing how our boys are taking "the water trail to France." Shipments of troops have been conducted so quietly and efficiently that no war subject is more discussed. These scenes cast much light on the subject and clearly depict how Democracy's army has gotten "over there."

Rialto's Third Picture Is "Upstairs and Down"

RIALTO DE LUXE PRODUCTIONS announces the purchase of a second Oliver Morosco Broadway stage success in its third picture, "Upstairs and Down," now in preparation. Miss Valentine will be the featured star. The play is by Frederic and Fanny Hatton and shows an amusing parallel between the love affairs of a wealthy family and their circle "upstairs," with those of their servants and their friends in their quarters "downstairs."

Rapidity of action and complicated situations offer a field for clever titles. The script calls for a strong supporting cast and an elaborate production throughout.

Permanent arrangements have been made for distribution through the George Kleine System in the United States and Canada, and for all foreign countries through the Piedmont Pictures Corporation.

British and Yank Officers Make "Common Cause"

COLONEL J. S. DENNIS, of the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission, second in command to General White; Lieutenant Gitz-Rice of the First Canadian Contingent, and Lieutenant Creswell, both on Colonel Dennis' staff; Lieutenant Arthur Gardener of the American Tank Corps; Major Julian Smith, and Lieutenants C. J. Lohmiller, G. P. Anthes, C. E. Briggs and Lieutenant Kenyon were among the visitors at the Blackton Productions, Inc., studios in Brooklyn recently.

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton was filming scenes of a big ball which takes place in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Orrin Palmer (Herbert Rawlinson and Sylvia Breamer) during the action of "The Common Cause," which the producer is recording for the screen under the auspices of the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission. The British and American officers, many of whom also appeared in incidents filmed last week in the big French village exterior constructed for the production, acted as guests at the ball. For the time they became motion picture players under Commodore Blackton's direction, "for the good of the cause," as Colonel Dennis expressed it.

"The Common Cause," which was adapted by Anthony P. Kelly from the play by J. Hartley Manners, Ian Hay (Major Beith) and Percival Knight, is to be Commodore Blackton's newest and biggest war feature, and is scheduled for early fall release by Vitagraph.

Herbert Rawlinson and Sylvia Breamer share feature honors in the leading roles. Other players are Huntley Gordon, Mlle. Macel, Philip Van Lorn and Lieutenant Grossmith. Charles Stuart and Violet Blackton, the producer's children, are also cast in featured roles, while Louis Dunn is the principal "heavy."

Gail Kane's "Love's Law" Is Released September 1

GAIL KANE'S "Love's Law" will be released by the Mutual Film Corporation Sept. 1. This is the first of the Gail Kane Productions specials. Miss Kane interprets a role which gives her an opportunity to demonstrate her wide range of talents. She carries the scenes in which she is placed amid poverty and want with the same grace and ease that she does the lavish settings.

Courtenay Foote is Miss Kane's leading man in this production. Mr. Foote formerly played with Sir Beerbohm Tree, and since he entered pictures some years ago has gained popularity.

Others in the cast are Reed Hamilton, who made his reputation in "The Danites"; Frederick Jones, who assumed an important role in "The Great Divide"; Mathilda Baring, who played in "The Prince Chap," and Barbara Hare, in "East Lynne."

Especial attention was given to the titling of the production.

Report Chinese Comedian Making Good.

General Film Company announces that the Charlie Fang comedies being distributed for the Scrantonia Film Company have met instantaneous demand for novelty. The idea of a Chinese comedian has proved attractive to showmen in search of new program material, the General reports, and bookings for the initial releases promise a great deal of favor for Fang.

"Parson Pepp," the first release, presents the Chinese player as the valet of a forceful missionary who attempts to revolutionize the morals of a mining camp with his fists and his Bible.

"Fang's Fate and Fortune," the second release, is marked by refreshing comedy touches.

"A Japanese Nightingale" (Pathe).

On September 22 Pathe will release the first of the Extra Selected Star photoplays —"A Japanese Nightingale," with Fannie Ward as the star. It was produced by the Astra company at its West Coast studios, with George Fitzmaurice as the director. William Young wrote the play. Pathe believes the combination of Miss Ward, Mr. Fitzmaurice and such a well known play cannot fail to be of the greatest interest to every exhibitor. Those who have seen the picture state that it is a most beautiful and sumptuously produced feature. Remembering the success of "Innocent" and "The Yellow Ticket," the pictures in which Miss Ward has previously starred for Pathe, it is thought "A Japanese Nightingale" will do much better than either, since it is the type of story and production that is bound to be popular in every house.

The novel by Onoto Watana had a wide vogue several years ago, passing through a number of editions. The locale of the story is Japan, and the same thing holds true of the picture. Director Fitzmaurice has been most happy in his selection of backgrounds and sets.

Seven Productions in Work for Fox.

SEVEN productions are now in work for the Fox Film Corporation. Two of these are being made in the West and the five others in the East. In the West William Farnum is in his second week on "The Man of Power," the picture which Frank Lloyd has written and is directing.

Tom Mix is on his third week in the filming of "The Two-Gun Man," a picturization of the famous novel of the same name by Charles Alden Seltzer. The director is Lynn Reynolds.

In the East George Walsh is working under the direction of his brother, R. A. Walsh, on a rapid-fire comedy, "How Do You Get That Way?"

Peggy Hyland, supported by a large cast, has been out on location working on "Marriages Are Made."

Richard Stanton and Kenean Buel, Fox directors, each has a large production in train, Mr. Buel being busy working on the first Evelyn Nesbit picture. Arvid E. Gillstrom, who has just joined the Fox force of directors, is in the third week of the picture which Jane and Katherine Lee are filming, "Swat the Spy," and Virginia Pearson has finished work on "The Queen of Hearts."

Reid Portrays Lumberjack.

Wallace Reid portrays the come-back of a "bum" in the Green Mountain lumber country in "The Source," his Paramount picture released September 1. The story is said to be of the strong, swifty moving kind that gives Reid plenty of chance to portray both rapid-fire action and character development. His admirers will no doubt welcome the chance to see him in the character of Van Twiller Yard, for "The Source" is a famous story. Clarence Budington Kelland, its author, has given us a story of splendid courage, typically American in its settings and development. Monte M. Katterjohn scenarioized the book. A strong supporting cast includes Ann Little, Theodore Roberts, Raymond Hatton, James Cruze, Noah Beery, Nina Byron, Charles West, G. Butler Clonbough and Charles Ogle. George Melford directed and Paul Perry was cameraman.

"Taking the Count" (Strand-Mutual).

Elinor Field, in the character of Elinor Brown in the next Strand-Mutual comedy release, "Taking the Count," carries out that military slogan, "Treat 'Em Rough," adopted by the Tank Corps.

Under protest Elinor becomes engaged to a Count DeFosso, but not for long. An overturned canoe, a runaway automobile and many other apparently unavoidable accidents convince the count that he would make a better soldier than a husband.

Miss Field handles her part in her inimitable fashion, interjecting her quaint mannerisms and charming personality in a way that heightens the comedy of this offering. While this picture is in one reel, it contains enough material and laugh "punches" for a subject of greater length. It will be released on September 3.

O. Henry Players Popular.

The current series of O. Henry pictures have presented some especial favorites in the leading roles. Agnes Ayres and Edward Earle, favorites with the public as feature stars, take the hero and heroine parts, and have blended so perfectly with the O. Henry atmosphere as to win credit equal to their best multiple-reel work. Miss Ayres has been in a considerable number of O. Henry productions during the last year, while Mr. Earle began to take part in them a little more recently, each being cast whenever the style of the story warranted. These productions are being directed by Kenneth Webb.

The latest O. Henry release is "Transients in Arcadia" with a New York setting.

Glaum Play a Story of Today.

In "A Law Unto Herself," a Paralta play, Louise Glaum plays the role of a French girl forced into a marriage with a Prussian. They spend their honeymoon in Germany, where she learns that the German wife is entirely subservient to her husband's will.

"It is hard to be the wife of a German," the wife of her husband's cousin tells her, and she determines to be a law unto herself and defy her husband's Prussian will.

Her strong defiance of his wishes and his secret preparations for the day when Germany shall invade France make "A Law Unto Herself," a powerful drama treating a subject of world-wide interest today. It is being distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Exhibitors See and Like Two Hayakawa Pictures

PACIFIC Coast exhibitors are manifesting a personal interest in the release at an early date of the new productions which Sessue Hayakawa, the well known silent drama exponent, is to be starred.

Last week three exhibitors from San Francisco and one each from San Diego and Tucson visited the Hayakawa studio and saw "His Birthright" and "The Temple of Dusk," the first and second of the new pictures, run in the projection theatre.

Two exhibitors from Portland and three from Seattle were the guests of the star, who after entertaining them at luncheon took them to the theatre to view the first two pictures and also several of the big scenes of the production upon which at present he is engaged.

All of the showmen were enthusiastic over the new pictures.

Animated Gets Three Records.

The Animated Weekly, released this week by Universal, includes scenes snapped at athletic and sporting events when three world's records were broken. It shows Ralph de Palma burning up the track at Sheepshead Bay when he set a record of 111 miles an hour recently in the International Sweepstakes. Harold Kruger, of Honolulu, is filmed in the performance of swimming with the backward stroke, in which he broke the old record at Belmar, N. J. Claire Gilligan is setting a new record in the 880-yard swim for women. Other pictures in the series show New York's first women police; the setting of unusual fly traps in Los Angeles; dusky warriors from Tahiti, Society Islands, off to fight in France, and scenes of ski jumping.

Good Support for Madge Kennedy.

A cast of prominent screen players supports Madge Kennedy in her Goldwyn picture, "The Kingdom of Youth," by Charles A. Logue, this star's first production of Goldwyn's second year output. Tom Moore is Madge Kennedy's leading man. He duplicates in "The Kingdom of Youth" his performance with the same star in "The Danger Game."

Marie de Wolfe, prominently identified with many high-class stage productions and equally well known for her work before the camera, makes her first appearance in Goldwyn pictures. Another important part is in the capable hands of Lee Baker. Jennie Dickerson, remembered by New York's first-nighters for her characterizations in big stage productions, has the role of Aunt Sophronia.

Vitagraph Serial Half Finished.

"The Iron Test," the new Vitagraph serial being directed by Paul Hurst and which will feature Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway, is more than half completed. This company works at least from two to three nights every week, as there is so much of the story that it is to be told in the vicinity of the circus-flares. Director Hurst has taken his company to Balboa Beach, where three or four days' work is the program. Tony Moreno, Carol Holloway and other principals in the cast comprise Mr. Hurst's party.

Two New Farnum Players.

Two more players have been added to the cast supporting William Farnum in 'The Man of Power," the drama written by Frank Lloyd, which Mr. Farnum has just begun at Hollywood, Cal. Louise Lovely will play the part of Helen Garfield, the oil king's daughter, and Leatrice Joy will portray the role of Florence, Farnum's fiancee, in the first part of the drama.

State Rights Department

Conducted by C. S. SEWELL

Tourneur Secures Film Rights to "My Lady's Garter"

MAURICE TOURNEUR PRODUCTIONS announces the purchase of the photoplay rights to the late Jacques Futrelle's famous novel, "My Lady's Garter." In a magazine in which it appeared as a serial it was very popular, and when published in book form later ran through many editions.

The story is said to have many unusual twists in construction, which will afford Mr. Tourneur many opportunities to work out surprises and novel effects. An unusual cast is promised for this production, which will be distributed in the open market, as all the offerings of the Maurice Tourneur Productions are being placed through Hiller & Wilk, Inc. A very large price is said to have been paid for the rights to the novel. The scarcity of high-grade material is so evident and pressing that producers are competing against each other, with the result that material like "My Lady's Garter" brings prices that are ten-fold greater than they were two years ago. I am very glad that such is the case, because it will encourage authors and dramatists of the first rank to give serious consideration to the needs of the screen."

Gaumont Shows Survivors of Torpedoed Troopship

GAUMONT GRAPHIC NO. 21, released August 16, is said to be unusually interesting. It shows the pictures of the torpedoed troopship "President Lincoln" and many views of the officers and crew of that steamer, and the 800 survivors rescued by our destroyers.

Two important foreign missions which have recently arrived in the United States are shown—the Czecho-Solvak Military Mission, accompanied by Prof. Masaryk, Commander-in-Chief of the Czecho-Slovak Army, and the Italian journalists who have come to this country on an official mission, and who were introduced to the President by George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information.

The War Department has transferred the Aerial Mail Service to the Post Office Department. The transfer is shown in this number of the Graphic, with photographs of the first superintendent of the Aerial Mail Division of the Post Office Department, and the first civilian carriers of the sky.

Among the other subjects in this issue are beautifully photographed scenes showing how society women are saving the berry crop where no other labor was available, the 700 "students" who are taking swimming lessons as a part of the school course in a California city, and the beautiful Greek Harvest Festival presented in Gloucester, Mass., for the benefit of wounded soldiers and children and orphans of soldiers.

"Still Alarm" in Pictures Duplicating Stage Success

THAT famous old melodrama, "The Still Alarm," which for many years gladdened the hearts of patrons of the popular priced theatres, is said to be duplicating its success as a motion picture of red blood and virility. In the week of August 8 the cinematized version played to a capacity week at the Strand Theatre, Newark, N. J. Reports also indicate great success over the Keith, Proctor, Moss and Loew time.

"The Still Alarm" is one of the banner features of the Pioneer Film Corporation, and is said to offer a series of thrills that evoke genuine enthusiasm.

Arrow Classifies Films Based on Booking Value

IN ORDER to impress upon the independent buyer the booking values of the attractions which they are handling the Arrow Film Corporation has devised a table setting forth the class in which each production listed should be played, based on estimated booking values, the idea being that the buyer can then take the estimate of the Arrow, compare it with his own, and then arrive at a basis upon which the production is offered.

The Arrow has based this classification on the individual merits which must enter into a production:

Strength of story, popularity of star, direction, acting, photography, scenic setting and interior setting, editing, lighting effects, titling, art direction.

A percentage has been alloted to each and an average struck as to what the production should bring per day for the first two months. The following are the classifications:

AA, to be played on percentage; A†, $100 a day or over; A, $100 a day; B†, $75 a day or over, but less than $100; B, $75 a day; C†, $50 a day or over, but less than $75; C, $50 a day; D†, $35 a day or over, but less than $50; D, $35 a day; E†, between $25 and $35 a day; E, $25 a day; F†, between $15 and $25 a day; F, $15 a day; G, less than $15 a day.

Marcus Loew Deals With Producers' Distributing Co.

AMONG the well known theatre owners who have taken advantage of the Producers' Distributing Corporation franchise for twelve special productions during the coming year is Marcus Loew The Loew application was among the firs. to be filed. The first offering under this new play is now ready for the screen and will be released at an early date. Meanwhile Mr. Hall is considering the relative merits of several other features with a view to announcing as his second picture an extra attraction to show the ability of the Producers' Distributing Corporation to live up to the ambitious program planned for the coming season.

Magnet Exchange Moves.

Due to rapidly increasing business, in spite of the hot weather and the disadvantages of their old location, Jules Burnstein, manager, announces that on and after August 28 the Magnet Film Exchange will be located in suite 810-800, at 729 Seventh avenue, New York, and a hearty invitation is extended to all to visit the new quarters.

The organization is now handling the northern New Jersey as well as New York rights to W. H. Productions Company's offerings and is preparing for a big campaign when "Mickey" is released.

Excellent Support Works in New Petrova Feature

AMONG the prominent players appearing in support of Madame Petrova in "The Panther Woman" is Tefft Johnson, well known for his work both as an actor and a director. Mr. Johnson only appears in a few scenes where he has the role of the Governor of New York at a political banquet. Other actors of note in this production include Vernon Steel, Frederick Truesdale, Rockcliffe Fellowes, Norma Seifert, Gene Burnell, Violet Reid, Mathilde Barlng, James Fury, together with Captain Harry Lambart, who in addition to being a player has also directed several productions.

Tourneur Selects Melodrama for Psychological Reasons

"WHY did I select a big melodrama for my first independent production?" says Maurice Tourneur in discussing "Sporting Life," which will be released early in September. "Because every psychological reason points to a demand for melodrama.

"The war has changed the course of our lives. It is uppermost in everybody's thoughts. We are speedily learning the lessons of supreme sacrifice, of adventure, of throwing our very lives in the balance for a principle.

"So America has come to demand certain things in its amusement. Its entertainment must first of all be optimistic; second, quick moving, or audiences will forget the stage or screen in thinking of the problems of life; third, it must be full of action, because our life today is brimful of action. Melodrama is the one thing to fill these psychological needs. I feel that a fourth great psychological demand is coming—for romance. We aren't quite ready for it yet. The excitement of our entry into the Flanders battle line is still keying us to a high tensity. The day of the introspective, analytical drama is passed for the time being. We will want romance—sheer, old fashioned romance—and lots of it."

Mr. Tourneur is a student of psychology. His library includes practically every work on the subject. He was also once a pupil of the sculptor, Rodin, and studied under the famous French artist, De Chavannes, and he was associated on the stage with Antoine, one of the most artistic of French producers, and with Madame Rejane, the famous French actress.

Mr. Morris Pouzzner is now in charge of New Haven office of the American Feature Film Company of New England, and George Charron, formerly of the Boston office of Foursquare, has also become associated with this company, and is now traveling out of New Haven.

Keen Interest Shown in "The Hand of Vengeance"

THE large number of inquiries being received by the Gaumont Company from exhibitors throughout the country indicate the interest that has been aroused by the announcement of their new serial "The Hand of Vengeance." "What Kind of a story is it?" "What makes it different?" "What is the Hand of Vengeance?" are a few of the questions asked.

The title refers not only to the hero, but to what he accomplishes. Defrauded of his fortune and left dying on the desert, the hero returns, and impatient of legal delays uses ingenious methods to recover his stolen fortune. A famous crime investigator tries to capture him, and then begins many battle of wits. After recovering his own fortune, he becomes the avenger of the wrongs of others.

Its "difference" lies in the fact that it does not rely on fights, wild beasts, or unreal improbable situations to make it interesting. The story is said to be intensely human, and situations real and clean, and the suspence is said to pile up to a smashing climax, with something doing in every foot, and plenty of thrills.

The serial is being sold on state right basis, and half of the territory has been disposed of.

Arrow Film Corporation announces that information previously furnished and published in our issue of August 17 to the effect that "The Sunset Princess" had been sold to the Quality Film Corporation, Atlanta, for the Southern states, is incorrect, and that rights to this production have been secured by the Sipe Film Corporation, 66 Walton street, Atlanta, for Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee and South Carolina.

Frank Hall Announces Evelyn Nesbit Feature

AS the first offering of his newly formed company, the Producers' Distributing Corporation, Frank Hall announces Evelyn Nesbit in "Her Mistake," which will be released under the plan outlined in a previous issue, that is, of furnishing exhibitors with twelve special productions a year at the fixed prices of ten, twenty and thirty dollars a day, no matter how successful from a box-office standpoint the productions may prove to be. Another feature of this plan is that while the franchise holders sign for all twelve pictures, they have the privilege of canceling the contract with a two-picture notice.

In speaking of the first production, Frank Hall says, "If I can give my fellow exhibitors a thousand dollar a week picture every month for thirty dollars a day, all the better. I have made a careful study of conditions during the past year with this move in mind. Confining my efforts to the buying and booking of special productions through my different companies in the past, I know I can supply the theatres with the best extra attractions the market affords, at a thirty dollar top price and with no strings tied to the proposition. It stands to reason that every production will not be of Evelyn Nesbit box office value. Some may fall below it and some may even surpass it. But don't forget that it is to my interest and the interest of everyone concerned that the Producers' Distributing Corporation supply the very biggest attractions the market affords.

The new company is now fully organized and a large sales force under the supervision of Lynn S. Card is operating from the third floor of the Leavitt Building, and are closing a number of contracts with exhibitors for twelve months' output.

ACCORDING to Dr. W. E. Schallenberger of Arrow Film Corporation the state rights market seems to have taken on added energy within the past sixty days. The reason for this is evident in the fact that motion picture theatre proprietors have been advised of program offerings to be made for the 1918-1919 season, and have formulated their policy so as to leave open a substantial amount of time for independent attractions and, furthermore, experience seems to have taught them that short-length productions can be procured from state rights exchanges, of equal merit and sometimes superior merit to the short-length attractions offered by program houses.

"I have always endeavored to keep a finger on the pulse of the market's demands, and my most optimistic expectations are more than realized. The various reissues we have been offering are being rapidly disposed of and we are now preparing a series of other reissues, being the pick of over 200 negatives of one and two reels.

"These, together with the larger independent and special attractions which are being offered by the Arrow Film Corporation should place an independent exchange in a position of being able to supply theatres with a substantial amount of their photoplays.

Timely Cartoons Are Shown in Ford Weekly

The Weekly is furnished gratis, the exhibitor paying express charges to and from exchanges.

In another article in this issue, The Griever Distributing Corporation announces a list of several state rights exchanges through which plans have been made for distribution of the "Ford Weekly."

"Sins of the Kaiser" Will Soon Be Ready for Market

FRANK G. HALL is enthusiastic about a coming Producers' Distributing Corporation feature entitled "Sins of the Kaiser." After a private showing of the picture, which has now reached the cutting and titling stages of production, Mr. Hall predicted that it would prove one of the biggest money makers of any picture dealing with the secret activities of the Kaiser and his conscienceless agents.

"'Sins of the Kaiser' is a splendid title and it fits the subject like a glove," said Mr. Hall. "That is the style of pictures we want; big subjects with powerful stories and an advertising angle that will allow the exhibitor to stir up his neighborhood."

Whether "Sins of the Kaiser" will be the second or third Producers' Distributing Corporation release will be decided in a few days.

Ince Film Attractions for Associated Pictures, Inc.

OPERATORS GET BIG WAGE INCREASE

San Francisco Projectionists Now Earn $42 Weekly as Compared with $35 Formerly—Working Hours Unchanged

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

THE moving picture operators' union of San Francisco recently made a request for higher wages and for a change in working conditions, and this has been acted upon by a committee of exhibitors affiliated with the United Motion Picture Industry of Northern California. After due consideration it was decided to grant the increase in wages asked but to make no changes in hours. The new scale for operators is $42 a week, as compared with the former scale of $35, but eight hours will constitute a day's work, as in the past. The general expression of opinion on the part of exhibitors was that the present is no time for a reduction in hours, available man-power being at a low ebb as it is.

New Shipping Regulations Explained.

Members of the United Motion Picture Industry of northern California met on August 14 to hear H. B. Eyde, inspector in the Bureau of Explosives, explain the new regulations relating to the shipment of moving picture films. Preparations are being made to conform with these, and no difficulty is anticipated in meeting the new requirements.

Pershing Film Gets Big Publicity.

Through the efforts of the publicity committee of the film division of the California State Council of Defense "Pershing's Crusaders" has received an immense amount of publicity of a highly attractive nature, and records for attendance are being made in almost every theatre where it is being shown. It recently opened for a return engagement at the Alhambra theatre in this city, and an added attraction was the personal appearance of George W. Coover, a California boy, who, for twenty-three months was a prisoner in a German camp, finally making his escape after many attempts. United Railway cars all bore window cards, and a car with twenty-four sheet posters was also used on the downtown lines. Army and navy bands donated their services, and even the post office department assisted, postmen distributing dodgers on their routes. The picture was shown for four days at the Liberty theatre, San Jose, added attractions being records of Pershing's voice and the appearance of Festyn Davis, leader of singing at Camp Fremont, who led the great audiences in the singing of war songs. At the T. & D. theatre, Stockton, all former records for attendance were broken at a four-days' showing, industrial concerns engaged on Government work permitting their employees to parade with their bands. W. G. Holcombe has been placed in charge of the booking of all war films in the office of the All Star Features Distributors, Inc.

War Films Go to State Library.

Sol L. Lesser, chairman of the California Division, United States Official War Films, which has been made a part of the State Council of Defense, advises that arrangements have been completed whereby one copy of each war film issued by the National Division of Films will be filed at the library at Sacramento upon completion of its initial showing in the theatres throughout the State. The films will then be available for public showing by patriotic and educational bodies at the cost of transportation, upon an arrangement similar to that employed in the issuing of books from the library. This will make a practically free distribution for non-commercial purposes.

Griffith Picture Starts Ninth Week.

The great Griffith productions, "Hearts of the World," has entered upon its ninth week at the Alcazar theatre, and the end of the engagement is not in sight. For a time it seemed likely that the showing would have to be brought to a close at the end of the eighth week, owing to a booking at Portland, Ore., but an extra print was secured in record time and the local run will be continued indefinitely. This production has also been shown for three weeks at the Orpheum theatre, Oakland, establishing a record for that city.

"Finger of Justice" Breaks Records.

Ed. I. Hudson, Select salesman, has just returned from a trip into southern Oregon, which is known among Seattle exchange men as a very poor territory. Mr. Hudson says that if business is supposed to be dull there now he'd hate to have the burden of booking it when business is good.

H. G. Rosebaum, Paramount-Artcraft's Northwest manager, returned this week from a visit to Spokane.

TWO LABOR DAY OPENINGS IN DETROIT

The Lincoln Square and the Regent Begin Operation Then—The Former Will Change Four Times Weekly

By Jacob Smith, 719 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

THE new Lincoln Square Theatre, Fort and Military, Detroit, will open for business Labor Day. Manager Jack Mowat has definitely set on the policy of four changes weekly. The theatre will seat nearly 2,000—all seats on one floor. It is one of the largest and prettiest theatres in Detroit, being constructed throughout of the very best materials and equipped throughout with the best that money can buy. The stage is the third largest in the country and can handle any kind of a legitimate production. The stage has a 45 foot opening and is 108 feet wide and 55 deep. The theatre will be equipped with two Simplex machines and a Twin-47 Hertner transverter. The lessee of the Lincoln Square Theatre is James Steele, division manager for the Famous Players-Lasky Company. Jack Mowat, house manager, was for many months in charge of the Maxine and was also for several years manager of the Empire Theatre for A. J. Gilligham.

The Regent Theatre will positively reopen Labor Day with its new policy of first-run pictures, each picture to stay at least for one week. Tom Faland, manager of the Orpheum, will do all of the booking for the Regent. It will have Henry Santrey as vocal entertainer and his salary is said to be around $200 per week. There will be a fifty-piece orchestra—selections on the big Kimball organ—besides the best pictures and other entertainment.

Educational's President in Detroit.

Charles Dean, president of the Educational Distributing Corporation, was in Detroit last Friday conferring with Harry Abbott, the local manager. Mr. Dean incidentally is making a trip throughout the country to open branch offices. "We have discovered a tremendous field for interesting short subjects—a demand that is becoming greater and greater," he said. "We decided that we would establish our own selling offices in order that our subjects could be properly presented to the exhibitors. Many exhibitors do not realize that educational subjects do not necessarily mean that we are trying to school the public—but we do know that the public is interested in the things that happen all over the world and we are spending a great deal of money to secure that kind of pictures."

Madison to Show Bruce Scenics.

Thomas D. Moule, of the Madison Theatre, Detroit, has signed for fifty-two of the Bruce Scenics through the educational Distributing Corporation. This means the Madison will play a Bruce Scenic every week.

Operators Get 15 Per Cent. Increase.

The Detroit Motion Picture Operators Union has been granted its increase of about 17 per cent., the new wage scale being effective September 1. The schedule went through with very few adjustments.

Now the union musicians are demanding an increase in their new wage scale, calling for an advance of about $7 per week per man. This is being vigorously opposed by the exhibitors, who say they will run the organ rather than submit to such an increase. The increase hits particularly hard the big first-run houses employing large orchestras.

DROUGHT LESSENS NUMBER OF THEATRES

Out of 569 Houses in Texas Running Full Time Six Months Ago 299 Are Now Operating on Schedule

By Phil E. Fox, Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

CONTINUED drought conditions still are making business extremely bad in Western Texas and unless rain comes soon the eastern section of the state will begin to suffer. Cotton is burned brown and in western sections cattle are being sent to the market by the thousand at bargain prices because of lack of range.

Just how the drought has affected the moving picture business in Texas is demonstrated by the fact that 82 theatres in the Dallas territory have closed their doors during the past six months. Most of these are west of Dallas.

Of these 82 theatres which closed, six of them were in towns having other theatres as opposition. Seventy-six of them were in towns which boasted only one picture show.

Sixty-eight theatres in Dallas territory are now running only two days a week. Sixty-five are running three days a week, 23 are running four days a week, 31 are running one day a week, one is running five days a week, and 20 are running seven days a week; 299 are running six days a week.

Summing up the situation it is seen that where 569 Texas theatres were running full time six months ago, there are now only 299 operating on regular schedule.

Motion picture men attribute most of this situation to drought conditions and are sure that business will build up again in the near future. Naturally some of the shows closed through mismanagement or business reverses from other causes and of course new theatres took the place of some of the closings. Exhibitors, except in the western part of the state, are unusually optimistic over the business outlook for the winter season.

Southern Exhibitors Neglect Business.

"Motion picture exhibitors in the smaller towns of Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas are too prone to regard theatre business merely as a side line and are consequently missing the chance to make good money," says J. B. Dugger of the Dallas Vitagraph.

"We have exhibitors on our books who depend on barber shops, butcher shops, undertaking establishments, pool halls and garages to make their living, and regard the moving picture theatre as a side line. These exhibitors if they took their coats off and worked ten hours a day in the interest of their shows would score successes which would make them abandon their other enterprises for picture exhibition alone. There are hundreds of good chances in Texas towns for live exhibitors, but the man who is content to let things drift along and make no effort to please the public is merely making a few pennies where he ought to get ten-dollar bills."

Lufkin Company Gets Charter.

The State Department has granted a charter to the Lufkin Amusement Company of Lufkin with a capital stock of $4,500. Incorporators are E. L. Kurth, J. H. Kurth, Jr., and W. C. Binion.

Saloons Converted Into Theatres.

The long spacious quarters formerly occupied by Texas saloons are proving ideal for remodeling into motion picture theatres now that the Lone Star State has gone dry.

Many thirst emporiums have been converted recently into places of popular amusement. The latest is J. P. Pittman's Liberty Theatre at Port Arthur which takes the premises formerly occupied by the Manhattan bar on Proctor street. An artistic front is being built and the theatre when reconstructed will seat 600.

Majestic Theatre Opens.

The new Majestic Theatre at Tulsa, Oklahoma, with a seating capacity of 1,000 and which cost $128,000, opened for business in August. It is one of the most magnificent motion picture houses in the South.

The Majestic put "Pershing's Crusaders" over big as one of the opening attractions. Airplanes flew over the city dropping pamphlets announcing that "Pershing's Crusaders" were there. A big float with a miniature trench system showing American soldiers going over the top paraded the streets of the business districts, creating much comment. Adjoining the Majestic Theatre a war museum was opened showing German helmets, machine guns and other trophies of battle. The management had to turn 'em away.

Town of 6,000 Has Three Houses.

Goose Creek, Texas, which was bald prairie not many months ago, now has a population of 6,000 and three moving picture theatres. The reason is oil. Oil development at Goose Creek has produced the greatest field in this section of the country. Everyone there is making money and spending it, too.

Charles Trifon of the Cozy Theatre at Goose Creek reported business as being exceptional when he visited Dallas during mid-August. He booked some General features. The Dixie and Goose Creek theatres located there are also doing well.

Staged Contest for Red Cross Benefit.

The East Dallas Yellow Dog Club, an organization of youngsters who work against German propaganda, staged a swat the Kaiser contest for the benefit of the Red Cross recently. Douglas Hawley of First National provided them with one-sheets of the Kaiser, which were used as advertisements for "To Hell with the Kaiser." All comers were allowed to chuck rocks at Wilhelm, the hurling price being donated to the local Red Cross chapter.

Soldiers Arrive; Business Booms.

Houston with its twenty-six theatres is rejoicing in the fact that thousands of soldiers are again stationed there for training. For a while the moving picture show houses felt the effects of a troopless town. The boys in kahki are jamming the motion picture houses now, however, J. A. Lewis of the Gem, who was in Dallas late in August, declares that business was never better.

Wildman Wins Lieutenant's Commission.

Truly B. Wildman, for years with Fox in Dallas, appeared on film row recently in kahki with a silver bar on each shoulder. Lieutenant Wildman won his commission at the officers' training camp in Kentucky.

L. B. Remy of Goldwyn, who has just returned from a trip through Oklahoma and Arkansas, reports that the motion picture business is booming in those two states with the exception of parts of southern Oklahoma, where the drought has made itself felt. Good crops and the development of the oil industry are the causes of exceptionally good times.

John Saeg of the Grand Theatre, Ennis, has been seriously ill. He was able to visit Dallas during mid-August for the first time in many weeks.

Miss Elizabeth Johnson of Houston has leased the Beckham Opera House at Greenville, Texas. She will stage high class feature films there commencing early in September.

Herschel Thomas' Strand Theatre at Orange, Texas, opened August 28 with Rex Beach's "Heart of the Sunset." This theatre cost $70,000.

J. A. Holton of Port Arthur is remodeling his Peoples Theatre to make it accommodate 1,500 people. Shipbuilding and oil industries are making business boom there.

A. F. Chavey has bought the Hippodrome theatre at Wolfe City from Floyd Ferguson. Mr. Chavey was in Dallas looking over the big stuff late in July.

T. S. McTier, general superintendent of the General, arrived in Dallas, Monday, July 29. He will spend three weeks here visiting with Jimmy Kelly.

The Jefferson theatre, Dallas, has closed for repairs and will reopen late in August with moving pictures and vaudeville. The building is being improved and remodeled.

Trade Notes from Rochester

By L. B. Skeffington, 61 Main St., East Rochester, N. Y.

"Fit to Fight," an official United States Government film, was exhibited in this city last week at the Gordon Theatre to local drafted men. The film shows how the Government makes the men "fit to fight" and keeps them so. The management of the Gordon donated the theatre and the drafted men were admitted free.

Manager McVoy of the Morgan Theatre, in Auburn, has just put over a good contest in connection with his theatre and in an effort to find out who are the most popular girls in the city. He ran the contest in conjunction with one of the local newspapers and as a result the Morgan received all kinds of advertising and incidentally increased business during an otherwise dull period of the year.

BUILDS AN AIRDOME FOR ITS EMPLOYES

Peet Brothers Company of Kansas City Erects Outdoor Theatre on Its Grounds—Plans Closed Structure

By Kansas City News Service, 115 Railway Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.

THE Peet Brothers Manufacturing Company, of Kansas City, has recently added some features to its very complete plant. In the first place the organization provides for a welfare board headed by Mrs. Mayfield and an assistant and composed of a committee of the girls themselves. Aside from the many features which the board takes up in connection with bettering working conditions for the employees, Mrs. Mayfield takes up the problem of providing proper amusement and recreation for the people outside working hours. The company maintains a park around the plant with tennis courts and other means of recreation and several weeks ago added an open air moving picture theatre to the list. The airdome was built about an outdoor stage which was already on the grounds and seats 750. Shows are given Tuesday and Friday nights and employees admitted for five cents and outsiders for ten. Out of these charges comes a one cent war tax and the cost of upkeep. Mrs. Mayfield has charge of the booking and finds that the picture show just about pays for itself. The program consists mainly of features and news weeklies with a few comedies. Before the pictures start, or from eight to nine, a dance is held on the canvas spread tennis courts with music by a seven piece orchestra. The orchestra also provides the music for the picture show. The experiment has met with such success this summer that Mrs. Mayfield is endeavoring to arrange for an indoor theatre this winter.

Chautauquas Use Motion Pictures.

A great many chautauquas have been adopting the use of motion pictures as part of the entertainment offered. The immense amount of valuable entertaining and educational material which can be secured from a variety of films makes them an important asset to the well-balanced chautauqua program. The Metro Pictures Corporation has booked a complete run of eight days to the chautauqua at Gallatin, Mo., and also to Maysville, Mo.

By William Edward Mulligan, 3636 Second Avenue, South, Minneapolis, Minn.

It is further held that "picketing and bannering" are permissible only if done by lawful means to accomplish a lawful purpose. The decisions were given in the case of E. H. Roreback, proprietor of the New National Theatre in Minneapolis. The case grew out of a dispute between Roreback and the operators' union because Roreback discharged the operator during a dull season.

May Enter Exhibiting Business Here.

Strength was lent to the rumor that the field of competition in Minneapolis exhibiting circles is to be enlarged by outside interests when A. W. Goff, assstant general manager of Vitagraph, and H. D. Naugle, western division manager, visited the city last week and conferred with Manager E. S. Holmes on the local situation. It is understood on reliable authority that they discussed plans for entering the exhibiting business themselves by leasing or even building new theatres. Mr. Goff and Mr. Naugle have been making a tour throughout the Northwest. Moving picture men here are of the opinion that their trip was of the utmost significance. Already Vitagraph has leased theatres in New York, Chicago and Denver, and enlargement along these lines is anticipated in the Twin Cities.

The new Vitagraph plan, which permits of the booking of 52 features for 52 weeks, with each star rotating at intervals of six weeks, and under which release dates of each star's production are guaranteed for one year in advance, is an unqualified success in the Northwest, according to Manager E. S. Holmes of the Minneapolis Vitagraph Exchange, who reports that new contracts are coming in at a highly satisfactory rate. "Prospects for the fall business were never better than they are at present," he said. "I have increased my staff of salesmen from six to nine and divided the territory in the expectation of doing a booming business."

Near Top in Race for World Trophy.

The Northwest is nearing the top in the contest for the trophy offered by the Moving Picture World for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit branch office closing the greatest number of "Pershing" contracts in proportion to the number of theatres in the territory of the exchange. With 1,164 theatres in the Minneapolis territory as compared with 322 theatres in Washington, D. C., it is believed that Manager E. R. Pearson of the Minneapolis branch will have to secure contracts from about one-half of his exhibitors in order to win. He is confident that the northwest exhibitors will bring the trophy to Minneapolis. Because all contracts must be in the New York office by September 1 Manager Pearson is urging every exhibitor who intends to play "Pershing's Crusaders" to send in their applications at once.

Camp Offers Theatre Opportunities.

THE Government has let contracts for the new artillery cantonment at Stithton, Ky., which will extend over to West Point, and work has started. This camp will cost close to $15,000,000 and will accommodate nearly 55,000 soldiers. As neither Stithton nor West Point has theatres or amusements indications are that there will be room for some fairly big theatres, as Louisville is the nearest city of any size, and it is thirty miles from the camp. Camp Taylor now has over 50,000 men on hand, many sleeping in tents, and when the new camp is in operation there will be more than 100,000 men quartered within thirty-five miles of the city. The new camp will be known as Camp Knox, being named after General Henry Knox, artillery commander under George Washington in the revolutionary war, who later became Secretary of State and Commander in Chief.

More Suits Filed Against Pastime.

Winchester, Ky.—Suits are still being filed against the owners and operators of the Pastime theatre, in connection with the catastrophe last spring when the wall of an adjoining building crashed to the roof of the theatre, causing thirteen persons to be killed and many injured. Col. Frisbie has just filed two suits of $25,000 each for the loss of his twin sons, and Ellis Noel, a suit for the same amount for the loss of his son, Houston Noel. The City of Winchester, Mrs. C. R. West, Mrs. J. T. Luman, Vic Bloomfield, Arthur Bloomfield, and Fonda Minor are named defendants. Mrs. West owned the building in which the theatre was operated, Mrs. Luman the building from which the wall fell, and the Bloomfields and Mr. Minor represented the operating company. The city is named defendant for not having the wall torn down after a fire in the adjoining building, and for failure to close the theatre when it was known the wall was waving.

A verdict was brought in by a jury a few days ago, in which the company was held guilty of the charge. In his petition for a new trial, Mr. Sinclair held that the case was decided through prejudice and that wrong instructions were given the jury. Judge Lancaster has granted a new trial, but hasn't set the date as yet.

FILMS FUNERAL OF BRITISH AVIATOR

Cincinnatians Make Photographic Record of Military Obsequies Given Captain James Fitz Morris, a British Ace

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati, Ohio.

MOVING pictures of one of the most impressive Cincinnati events since the beginning of the war have been sent to England, to serve as evidence of the fraternal feeling of this country toward the British and British soldiers. The pictures were made at the military funeral accorded the late Captain James Fitz Morris, M. C., of the Royal Flying Corps, a British ace who came to Cincinnati with other English and American aviators, to start on a 3,000 mile journey covering a number of cities. Captain Fitz Morris was killed when his machine fell out of control at the Western Hills Country Club, just as he was starting to circle over the city, and on the following Saturday his body was borne through the streets on a caisson with full military honors. The pictures were also shown in Cincinnati theatres.

McMahan & Jackson File Suit.

McMahan & Jackson of Cincinnati have just filed suit in Louisville, Ky., against the Walnut Street Amusement Company, for damages of $51,000, which they declare are due them on account of the failure of the company to comply with a lease of the Walnut Street theatre, said to have been made to McMahan & Jackson at $12,000 a year for seven years and $13,000 for three years. The firm organized the Consolidated Theatre Company, with a capital stock of $25,000, to handle the Walnut, but the theatre was never turned over to them, and the damage suit referred to has resulted. The lease was signed Sept. 1, 1917, according to the petition, and the Consolidated Theatre Company was incorporated on September 20, immediately thereafter, indicating the belief of McMahan & Jackson that the deal was in satisfactory shape.

Gap Between Seasons Bridged by Films.

Following a custom which is significant of the vast progress which moving pictures have made in the esteem of the "legitimate" theatre during the past few years, the closing of the summer season of pictures at both the Grand and the Lyric, and the opening of the regular season at those two houses, will be bridged by picture offerings of unusual interest. At the Lyric, as the case has been for several seasons, Lyman J. Howe will hold forth with his moving-picture travel festival, which always meets with large patronage; while the Grand has arranged, it is understood, for an attraction of large caliber, in the new Griffith production, "Hearts of the World."

Star Runs "Triple Trouble" a Week.

The much-discussed Essanay Chaplin film, "Triple Trouble," had its first exhibition in Cincinnati for a week at the Star theatre, on Fountain Square, and apparently met with the full approval of the public, judging by the large houses which were handled by the management, and their laughter and applause.

Shuberts Abandon Theatre Plan.

Well-developed plans for the construction of a big theatre on the site of the old Y. M. C. A. building at Seventh and Walnut streets, to be controlled by the Shuberts, have fallen through, as the plan did not meet with the approval of the company. After hearing a full report on the local situation from a representative, the Shuberts decided that with the Palace nearing completion, Cincinnati has enough theatres in the downtown section, and that another would not be a safe venture, at least at the present time. The location was probably against the plan, as Seventh and Walnut is a trifle out of the beaten path for theatrical purposes.

Metro's "Kaiser" Gets a Pro-German.

The Screen Classics' production of "To Hell With the Kaiser," distributed by the Metro organization, added one more to the long list of warmly patriotic pictures which have featured the summer season at the Grand, and in some respects appeared to reach a climax. At any rate, it achieved the distinction which a previous patriotic picture at the Grand also had, of causing the arrest of a pro-German. A woman at one of the exhibitions took special pains to indicate her disapproval of American soldiers and sentiments in it, and to applaud the Crown Prince, German soldiers at the goose-step, and similar German features. Indignant patrons forced her to leave the house, followed her and had her arrested.

Harry Hyman, roadman for Metro, has been acting as manager during Manager Skirboll's trip east to attend the Mutual annual convention.

So successful has the community singing idea been with Garden Theatre patrons here that Manager Dan Burgum of the Garden will continue the plan indefinitely. Prof. Harry Murrison, who is in charge, is using Billy Sunday tactics and his plan works fine.

Ericson & Son, managers of the Empress in Cedar Falls, have taken over the Cotton in that city also. The latter will play big features and road attractions.

Manager M. J. Frisch of Universal made a successful trip through southeastern Iowa last week, bringing home a nice bunch of contracts.

A. H. Blank has signed up the greater part of the Paramount output for his Garden and Palace theatres here. Fatty Arbuckle comedies will be shown at the latter house first run and the longer features divided between the two houses in conjunction with Select, Jewel and the attractions of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, of which Mr. Blank is Iowa member.

Harry Watts, former manager of the Palace Theatre here, is now at Camp Dodge wearing the khaki.

W. F. Coleman, assistant manager of Paramount, made a flying trip to one of the small towns about Des Moines during the week. He reports that contracts for the year's output are coming in rapidly.

Manager Holah, of the A. H. Blank Picture Enterprises, has moved to Omaha and is now handling the distribution of the Blank films from that point, subbranches being maintained in Des Moines and Kansas.

Regular admission prices were resumed as follows: Matinees, general admission, 15c.; reserved boxes, 25c.; evenings, 25c. and 35c. with reserved boxes, 50c. The Rex Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, presented "Damaged Goods" during the three days of August 19, 20 and 21 under special conditions. The Manitoba Board of Censors passed the picture for presentation to segregated crowds only, and children under eighteen years of age were refused admission at all times. The theatre arranged a schedule of presentations for men and women only, men being admitted on Monday afternoon, Tuesday night and Wednesday afternoon. The feature was shown continuously from 10 a. m. to 11 p. m. on each of the three days. A general admission of fifteen cents was charged.

Gladish Becomes Photoplay Editor.

Announcement has been made by the Toronto Daily News of the appointment of W. M. Gladish as photoplay editor of the paper. This development is in line with the policy of the Daily News to devote considerable attention to the moving picture field and the newspaper has rapidly advanced to the position of being one of the leading publications of Canada in so far as its moving picture department is concerned. Some time ago the Daily News invented an advertising directory that now occupies almost a whole page of the Saturday dramatic section. This was followed up by the establishment of a daily directory under the caption of "Today at the Movies." This feature now occupies almost a column of the paper each day. Then, to make the paper still more solid with exhibitors, moving picture fans and others, the decision was reached to publish a distinct moving picture news section each day with a special spread on Saturday. Mr. Gladish, of Toronto, was the man chosen to handle this news feature.

Toronto's Coliseum Has Big Week.

Although it was midsummer the Coliseum Theatre, Queen street east and Leuty avenue, Toronto, enjoyed one of the greatest weeks in the history of the theatre from July 29 to August 3. This happened, too, in the face of a slight increase in admission prices. Shows were changed three times during the week.

Manager Stonge packed 'em in twice each evening during the week, and also on Saturday afternoon for a special matinee. The advance in admission price consisted of asking the patrons to pay their own war tax of one cent. Heretofore the war tax had been included in the fifteen-cent admission price, but now it is 15 cents and one cent extra for the tax.

The Coliseum is one of the oldest suburban houses in Toronto, and was recently taken over by Modern Theatres, Limited, when Fred Stonge was placed in charge. An unusual feature in connection with the record business which the house is now enjoying is that it is competing with a large summer amusement park only a few feet away, where outdoor moving pictures are presented without charge. A number of changes are to be made in the Coliseum before the start of the fall season.

The Canadian Government has arranged for the distribution of conservation propaganda pictures in Western Canada. Isadore Allen, of Calgary, Alberta, has been named as the official distributor of government films for Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia. Arrangements are being made for the release of a special 1,000-foot picture at least once every four weeks. Three prints of each picture will be placed in the hands of Mr. Allen, and with these copies it is expected that every theatre in the four provinces will secure a booking. The titles of the various films have not yet been announced.

Regal Gets More of First National.

Regal Films, Limited, the big Canadian film renting company, has arranged for the distribution in Eastern Canada only of twelve or more special productions of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit in connection with the release of many other pictures during the coming year.

Regal has also arranged for the Canadian booking rights during the coming year of the Screen Classics, one of which will be released every two weeks. These will be handled at all six offices of the company from St. John to Vancouver.

J. O'Donnell Managing Theatre.

Joseph O'Donnell, well known throughout Ontario as a field salesman for the former Kleine office in Toronto, is putting his theatre ideas into practice. He has taken over the management of the Temple Theatre, 1032 Queen street west, Toronto.

Keeps Tab on Condition of Film.

Manager Fred Pursel, of the Lyceum Theatre, Simcoe, Ontario, has a film report system which helps both himself and the exchanges from which he books his various pictures. This consists of a tabulated form on which all details regarding the physical condition of the reels can be quickly noted and read. He makes out this form in duplicate, retaining one copy and sending the duplicate to the exchange. In this way he protects himself and at the same time he lets the exchange know about the current defects in a film.

The tabulated headings refer to misframes, scratches, loose patches, breaks, torn sprocket holes, oil, dirt, and whether a film was wound ready for use or not when received.

Washington Trade Letter

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

Gold Stars in Grandall's Service Flag.

WHEN the Grandall Amusement Company raises its service flag two bright gold stars will stand out prominently in the center. In the recent casualty lists there appeared the name of Fred Fagan, who was employed by the company in the operating department of the Avenue Grand theatre. Mr. Fagan was a member of the District of Columbia militia organization that saw duty on the Mexican border and he went over to France with the Rainbow Division. The other boy was Carl Moyer, who lost his life while on duty at a munitions plant in Eastern Pennsylvania. He also had been employed in the booth of the Avenue Grand.

Triangle Corporation Notes.

The service flag of the Triangle Distributing Corporation here has two stars representing high flyers, for two of its former employes are in the air service. An outstanding feature is that succeeding cashiers have all found their way into the army. It started when E. G. West was commissioned a first lieutenant of Company A, of the 302d Stevedore Regiment. When he resigned his position with the film company, Lea Richmond was sent here from the New York office as his successor. Mr. Richmond is now at the air Service training school at Cornell University. The third cashier to go was Harry Lund, who was sent from the home office to suceeed Mr. Richmond. He has just returned to his home in Brooklyn, New York City, preparatory to joining the colors on August 26.

E. R. Carr, who for some time was with the Paramount Pictures Corporation, leaving to join Triangle and becoming manager of the St. Louis branch, is at Cambridge, Mass., undergoing instruction as a Marine Corps aviator. Upon his return to Washington when transferred from St. Louis, he became sales manager for this territory.

Richard W. Wallace, the exchange's shipping clerk, joined the infantry and was sent from Camp Oglethorpe to "Somewhere in France."

The girl in the list is Miss Bertha Carrico, who was one of the film inspectors. She is in the Navy, serving as yeowoman.

Camp Notes.

Emmett Jasper, who is well known to the film industry locally, having held employment at a number of the exchanges, including General, Vitagraph and Universal, is receiving the congratulations of his friends on having been sent to the Officers' Training Camp at Camp Lee, near Petersburg, Va. Mr. Jasper had the honor to be one of the four men selected from among nearly two hundred men who had been undergoing instruction at the Bliss Electrical School, in the classes for enlisted men of the Army. Mr. Jasper was at one time manager of the Welcome theatre, in Southwest Washington.

At Camp Lee is another friend of the film trade in the person of Rudolph Berger, former manager of the Philadelphia K-E-S-E exchange and prior to that time, of the Washington exchange. He was inducted into the service some few weeks ago and is now at the Virginia cantonment.

All Around the Town.

Arthur Robb, manager of the Knickerbocker theatre, has returned from his vacation, which included the usual "looking them over on Broadway." Accompanied by Mrs. Robb he visited many of the theatres in the Big Town gathering ideas to be put into effect at the Metropolitan when it is opened, of which he is to be manager.

"Doc" Herbst has just put the Circle theatre, on Pennsylvania Avenue, into good running form for the fall. The auditorium has been entirely reseated and paint and soap and water have been used to good advantage inside and out.

"It is my sincere desire," said Mr. Fox to a representative of the Moving Picture World, "to give my fullest co-operation to the exhibitors of Paramount and Artcraft pictures and to attain their highest expectation through the box office. My policy is fairness to all, as along these lines only can I attain my highest ambitions.

Mr. Fox has appointed three new representatives, each responsible for a given zone. J. Thomas Ward has zone No. 3, and has his permanent headquarters in Utica. M. W. Kempner has zone No. 1, with headquarters in Buffalo. Nate Dolson is in charge of zone No. 2, with headquarters in Syracuse.

"We were successful," said Mr. Fox, "in making the week of September 1 national Paramount and Artcraft week in Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse and Utica, with thirty exhibitors, running a full week of Paramount and Artcraft pictures. Full-page advertisements booming this campaign have been run in the leading newspapers of these cities."

Cobb Returns to New York.

C. Lang Cobb, special representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who was in charge of the company's Buffalo exchange for fourteen weeks, has returned to New York City.

Carr and Becker Return from Trip.

Henry Carr, manager of Shea's Theatre, Buffalo, and Al Becker, of the Becker Film and Supply Company, of this city, have returned from a motor trip to New York. Their program included a delightful outing at Manhattan Beach, where they visited the summer home of Michael Shea, owner of Shea's vaudeville theatre and Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo.

Books the Official Red Cross Film.

L. D. Wolfe, manager of the General, Buffalo, announces that Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, and the Temple Theatre, Syracuse, have booked the official Red Cross picture showing the Fourth of July parade in Paris. He says the reel has been contracted for by all the Keith houses throughout the country. The General, Buffalo, is also having a lively business, booking "Our Boys at Camp Dix." This is a five-reel series, showing a 1,000-foot episode a week.

Many Theatres to Open Labor Day.

Labor Day will be the date for the opening of several Buffalo moving picture theatres which were closed during the summer. The houses have been repainted, redecorated and recarpeted and otherwise put in a spic and span condition. A drop in temperature near the end of August helped business at the theatres that remained open all the time or part of each week during the summer.

Dayton News Letter

By Paul J. Gray, Dayton Theatre Building, Dayton, Ohio.

Uses Open Booking Policy with Success.

SINCE opening, the Dayton theatre, at Dayton, has booked films entirely on the open market, and to say that the policy was successful would be putting the fact lightly. Many big features have been played at the Dayton, and even bigger ones are promised for the future. So stated Mark Gates, managing director, who will use within the next two months such features as "Tarzan of the Apes," "Cleopatra," "Les Miserables," "Hearts of the World," and many other prominent pieces. The music at the Dayton has contributed largely to the success of the productions shown. Hewit H. Thomas, the musical director, was formerly assistant conductor at the Circle theatre, Indianapolis.

Chillicothe To Have Another Theatre.

Chillicothe, Ohio, has at last a theatre wherein her numerous visitors can be entertained with no chance of being forced to wait in line any length of time for a seat. The situation in Chillicothe was very acute at one time, and the writer remembers a visit paid to that city in April this year when the film houses (all three of them) could not begin to take care of the business that came their way. The Majestic and Royal theatres there are under the management of the Meyers Bros., who are at present remodeling the Majestic, presumably to fight the new Sherman theatre, which is being built there by mostly Dayton capital. The Majestic is a legitimate house and plays vaudeville, while the Royal is a film house.

The two other theatres are controlled by C. A. Smith. These are the Star and the Queen. With the coming of another house in Chillicothe things will be different, as this house is to also play two acts of vaudeville with the films. J. Elmer Redelle, who is to manage the Sherman, is a frequent visitor in Dayton, and when here last made the announcement of the vaudeville time secured. Mr. Redelle formerly managed the Dayton Baseball Club and, after leaving here, managed the Fairbanks theatre at Springfield, Ohio, for Gus Sun, while at that theatre he received the offer to manage the Chillicothe, Ohio.

BURHANS, Philadelphia manager of the Community Motion Picture Bureau, announces that they will shortly secure their own prints to supply the increasing demand for bookings to military camps, naval bases, forts and shipbuilding centers. J. Byrnes, formerly of the Paramount & Artcraft Exchange, has recently joined this organization as the supervisor of films. A great part of their work has also been in behalf of the Y. M. C. A. and the National War Work Council.

Green & Altman's Houses Overhauled.

Messrs. Green and Altman, managing directors of the Park, Jefferson, Susquehanna, Norris, Aurera and Cambria theatres, announce that all of their houses have received a general overhauling during the past summer and the new season will be greeted with the reopening of their Park theatre on August 30 which has been closed for extensive alteration.

Federal Commission Starts Proceedings.

The Federal Trade Commission started proceedings Monday, August 19, against the Stanley Booking Corporation of Philadelphia for alleged unfair methods in competing against independent exhibitors and exchanges. The hearing was held before Special Examiner W. T. Roberts, George McCorkle and R. R. Kane, attorneys of Washington. The first witness called was Edward J. O'Keefe and Herbert J. Elliot of Atlantic City.

Sablosky and McGuirk Increase Activities.

Sablosky and McGuirk, prominent moving picture and vaudeville promoters of Philadelphia, have taken over the Orient theatre in this city, located at Sixty-third and Woodland Avenue, the Fifty-Eighth Street Theatre at Fifty-eighth and Woodland Avenue, and the Paschall at Seventy-first and Woodland Avenue.

Three Exchanges Under One Roof.

The Goldwyn, Metro and Peerless exchanges will all be housed under one roof, at Thirteenth and Vine streets, in order to facilitate the handling of so many popular features at a greater advantage. The removal of the Metro and the Peerless from their present quarters is expected to take place about September 1. Ben Schindler, formerly of the Ridge Avenue theatre, is now managing the Leader theatre at Forty-first and Lancaster avenue.

Holtz's Son Killed in Action.

Clifton Heights.—Robert Holtz, of the Palace theatre, here, received a telegram from the Over Seas force in France announcing that his son, Robert J., had been killed in action. The news was a sad blow to the father who has the great sympathy of all his fellow exhibitors at large. Robert Holtz, Jr., was a graduate of the Clifton Heights College and belonged to the Aviation Service in the United States Army.

Philadelphia Briefs.

Judge J. O'Donnell, president of the Exhibitors' League, has been spending the summer down in Atlantic City for the benefit of his health.

Robert Katz, of the Paramount and Artcraft, will shortly leave here to join Oscar Morgan at the Washington branch, where he will be in charge of the advertising department.

In a prize contest conducted by the Parex Film Corporation among its branch managers, the Philadelphia office under Mr. Wright's management, stands third among the contestants in amount of business done.

Employes of the shipping and inspection department of the various film exchanges journeyed to Spring Mount Sunday, August 10, and enjoyed the bathing boating and other pleasures for which this resort is known.

In the selection of the two Pennsylvania exhibitors, Judge J. O'Donnell and Charles H. Goodwin, to serve on the directorate of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, a signal honor has been conferred upon the Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania.

The Stanley Company will hold an outing for its employes at Nashaminy Falls, on Sunday, August 25. The day will be given up to sports and outdoor games and a thoroughly enjoyable time is looked forward to.

Concerning Pennsylvania Exhibitors.

S. W. Yuengling, a promising exhibitor of Greencastle, Pa., has recently opened a theatre here, which he announces will be a top-notcher in this community.

Daily and Watson, of Waynesboro, have remodeled the "It" theatre and renamed it the Liberty.

Jacob Theis, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., manager of the big Orpheum theatre, recently recovered from an attack of the grip.

J. F. Higgins, of Shamokin, Pa., has been compelled to close his older house which recently survived a fire with excessive damaging effects, and is now operating the New Majestic, his only remaining house.

News from Rochester

Soldiers Thank Farren for Smokes.

Jack Farren, of the Victoria, has just received another batch of postal cards from men overseas, acknowledging receipt of smokes furnished through Jack's pet fund.

Family to Resume Showing Pictures.

After the conclusion of the summer season of musical comedyettes at the Family this week, that house will return to its regular policy of presenting photoplay features with vaudeville acts to round out the program. The house will be operated in conjunction with the Strand and the Rialto, both picture houses, and all under the general management of Albert A. Fennyvessey.

Huber May Enter Exhibiting End.

Erwin J. W. Huber, managing editor and treasurer of the Rochester Photoplay Publishing Company, publishers of The Pictureplay News, may become the operator of a string of theatres. Mr. Huber has secured options on several local houses situated in neighborhood sections and has been looking over some more. It is understood Mr. Huber represents a syndicate, of which he is the active member, and which plans to operate several picture theatres in this section of the state.

Stoffel to Enlarge the Grand.

Joe Stoffel, of the Grand Theatre, has announced that he is planning to make changes in that theatre which will permit of the seating of several hundred additional people. It is understood that another story will be added to the building, which will permit of the building of a spacious balcony.

Corinthian Will Not Show Pictures.

It has been definitely ascertained that the Corinthian Theatre will not go in for pictures this season. The Corinthian is a handsome, large theatre, erected about ten years ago, and up to the close of last season was the local home of Columbia burlesque. This season the burlesque attractions have been transferred to the Baker, which has been dark for several years. The latter has been remodeled and named the Gayety. It was understood that with the opening of the Gayety the Corinthian would go in for film specials, but it is now said that there are no plans whatever for the house and that the only present prospect is that the house will remain dark for at least a season.

Pathe to Release Two-Reel Drama.

In response to a demand, expressed at several of the Pathe offices by requests from exhibitors, Pathe will release the week of September 15 a two-reel drama with Helene Chadwick in the title role, under the name of "The Honest Thief."

"The Honest Thief" was produced by Astra under the direction of George B. Seitz, famous as Pearl White's serial director. That in itself insures that the picture has plenty of action, especially as Mr. Seitz is credited with the authorship of the story. Ed. Stanley plays the male lead.

The story is that of a girl, the cashier in a country bank, who disappears the night the bank is robbed. Naturally she is accused of the crime. The way in which her innocence is proved is by a chain of dramatic events.

"A Stitch in Time" (Fox).

The next picture which Peggy Hyland will make for the Fox Film Corporation will be "A Stitch in Time," taken from a magazine serial story written by Fred Jackson, the well known author and playwright. Miss Hyland is now at work under the direction of Carl Harbaugh on "Marriages Are Made," a romance with a patriotic flavor.

"A Stitch in Time" will be done by Miss Hyland under the direction of Harry Millarde. When it appeared in one of the recent numbers of a popular magazine, the story made a hit. An unusually large cast will support Miss Hyland and also will introduce several situations which have not yet been exploited in films.

Gloria Joy Hits High Mark.

General Film Company claims a new excellence mark for pictures featuring a child star in "Miss Mischief Maker," the third of the Oakdale productions just released. The work of Gloria Joy, the seven-year-old player, is considered especially appealing, while the story presents strength and attention value.

The lighter domestic touch has been cleverly brought out, the child and her support working at high speed. Supporting the little leading woman are Nell Saalman, Ruth Lackaye, Ethel Pepprell, Edward Jobson, Albert Rockett and Charles Dudley. The production was directed by Sherwood McDonald.

Fox Issues Herald on "Prussian Cur."

A powerful drawing of the Kaiser in one of his most sinister aspects, illustrates a herald which the Fox Film Corporation is issuing as an aid to exhibitors in advertising "The Prussian Cur."

The picture shows the Kaiser, chin in hand, his hob-nailed boots outstretched and a sword across his lap, sitting on a ruined cathedral, contemplating the waste which his armies have wrought. Behind the Kaiser is a giant American cannon cracker, painted in red and labelled "A. E. F.," for the American Expeditionary Force. The fuse of the cracker is burning, and it shows that within a very short time the Kaiser is going to be jolted out of his reverie.

Besides the billing, "The Prussian Cur," the herald contains space for the name of the theatre exhibiting the picture.

Critical Reviews and Comments

Concerning Current Productions

"THE PRUSSIAN CUR."

William Fox Creates an Effective Propaganda Melodrama Featuring a Confessed German Spy.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

ANOTHER picture created to foment the proper determination in the hearts of the Allies to "Treat 'Em Rough" in the crucial test between democracy and military autocracy has come into the market. The projection-room showing in William Fox's headquarters disclosed a cleverly devised combination of melodrama, fiction and "shots" from news weeklies. The public, in its increasingly awakened frame of mind, is sure to receive this new work with enthusiastic acclaim, and the will to win the war will be fostered and strengthened in the heart of every lover of humanity who shall gaze upon the unfolding fiction.

R. A. Walsh created "The Prussian Cur" with two commendable results likely to attend—exhibitors who play it will be measurably enriched and the spirit of patriotism will be vastly enhanced. The early scenes are visioned with a mind to impress the purpose of "kultur" upon the multitude. The most unthinking person will sense with clearness and conviction the evil purposes of world dominion that has swayed the German militarist and the Kaiser in all the years of preparation for current events. As the picture gets under way the essential symptoms and results of kultur's outbreak are clearly defined. In swift moving and well connected episodes the spectator is carried along through an illuminating digest of the world-war to date.

That the picture may hold appeal to the public demand for a plot to weld the news weekly flashes and episodes of the director's fancy into a connected whole there is an inner story of "heart interest" to grant the appeal that "movie fans" exact from pictures. In this little story, within the main narrative, two New York boys serve the heroic purpose of frustrating Captain Horst von der Goltz, the confessed and proved German spy who is featured in the presentation. There is enough of this drama to provide suspense, while the other main features of the picture unfold in progress to an inspiring conclusion.

Exception will be taken by many citizens who would respect President Wilson's recently expressed desire that mob rule shall be squelched throughout the country, as one incident is vividly reflected on the screen. One of the Kaiser's agents has stopped in a western town to call upon a German-born American and enlist his aid in aeroplane sabotage. The American-German kicks the spy out-of-doors and has him arrested. While the spy languishes in the local jail pro-Germans in the town organize a rescue party, storm the bastile and batter down the iron doors.

Just here a band of horsemen, following a caption that refers to "loyal Americans," appears in cloaks and cowls—a regalia recalling the Ku-Klux Klan—and frustrate the "pro-Germans" in their attempt to liberate the spy. Surrounding the original mob the "loyal American" mob compels the pro-Germans to kiss the flag and we are left to believe that they are marched off to the same jail they had lately assaulted. Thus in an American city "loyal Americans" are pictured in disguise while pro-Germans work in the open, the exploiting of mob for mob being a direct incentive to flaunting President Wilson's expressed wishes.

This may not be generally accepted as a fault either by the producer, the exhibitor or the general public—an individual may not assume to express more than his own opinion. But it is certain that wrong impressions may be conveyed by these scenes, when mob rule is so easily substituted, in rare instances, for the will of the courts. In all of the other scenes the psychology of the picture more properly directs the will to win than in these scenes of rowdyism.

There are plenty of thrills to quicken the pulse of the sensationally inclined; the matter of writing the titles has passed through efficient hands; the purposes of the Allies in establishing the rule of democracy in defiance of the unspeakable Hun is clearly and logically expressed. "The Prussian Cur" should make a lot of money for all concerned, while it will surely give to those who see it a stronger grip on their individual determination to "Kan the Kaiser."

"IN PURSUIT OF POLLY."

Paramount Presents Billie Burke in an Entertaining, Rapid Moving Comedy.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

BILLIE BURKE'S latest Paramount production, "In Pursuit of Polly," is a thoroughly entertaining picture with an abundance of action and good clean comedy, and the suspense is well maintained. Miss Burke is admirably cast as Polly Marsden, a role well suited to her personality.

Polly injudiciously allows herself to become engaged to three suitors, and when they all appear together to claim her hand she is in a quandary. Chancing to see a sculpture of "The Race of Atalanta" she is inspired to decide her fate in the same manner, only making the race thoroughly up-to-date by using automobiles and motorboats.

With a fifteen minute handicap, she uses her wits to elude her pursuers. One employs strategy and has a detective agency to trail her; another is thrown off the track when Polly changes her wraps with her maid, the third has trouble with his racing car, exchanges it for a "flivver" which finally runs down hill and is lost in a lake. Nevertheless all three finally reach the inn in the hills where Polly has taken refuge; but in the meantime she has been assisted by a patriotic millionaire who is doing secret service work and is on the trail of a German spy who is expected to receive papers from a mysterious woman. Of course circumstantial evidence points to the fact that Polly is the mysterious woman. The spies are captured and she is arrested as an accomplice. Just then her father and the three suitors appear. Polly reminds them of her promise to marry the first man who captures her, and says that the secret service millionaire has fulfilled the requirements, and naturally, he is perfectly willing.

There are several clever twists, and good farce comedy scenes which hold the interest and add to the entertainment value furnished by a capable supporting cast consisting of Thomas Meighan as the secret service man. A. J. Herbert, William Davidson and Alfred Hickman as the disappointed suitors, Ben Deeley as the spy, and Frank Losee as Polly's father.

The production has been cleverly directed by Chester Withey. The photography is excellent, and both the interior and exterior views are fine. The picture should prove pleasing to almost any audience.

"DAUGHTER ANGELE"

Five-Reel Triangle-Kaybee Production Features Pauline Starke in Spy Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE is something particularly timely about this number, since it concerns the capture and exposure of a spy on American shores who was caught signaling information to lurking U-boats. With the actual hostile submarines plying their nefarious business off our coasts this subject comes in for considerable realism. It gets something more than its due in fact, for the presentation breaks over into unconvincing melodrama at times. But it is all very entertaining, and holds the attention well.

The story was written by W. H. Stearns and directed by William Dowlan. Pauline Starke plays the girl heroine, Angele, her part being a quiet one until the final scenes, when she comes into more prominence. Walt Whitman has the role of Anthony Brenton, the girl's grandfather, Gene Burr appears as the traitor, Philo McCullough as the hero, and Lulu Warrenton as the scheming housekeeper. Minor roles are assumed by Myrtle Richell, Miles McCarthy, Mrs. Mackley and Harold Holland.

The story begins with an estrangement between Anthony Brenton and his daughter, Mary, the latter having married against his wishes. Mary's daughter, Angele, is smuggled into the house as a French orphan with the idea that her grandfather may some time acknowledge the relationship. The housekeeper, Mrs. Chumnige, knows the facts concerning Angele, and schemes to have her son, Frank, marry the girl. Frank is a traitor to his country, making it a practice to signal U-boats off shore. The hero appears, and Frank leads a band of night riders to capture and hang the hero and Anthony Brenton under pretense that they are the real spies. But this effort is outwitted by the girl.

The story is unnecessarily theatrical at times, but grips the attention through its up-to-the-minute subject matter.

"THE CLUTCH OF CIRCUMSTANCE"

Vitagraph Picture Featuring Corrine Griffith Is Carefully Produced.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

HENRY HOURY, the director of the Vitagraph picture, "The Clutch of Circumstance," has supplemented the work of the author, Leighton Graves Osmun, by a careful and effective production. Very little of the material used in the story is even comparatively new and several of the situations are not at all convincing; but the plot gets an excellent start and the trials of the heroine are plentiful as to number and burdened with real sorrow.

Çorinne Griffith, as Ruth Lawson, a young wife who is forced by her husband's illness to leave a quiet New England village and earn a living for them both in New York, brings a variety of good gifts to her task. She has youth, zeal, good looks and acting ability of pleasing quality. The scenes in the early part of the picture while not reflecting the exact New England atmosphere are often full of charm.

John Lawson, Ruth's husband, is an upright man, but narrow-minded, and the condition of his business compels him to devote the most of his time to it. The wife feels neglected but does not complain. When Lawson is badly injured in a runaway accident and becomes an invalid, Ruth starts for New York in search of work. She has the usual heartbreaking experience until she is brought to the notice of the leading producer of musical comedy on Broadway. Her natural talent for the stage so impresses him that he gives Ruth the star part in his new show.

Tho little country girl is a positive sensation, and the manager falls in love with her. He is inclined, at first, to take advantage of the position, and Ruth is willing to pay the price in order to raise money enough for an operation on her husband. The manager turns out to be a decent fellow, after all. Ruth gets the money honorably, discovers that her husband, after his recovery, believes the worst of her and intends to apply for a divorce. She goes back to her stage work with every prospect of becoming the wife of her manager in due course of time.

Robert Gaillard, David Herblin, Florence Deshon, Denton Vane and Esta Banks complete the cast.

"WILD LIFE"

Triangle Subject in Five Reels Presents Story of Stage Coach Days.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

WESTERN melodramas such as this dealing with familiar subject matter need the inspiration of a new idea or a great deal of action and suspense to lift them into prominence. This number, while entertaining in its way, strikes only an average gait, since it is not in any way particularly new and has no special excellence of presentation. Some of the incidents in themselves are good, such as the fall of the stage coach off the cliff, but most of them have been done many times before and with even more telling effect.

William Desmond is pleasing, as usual, in the role of the hero, Chick Ward, and Josie Sedgwick plays the girl, Helen Martin. Ed. Brady appears as the villain, and other parts are played by Dot Hagar, Orral Humphries, Graham Pettie, Eddie Peters, and Bill Patton. The story was written by M. V. Dearing, and directed by Henry Otto.

The heroine, Helen Martin, appears at a dance hall in Salinas, where she applies for work at the Blue Bell dance hall. She has been tricked by an employment agent into thinking that she can get a job as musician there. But the other girls laugh at her, with one exception, and tell her she is expected to entertain the rough men of the place. One girl befriends her, Mae Garcon. A great deal more might have been made out of this situation, it would seem.

Chick Ward, the hero, is a bad man under proper provocation, but well-meaning in his actions. The story brings out the manner in which he offends the girl and later wins her love. In the course of the story he is victimized by the villain, but gets retaliation in the end.

"HIS WIFE'S FRIEND"

A Whizzing Mack Sennett Farce Released by Paramount.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THERE is only one word to fully describe this rapidly moving farce. It seems to fly through space like an airplane, rushing from one scene of acrobatic nonsense to another so fast that the eyes can scarcely follow it. Charles Murray is in the action most of the time, and the sparring exhibition he gives with big Wayland Trask is a revelation. There are whizzing manicurists, whizzing pretty girls, whizzing acrobats and whizzing automobiles in the chase. It is almost too fast for a spectator to laugh at one scene before he is whizzed into another. It is all performance and no play to speak of, merely a vehicle on which to hang comedy situations of the accented kind. It will get plenty of laughs, and that is all it is probably intended for.

"FAME AND FORTUNE"

Lynn Reynolds, Director, and Tom Mix, Star, Produce Corking Feature for William Fox.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

EVERYBODY who attended the trade press showing at Fox's projection room seemed to be convinced that they had been viewing a real picture when Tom Mix and Kathleen Connors, his leading woman, had faded out in fond embrace at the conclusion of "Fame and Fortune." There should be a lot of nice notices for the Fox scrapbook as a result, and exhibitors may well be thereby influenced in any decision that may be pending.

In the opinion of the present typist, Lynn Reynolds, who directed "Fame and Fortune," is entitled to fully share with Tom Mix the honors that accrue from an excellent service to the picture business so well performed. It was Mr. Reynolds who directed so many of the most effective and thoroughly delightful productions that were shown when he produced under the Bluebird brand. In "Fame and Fortune" he has excelled himself in a different line of construction than the bent he followed with Bluebird.

Starting the action slowly to thoroughly "place" the characters, Mr. Reynolds has moved into increased speed in good time, ending the feature in a perfect whirl of action and excitement. The "fan" who likes thrills will find them here in plenty, and the "fan" who likes excellent dramatic construction with human beings performing sane actions will be delighted with this new Tom Mix production. Especially to the credit of Mr. Reynolds is the fact that he has taken the slightest sort of story-thread and woven it into an entertainment that is refreshing in its presentation, interesting in every scene, and wholesome and satisfying in its atmosphere.

There's real red blood in the veins of Tom Mix and his companions. Even the burly brute who "owns the town" is a double-fisted fighter who goes as hard as he can after what he wants in the way of power and pelf. Mix performs some daring "stunts" with amazing skill and lightning speed. His dive through a glass window followed by a vault over the veranda rail on to the back of his waiting horse is a staggering surprise. His fight with the bully is a wonder in the line of fistic combat—and his riding is a treat to the eye, as well as an inspiration to the imagination.

There's something the matter with the man, woman or child who will not be delighted with "Fame and Fortune," with Tom Mix, his pretty leading woman, and Lynn Reynolds' direction. Surely there's nothing the matter with the picture. It's a dandy.

"SAUCE FOR THE GOOSE"

Constance Talmadge Brightens Slow-Moving Select Comedy by Her Very Clever Acting.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

DOMESTIC unhappiness is the theme of "Sauce for the Goose," a five-part Select picture featuring Constance Talmadge, and taken from a stage play by Geraldine Bonner and Hutcheson Boyd. Julia Crawford Ivers furnished the scenario and Walter Edwards directed the performance. The story is treated in the gayest of comedy spirit, but the complications are developed too slowly to give the picture a sufficient amount of laughs.

The general effect of "Sauce for the Goose" is that of a mildly amusing comedy that owes most of its brightness to the personality and acting of Constance Talmadge. She is the exact embodiment of gracious and engaging girlhood, with an elfish innocence all her own. As Kitty Constable, the neglected little wife of a foolish young gentleman who is fond of being flattered by other women, the star of the picture makes the character so attractive that the spectator is at a loss to understand why the husband makes such a goose of himself.

Perhaps the explanation that he is an author makes everything clear! At any rate, while he is busily and pleasantly engaged talking over his latest and greatest novel with a vampiring widow, named Mrs. Margaret Alloway, his lawful wedded wife cooks up a sauce for herself that is flavored with an innocent but apparently risque affair involving young Harry Travers, a handsome and accomplished breaker of female hearts.

Teddy Sylvester, the ardent but empty-headed admirer of the widow Alloway, is also used to pay back the naughty husband in his own coin, and is an unwitting tool in helping to place his charmer in a compromising position, a state of affairs from which Kitty herself escapes, after accepting an invitation to sup in the apartment of Travers. Kitty's scheme effects a cure.

Excepting Lewis Willoughby's performance of Teddy Sylvester, the work of Harrison Ford as John Constable, Herland Tucker as Harry Travers, Vera Doria as Mrs. Alloway and Edna Mae Cooper as Mrs. Darch is a credit to the supporting cast. James C. Van Trees is responsible for the excellent photography throughout the picture.

"THE GIRL WHO CAME BACK."

Paramount Presents Ethel Clayton in Melodrama—Her Performance a Decided Success.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

WITH an admirable supporting cast and high artistry shown in enforcing her environment, Ethel Clayton makes her Paramount debut under, at least, some favorable circumstances, but her opportunity is comparatively limited—she creates a large part of it—and she is not helped by the fact that the conclusion of the story is announced in the beginning, in the title itself, another case of "placarding the plot." She interprets the role of a burglar's daughter, her father a "villain of the deepest dye," without a humanly-redeeming trait. She is sent by her degenerate parent to steal the "pearls." She opens a safe and gets the jewels, but she is caught by Bayard, a young man who saved her from drowning. She is remorseful for the first time in her life. The identity of Bayard is for the first time made known to her under such shameful circumstances, and she has conceived such a romantic attachment to him that her conversion immediately ensues.

A dissolute acquaintance of Bayard's calls at this moment to borrow money and discovers that the young burglar is his "girl." He gets away with the pearls and the girl is falsely accused, only to be subsequently extricated by Bayard and reformed by life on a farm. The girl's reformation, the most important part of the drama, offering large possibilities, is rather scantily treated, but out of such story material Miss Clayton evolves a fascinating characterization through sheer force of intelligent personality. Her revelations of thought and feeling are so remarkable that she will carry the play over to almost any audience. Theodore Roberts and Elliott Dexter are large contributors to success, but Miss Clayton is so unusually gifted that she is bound to be a leading screen attraction, one of the best, if she holds to her sincerity and keeps both of her pretty feet solidly on terra firma.

"A LONG CHANCE"

Five-Reel Bluebird Reissue Features Frank Keenan as Western Gambler.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel reissue adapted by Harvey Gates from a story by Peter B. Kayne, presents Frank Keenan in the role of Harley Hennage. This character is that of the old-time gentleman gambler, a man who reveres womenkind, but is ruthless in his dealings with men, particularly bad men.

Mr. Keenan is, as always, an interesting central figure in the story. The plot itself has plenty of strong material in it, but the lapse of even a few years shows the strides that have been made in film presentation. There are strange lapses in the continuity, and the photography does not match up with present releases. Yet there is a good grip to the film and some splendid dramatic moments despite a general laxity in construction.

The plot covers two generations, Beryle Broughton appearing first as Marie, the girl whom the gambler loves, but sacrifices to another. Her husband is lost in a desert sandstorm, but their child, a girl, survives. Miss Broughton then plays the role of the girl, Donna, in her nineteenth year. A new hero appears, named Bob McGraw, who falls in love with Donna and wins her promise of marriage.

The gambler, Hennage, has meanwhile befriended both mother and daughter, and he takes an interest in clearing their title to the claim owned by Marie's father. This is accomplished only after unmasking a rascally promoter who was with the father in the desert storm and in reality murdered him. Hennage also has a dramatic shooting affair at the close with a stage robber in which both men lose their lives.

The stirring scenes at the close do much to make the observer forget some of the weak construction at the beginning.

"HICK MANHATTAN."

A Clever Satirical Comedy by James Montgomery Flagg, Released by Famous Players-Lasky.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

THE theme of James Montgomery Flagg's two reel satirical comedy, "Hick Manhattan," is well illustrated in the closing subtitle, "You can get away with anything in Manhattan if you keep a straight face and charge enough." It is a clever offering, with good-natured slaps at the gullibility of the New Yorkers. The story revolves around a young girl who loses her job and a young man who has been unable to make a success as an art photographer. A fire breaks out in the house where the girl is rooming, and she rushes to the street en deshabille, just as the man appears. Immediately he has visions of a fortune, and persuades her to pose as a wild Greek girl. He has her arrested for performing Grecian dances in the street in her scanty attire. After she is freed, she causes a sensation in a restaurant, and by the next day is headlined in all the newspapers, with the result that the bright young man succeeds in securing a contract for his "star" at a big salary. Peggy Hopkins and Olin Howland do effective work in the principal roles.

"FLOWER OF THE DUSK."

Viola Dana Appears in Pathetic and Artistic Story of a Little Lame Girl.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

IN marked contrast to the broad comedy role which she portrayed in "Opportunity," Viola Dana in her latest production, "Flower of the Dusk," released by Metro August 12, is cast in the pathetic role of a little lame girl whose troubles are added to by the fact that her father is blind and poor, although still believing himself wealthy. These two roles strikingly show the versatility of this charming little star.

Ambrose North, blind, is haunted by doubts as to whether his wife, Constance, who committed suicide twenty years before the story opens, really loved him. The bright spot in his life is his lame daughter, Barbara, whose beautiful embroidery furnishes the means of support for the family. Barbara's Aunt Miriam knows that Ambrose's wife died loving Lawrence Austin, as she left a letter to him which was never delivered. There is also another letter addressed to Barbara to be opened on her twenty-first birthday in which she confesses the secret. Miriam, jealous of Constance, as they both loved Ambrose, and Constance won him, awaits the time for her revenge. A celebrated surgeon succeeds in curing Barbara of her lameness, and also cures Ambrose of his blindness. Barbara, in reading the letter to her father, changed the wording so as to make it appear that Constance still loved him. Impatient to read the words himself he removed the bandages too soon, and the result of the shock to his nerves proved fatal. Miriam is ashamed of the havoc she has wrought, while Barbara finds happiness in the love of Roger, the son of Lawrence Austin.

The cast is excellent throughout. Howard Hall gives a fine interpretation of Ambrose North, while Margaret McWade appears as Miriam. Jack McGowan makes a fine boyish lover. Much credit is due to Director John H. Collins for the fine manner in which the production is directed. The story is consistent and with its deep note of pathos holds the interest throughout. The production is very artistic, and the photography is excellent, the scenes printed in sepia being very effective. There are a number of scenes which tug at the heartstrings, such as when Ambrose seeing Barbara in her mother's wedding finery mistakes her for his dead wife; also the scene where Barbara reads the letter to her father.

"BOSTON BLACKIE'S LITTLE PAL."

Metro Presents Bert Lytell as a Gentleman Burglar Who Finds a Little Pal.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

IN "Boston Blackie's Little Pal," released by Metro August 26, Bert Lytell is cast in the ever fascinating role of a gentleman burglar. The plot is slight and is mildly interesting aside from the fact that the star has a sympathetic role which will prove pleasing to his admirers.

Deciding to rob a wealthy home, Boston Blackie arranges to have his accomplice hired as a nurse, and one night when the master of the house, Martin Wilmerding, has gone away while his wife is attending a ball he prepares to secure the jewels. In this he is interrupted by Wilmerding's little son, who is lonely and who makes Blackie play with him. He takes a great fancy to the child and stays with him until Mrs. Wilmerding returns with Donald Lavalle, and overhears the conversation indicating that the pair are going to South America. Mrs. Wilmerding gives Lavelle her jewels, saying she will meet him later. Blackie meeting Lavelle outside represents himself as Wilmerding, thrashes Lavelle and secures the jewels. Finally by means of judiciously worded telegrams he succeeds in reuniting husband and wife, and restoring his little pal's mother to him. There is a novel ending as the final disposition of the jewels is left undecided, and a subtitle asks the audience whether after all Blackie has done for the Wilmerdings she should keep the jewels or return them.

Bert Lytell is excellently cast as the gentleman burglar, and is ably assisted by Rhea Mitchell as his accomplice, who gives a fine performance, while Rosemary Theby is satisfactory as Mrs. Wilmerding. The remainder of the cast includes Howard Davies as Donald Lavelle, Little Joel Jacobs as "the little pal," and John Burton as the butler. E. Mason Hopper creditably directed the production.

"TILL I COME BACK TO YOU"

Artcraft Releases a Vital and Effective Story by Jeannie MacPherson.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

HERE is a genuine moving picture of subject matter so vital that the story absorbs audience attention, and it has diversity of incident and charm of treatment as well. The story is so well constructed that it bears evidence of scrupulous forethings—it is not one of those wretched makeshifts employed to fool the public by leading people to think that a great actor's name means a great story, and it is well worked out in advance like any fine structure must be. Of all its values, however, the highest is a powerful impression made by contrast. Very naturally—and that means skillfully—one is led to feel that race characteristics make it impossible to end the European war except by reaching a decision in favor of a higher civilization than the Hun has ever known. It is not civilization from his viewpoint to be tender and considerate in dealing with women and children. Their soul enslavement is openly part of his creed. He cannot be taught different by precept and example—it must be licked into him good and plenty if the world is to go forward instead of backward.

There is a pretty and an unusual love story told in "Till I Come Back to You," between a young American engineer, impersonated by Bryant Washburn, and the Belgian wife of a German officer, impersonated by Florence Vidor. These two and the mature support afford an interpretation without blemish, but a daring thing has been done in leaving the main line of interest, the highly sensational story of exciting work done by American engineers, to record the experiences of a little Belgian boy, son of a Belgian mother and German father, and taken by the latter to a German reformatory for Belgian children, where they are really prepared for slavery in munition factories. In the story of this spirited little boy, which leads up to the main line toward the exciting end, tremendous force is gathered for the vital impression made, but it is nullified somewhat by the popular demand for a happy ending. The little boy miraculously saves himself and the other unhappy children, probably to the satisfaction of gentle hearts in an audience—such as that of the Rivoli, which received it with enthusiasm—whereas a tragic ending for these little ones would have more deeply impressed the story's general purpose.

Mr. De Mille's handling of this production is thorough in detail and beautiful in its broad effects. He has also exercised rare judgment in eliminating the useless, preserving only what augments interest from start to finish. Even exaggerations become plausible under such artistic handling, and he deserves high praise for sticking to his progressive principles, not trying to empty our moving picture theatres with outworn imitations and repeats that are without reason for thoroughly modern presentation. He may be only trying out a policy of giving the audience fresh fruit instead of the decayed kind, but he is on the right track. More such honest productions will fill to overflowing those theatres now suffering a loss of business laid to "war times." Congratulations, Mr. De Mille.

"WIVES OF MEN"

Florence Reed Does Brilliant Work as Star of Pioneer Feature.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

THAT Florence Reed is starred in "Wives of Men" should be assurance of superlative dramatic entertainment for those who find all too little really good acting in the average run of motion pictures. But it will not serve to leave the subject thus; more detail is required in reporting the opening of this attraction at the Casino, New York, Sunday evening, August 25. The Pioneer Film Corporation made the production, written and directed by John M. Stahl, and deserves unstinted praise for the excellence in detail and furnishing that have served as "atmosphere" for the intensely dramatic offering.

Massive settings in scenes of splendor largely confine the action to interiors, and for contrast to the sumptuous furnishings of the mansion where much of the plot develops there are vistas that show a modest flat and an east side tenement. One gets a rather complete idea of how both extremes in New York's population move and habitate through the benefit of these carefully arranged framings for the plot. Director Stahl deserves commendation for skillful work, and his tendency to "long shots" with just enough "close-ups" to send home the points in the play serves to develop suspense and tenseness in the dramatic progress of the story.

Florence Reed, mistress of the art of make-up, fashion plate and gown model supreme in her class, cannot be too highly praised for her interpretation of an exceedingly difficult role. Her character is one that barely has opportunity to "flash" Miss Reed in her loviest moods; throughout practically the entire presentation she must carry on emotionally with the demands of art disguising her prettiest charms. Forceful and eloquent is the appeal of her portrayal, a result of inherent artistry and native gifts of histrionic expression.

Frank Mills is deserving of special praise for his acting, and there will always be sympathy at every showing of "Wives of Men" for the character so artistically portrayed by Grace Davison. To particularize further in praise of the acting would introduce a paragraph for every member of the cast, for it is the spendid acting by every individual that makes appealing entertainment so vital that the inconsistencies in construction and plot-development are overlooked in the spell of splendid dramatic illusions.

"T'OTHER DEAR CHARMER"

Five-Reel World Picture a Splendid Example of Entertaining Society Comedy.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel World picture entitled "T'Other Dear Charmer" is one of the brightest and best of recent comedy releases. It is that very desirable type of film story which pleases everybody and displeases no one. Such pictures, while making no claim to any great importance, are undoubtedly the backbone of the film industry, as they create an unconscious desire on the part of the observer to see more moving pictures.

The first triumph of this enjoyable subject is the happy way in which it introduces a large and agreeable cast of characters headed by Louise Huff and John Bowers. The former plays the dual role of heroine and maid, and the latter the part of a handsome but bewildered hero who falls violently in love with both girls.

This number undertakes to portray society situations and types, and does it very agreeably. The characters all look the parts, and some fine houses and gardens were requisitioned for settings. It shows every evidence of good taste in the development of the story.

The plot concerns a young girl, Betty Hallowell, who desires to get some money for the Red Cross. She thinks things over, and decides to lease her magnificent home for the summer season to a Mrs. Wentworth, widow of a Western millionaire. Mrs. Wentworth insists upon having a French maid, and, as none can be obtained in time to fulfill the contract, Betty plays the maid herself. Tom Wentworth, the hero, proceeds to fall in love with maid and mistress in the course of the story in a most amusing manner.

The production was adapted to screen form by Wallace C. Clifton from a story by Charles Sarver, and directed by William P. S. Earle. Others in the cast are Ida Darling, Florence Billings, Ezra Walck, Valda Valkyrien, Eugenie Woodward, Charles Dungan, Hurbert Barrington, and Patrick Foy.

"FORD WEEKLY"

Grevier Distributing Corporation Now Handling Releases of Automobile Manufacturer.

THE series of educational subjects made by Henry Ford, which will be furnished to the manager of any moving picture theatre free of charge, is now being handled by the Greiver Distributing Corporation, 51 East Forty-second street, New York. These pictures are entirely educational, one branch of the work being the "Winning the War" series. Ford Weekly No. 113 shows the famous Kilauea Volcano on one of the Sandwich Islands. The cameraman has spared no effort to secure a correct and extremely imposing set of views of this celebrated burning mountain and its always active crater, where a lake of molten lava is ceaselessly boiling and twisting itself into fantastic shapes.

No. 114 is called "Training Mechanics for Our National Army," and shows one of the large schools devoted to that purpose and the methods by which its members are taught to become skilled workers in the many branches of industry necessary to defeat the Kaiser. It also gives interesting pictures of the men at work in the different factories, after completing the course of instruction at the school.

The photography and titling are both excellent.

"THE HUN WITHIN"

Dorothy Gish and George Fawcett Featured in Meritorious Artcraft.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE is one brief but vigorous touch in "The Hun Within" that will fill the soul of the spectator with righteous joy. It occurs when a loyal German-American father comes behind his pro-German son while that wry-minded youth is drinking to the portrait of the Kaiser, and the indignant old gentleman plants the toe of his boot where it will best express the state of his feelings. Henry Wagner, the father, can hardly justify his own act in permitting the portrait to hang in his library after this country has declared war with Germany, but the kick he administers to his son, Karl, also wakes up the elder Wagner, and he orders the painting of William, the Hun, destroyed.

"The Hun Within" is a Paramount-Artcraft special production written by Granville Warwick and directed by Chester Withey, Dorothy Gish and George Fawcett being the featured players. It is a war story, with practically all the scenes laid in this country.

Beth, Henry Wagner's ward, is engaged to his son, Karl. Beth has another admirer, a one-hundred per cent. American boy, by name, Frank Douglas. An aspiring mustache worn by Karl tips the beam in his favor, and Frank enters the United States Secret Service and tries to forget his heartache. He is rewarded by discovering that Karl is working for the German cause and assisting in a scheme to blow up a transport after she is at sea. Both Frank and Beth risk their lives in trying to save the ship. They are successful, and Beth does the only thing possible for a true daughter of Uncle Sam—discards the traitor and marries Frank.

The action after Frank starts to hunt the Huns moves at a rapid rate. Some of the dramatic incidents will not bear very serious consideration, but the theme makes for sound American principles, and many of the thrusts at Hun treachery are sent home with a force that is fine to behold. Chester Withy shows himself a capable director, and David Abel's camera work is of excellent quality.

Dorothy Gish as Beth appears in her first part under her Paramount contract. The character she plays is that of a sweet and lovable little American girl of the best type. The arch spirit of fun that is so closely identified with many of her screen portraits helps to make Beth's conquest of the spectator an easy task. Some of the mannerisms of the actress are a little too pronounced, and recall the volatile temperament of the jaunty young street singer in "Hearts of the World." It is in the serious phases of the character of Beth that Dorothy Gish registers much of her best work. The close-ups of her are beautifully done, and arrest the attention by their revelation of true feeling and beauty of expression.

George Fawcett handles the part of Henry Wagner with the ease and authority to be expected of an actor of his attainments. Douglas MacLean as Frank and Charles Gerard as Karl contrast their characters skillfully. Able impersonations are contributed by Bert Sutch, Max Davidson, Lillian Clarke, Robert Anderson, Fric von Stroheim, Adolph Lestina and Kate Bruce. One noticeable slip in the direction is an exterior scene showing a transport lying motionless at her dock followed by an interior view of the same transport, with the good ship rolling under the influence of quite a heavy sea.

"A JAPANESE NIGHTINGALE"

Five-Reel Pathe Play Presents Fannie Ward in Role of Little Jap Girl.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel Pathe play produced by Astra from a story by William Young under direction of George Fitzmaurice is a strikingly pretty number. It gives opportunity to Fannie Ward to essay the role of a bewitching Japanese girl, which she does very effectively. She is not almond-eyed, it is true, but her make-up is such that she looks the part without this qualification, and she even cries real tears in one of the close-ups. W. E. Lawrence is also attractive as the American hero, and does some good acting.

The settings are dainty and thoroughly Japanese throughout. The blossoming cherry trees and garden effects are used to the best advantage.

There is a certain conventionality about all Japanese-American love stories, and this subject is true to type in that respect. But there is no undue sense of familiarity, for the events are not only very interesting, but enacted with a degree of suspense that makes one forget at times that it is all a picture.

Yuki, the nightingale, steals away from the temple of Shiba in order to escape a forced marriage with Baron Nekko, who has secretly watched her dancing and greatly desires her. She becomes a Geisha girl, and the American hero saves her from insult. They fall in love, but the rascally machinations of a matrimonial agent named Ido brings on events of a near-tragic sort. The plot is one of delicate strength, and works up to a strong climax.

A REMARKABLE series of moonlight views, like some gallery of exquisite landscapes, given entirely new meaning by movement, not only of the Orb of Night, but of clouds flying across its face, a series of those beauties associated with romantic nights which arouse emotion aside from association by their artistic charm. While we are picturing thought and feeling on the screen, these transitory glimpses of Nature's loveliness, interspersed with admirably selected poetic gems, constitute a distinct contribution to the advancement of moving pictures to the greater things yet to come. They stimulate the imagination, when the clouds in mysterious forms resemble souls in a flight to the unknown, and they afford a relief to those who enjoy Nature in her sweetest moods. The Rivoli audience give them warm approval.

COMMENTS

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

A LONG CHANCE (Bluebird).—A five-reel reissue, in which Frank Keenan plays the role of a gentleman gambler. The story, which was adapted by Harvey Gates from the original by Peter B. Kyne, has on the whole rather weak construction, but certain dramatic events, coupled with the good acting of Mr. Keenan, make it quite a strong offering. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

FIRES OF YOUTH (Bluebird), Aug. 26.—A five-part production featuring Ruth Clifford with Ralph Lewis and George Fisher. The story is not all that might be desired, and is somewhat inconsistent in spots. A full review was published in last week's issue.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation

IN PURSUIT OF POLLY (Aug. 19).—This is a bright, clever, five-reel comedy, in which Billie Burke is congenially cast. It is a modern race of Atalanta, wherein the star is chased by three suitors in automobiles, and finally won by an outsider. There is plenty of action and suspense, and it should provide good entertainment for almost any audience. Reviewed at length in this issue.

HICK MANHATTAN (Sept. 1).—A two-reel satirical comedy by James Montgomery Flagg cleverly portraying the gullibility of New Yorkers. A girl out of a job poses as a wild Greek and after creating a sensation on the street because of her scanty attire, finally lands a vaudeville contract at a large salary. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

Fox Film Corporation.

NAME AND FORTUNE (Fox).—Tom Mix, directed by Lynn Reynolds, will add vastly to his reputation in presentations of this feature. Here is a corking "Western," full of life and action and featuring some amazing "stunts" in horsemanship and athletics. Five reels of spirit and dash will awaken the enthusiasm of the most phlegmatic movie fan to the realization that Mix and Reynolds have collaborated in a real moving picture.

THE PRUSSIAN CUR (Fox).—Here is the latest addition to the routine of propaganda features that are finding their belated way to the screen. While distributors and producers should have begun six months before they did to make pictures for the purpose of awakening the American individual to the beastliness of Hun "kultur" they are going on now to a good start, and "The Prussian Cur" is one of the very best of the lot. The theme is well developed, in sane and convincing scquence, carrying a spy plot developed by one of the Kaiser's own tools in this country. "The Prussian Cur" will awaken "the will to win" by arousing Uncle Sam's nephews to full realization of what militarism would do, if it could, in dominating the lives of world peoples. Producer and every exhibitor who plays this worthwhile propaganda subject will profit not alone in coin but in strengthening and inspiring the citizen in every community where it is screened.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

THE CLUTCH OF CIRCUMSTANCE (Vitagraph), Aug. 26.—Corinne Griffith is the leading player in this five-part picture, written by Leighton Graves Osmun and directed by Henry Houry. It is a story of the stage and will prove entertaining. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

FLOWER OF THE DUSK (Aug. 12.).—Viola Dana is the star in this five-reel Metro picture, which tells a pathetic and tragic story of a lame girl and her blind father. The production is artistic, well directed and well acted. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

CARACAS, VENEZUELA (Post-Pathe), Aug. 18.—A one-reel travel subject, which takes the observer on an interesting railroad journey through the mountains of Venezuela. The journey starts at the coast and runs back into the interior, across high mountain ranges. A very pleasing number of the kind.

OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW, No. 9 (Pathe), Aug. 25.—This diversified number includes many pictures of the fighting men on the Western front, including views of Essex men and Italian troops. Another feature is that of transporting troops across the Atlantic, a remarkably interesting one. The living flag at the close will bring cheers from any audience.

THE PHANTOM AND THE GIRL (Astra-Pathe), Sept. 1.—Episode No. 3 of "Hands Up." This instalment, in two reels, proves without doubt that there is to be no let up in the thrilling events following the capture of Echo Strange by the Phantom Rider. He takes her to a cave in the mountains, which cave is invaded by one of the pursuing Incas. The girl escapes and returns to the ranch. Further exciting events transpire, having to do with the treasure of the Incas. Fighting and riding scenes figure prominently in this number.

HER MAN (Pathe), Sept. 8.—A splendid six-part number, based on a story of the Kentucky mountains by Charles Neville Buck, with Elaine Hammerstein and W. Lawson Butt in the leading roles. This differs from the ordinary feud story in that it penetrates deeper into the psychology of the mountaineers, and the dramatic thrill in the final reel is one of the best accomplished in pictures for a long time. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

THE HONEST THIEF (Astra-Pathe), Sept. 15.—A bright little crook-detective story, in two reels, written by Frank Leon Smith and directed by George Seitz. ROPED AND TIED (Western), Aug. 17.—A two-reel offering of the melodramatic type, featuring Neal Hart and Eileen Sedgwick. The hero, a stranger in a Western town, falls in love with an innocent girl he discovers in a wine room. He wins her after several clashes with the villain, who also loves her. The plot is conventional, but the cast agreeable and the action entertaining.

THE MOCK BRIDE (Universal Special), Sept. 7.—Episode No. 5 of "The Brass Bullet" is the name of this episode and takes the central figures of the story through a series of unhappy events, including the forced marriage of Rosalind to another while her lover wallows in a quagmire. THE POWER AND THE GLORY (World-Picture), Sept. 2.—A five-reel subject, featuring June Elvidge, Ned Burton and others. This is the tale of a mountain girl who goes to a mill town to work. It has some weakness in construction, but the character work is strong and the story itself very interesting. It was adapted from a novel by Grace MacGowan Cooke. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

"PECK'S BAD GIRL"

Goldwyn Presents Mabel Normand, "The Little Girl You Don't Want to Forget," in a Regular Mabel Normand Story.

Cast.

Mabel Penelope Peck.....Mabel Normand
Dick .....Earle Foxe
Hortense Martinot.....Corinne Barker
Miss Olivia.....Blanche Davenport
Adam Raskell.....Ryley Hatch
Willie Raskell.....Leslie Hunt
Peck .....E. M. Favor
Pearson .....Edwin Sturgis
Walker .....Joseph Granby

Directed by Charles Giblyn.

The Story: Mabel Penelope Peck is the village cut-up of Yaptank and is named after the stories famous thirty years ago. But there is innate sense as well as unrestrained devilment in Mabel Penelope's shapely little head, and when she has her suspicions aroused she beats the city detective and rounds up a gang of expert safe-blowers—gets the whole kit and caboodle of 'em and the city detective, too.

Feature Mabel Normand as "Peck's Bad Girl" and Earle Foxe as Dick, the city deteetive.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Mabel Normand as the Girl Who Set a Quiet Village by the Ears.
Irrepressible Youth Awakens the Old Town to Sense Its Shortcomings.
How the Village Scamp Foiled the City Vamp and Won the Man She Loved.
Sprightly Girl Who Was "a Devil in Her Own Home Town."
Exciting and Sensational Career of a Country Wild Flower.
When the Village Cut-Ups Foiled the City Hold-Ups.

Advertising Angles: About all you need to do for this is to tell your patrons that Mabel Normand has dropped those Joan things and has come back to the Normand type of plays, but tell this so fully that everyone will know. The parade suggestion in the press sheet is a good idea, but you can better this by displaying a picture of Miss Normand in the part well in advance and offering prizes to the children who most faithfully copy her. Have the judging done in front of the theatre and make the prizes worth while, but have as many prizes as possible rather than one costly one. Make it plain that this is not a rehash of the old Peek's Bad Boy stories, but a real plot of a real comedy played in broad comedy style with melodramatic touches. You should work this for a cleanup.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three sheets, one six and one 24-sheet. Rotogravure one-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Coming and current slides. Advertising and scene cuts. Photographic line-cut copy for ads. Press book.

"ON THE QUIET"

Adolph Zukor Presents John Barrymore, the Star of Stage and Screen, in One of Augustus Thomas' Huge Stage Successes.

Cast.

Robert Ridgway.....John Barrymore
Judge Ridgway.....Frank Losee
Horace Colt.....J. W. Johnston
Hix.....Al Hickman
Ethel Colt.....Helen Greene
Agnes Colt.....Lois Meredith
Duke of Carbondale.....Cyril Chadwick
McGeachy.....Frank H. Belcher

Directed by Chester Withey.

The Story: Robert Ridgway, the rather wild son of Judge Ridgway, loves Agnes Colt, who, under the terms of her father's will is to receive $20,000,000 if she marries a man approved by her brother, who is executor. The brother does not approve of young Ridgway's wild oats, and Bob returns to college with a promise to behave better. But before he goes he persuades Agnes to marry him "on the quiet." He finds college a bit slow. He starts something more than he anticipated, and to save a scandal is forced to take Agnes and her maid on his yacht. The brother learns of this and indignantly demands that Robert right the "wrong" he has done with an immediate marriage, and only too gladly Bob marries his wife a second time.

Feature John Barrymore as Robert Ridgway and Lois Meredith as Agnes Colt.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Augustus Thomas and Willie Collier's Great Stage Success Translated to the Screen.
Greatly Successful Stage Comedy Exploited in Motion Pictures.
Jack Barrymore Returns to the Screen in Ideal Photo-Comedy.
How a Harem-Scarem Chap Got Into Hot Water and Safely Out Again.
Acid Test Applied to Reckless Youth Proves True Metal.

Advertising Angles: Do not confuse Jack Barrymore with Lionel, who has been in pictures for some time. Identify him as the star of "The Man from Mexico" and "Are You a Mason," also screened by Paramount. Tell your patrons that he is a Barrymore and a Drew, the very bluest blood in the aristocracy of the stage. The past two seasons he has played Peter Ibbetson on the speaking stage. If he has played your town make use of this, but in any event take extra space to hammer home the fact that here is one of the best light comedians now on the stage in a ripping comedy by a leading dramatic author.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts from one to three columns on star and production. Advertising lay-out mats. Slides. Press book.

Spies—Love—Intrigue—Adventure: All Blended in Gripping Episodes.

Advertising Angles: This play was one of the first of the stage war plays and was a notable success in New York and elsewhere. It has a sound and well-constructed story with a strong surprise finish. Play it up strong in the newspapers, emphasizing the stage success but telling that it makes a capital film story as well—which is not always true of stage plays. Work such captions as "Get inside the lines with Lewis Stone," "Go to—Gibraltar," and similar catch phrases. For window work the magazines and papers will give you illustrative material for cards telling your patrons to see why the big battleships were not destroyed.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three and six sheets. Free advance poster. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Two-color heralds. One and two column cuts. Slides. Press sheet.

Released August 26.

Nan, the nurse.....Marion Singer

Written by Hamilton Thompson.

Staged by Harry Millarde.

The Story: Annie Laurie becomes betrothed to Donald McGregor, who goes to war. Annie later meets a stranger and falls in love with him; her father drives him away, and she follows. The stranger, ill with fever, becomes delirious and wanders away to London, where he is restored to reason; he is Lieutenant Hathaway of the U. S. A. Annie, having returned home, is cast out by her father. She goes to France as a nurse. On returning to the battlefield, he is wounded while helping Donald, and both are brought to Annie's ward. flicting emotions, she decides that happiness is to be found in keeping her promise to Donald, so Hathaway goes back to the trenches.

Feature Peggy Hyland as Annie Laurie and William Bailey as Captain McGregor.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Here's the Girl You've Sang About.
The Sweet Scotch Lassie Who Ga'e Her Promise True.
How the Great War Answered an Absorbing Love Problem.
Here's a War Nurse Who Had to Choose Between Two Wounded Lovers.
Brave Nurse Who Placed Duty Above All Other Considerations.
Battlefields Provide Consolation for Rejected and Dejected Suitor.
When Two Rival Lovers Met First in No Man's Land.

Advertising Angles: Tell that this story offers a problem that presently will confront many American women; their duty to a returned sweetheart who has suffered permanent incapacity. Tell that it is not a war play, though it has some big war scenes, but rather a problem rising from the war, without claptrap appeals, but with a strong, gripping motive. In your press work play up the angles this story presents and, if possible, get others to comment. Ask, should a woman's promise be always sacred, and what is a woman's duty to the man she loves.

Advertising Aids: One, three and six-sheets, two styles of each. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Announcement slide. Cuts, mats and press sheets (cuts are made on special order at rate of 20 cents per column; mats and press sheets are mailed gratis).

Released in September.

"LOVE'S LAW"

The Mutual Film Corporation Presents Gail Kane in the Five-Act Story of a Girl Who Took the Better Way—and Won.

Cast.

Sonia Sariloff.....Gail Kane
Andrew Hamilton.....Courtenay Foote
John Lorimer.....Reed Hamilton
Alexis Khalkoff.....Frederick Jones
Olga .....Augusta Perry
Ivan .....Walter Deming
Mrs. Grey.....Matilda Baring
Kalma .....Emil La Croix

The Story: Sonia Sariloff, a pretty American-born Polish girl, is the ward of her uncle, a mill hand. He regards her as an incubus, since she will not work and spends her time playing the violin. Oppressed by a cut in wages, he sells Sonia's violin to Andrew Hamilton, the mill owner. Sonia goes to demand her property, and Hamilton, recognizing her ability, procures for her a musical education. But when he demands that Sonia pay the price he names for a career she returns to the poverty of the mill village and nurses its unfortunate inhabitants through an epidemic brought about through the unsanitary conditions in Hamilton's mills. He searches her out and finds her down with the dread disease. He nurses her back to health, and improved mill conditions is one of his wedding presents to her.

Feature Gail Kane as Sonia and Courtenay Foote as Andrew Hamilton.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Problem Drama of Tense Interest Makes Clear the Fight Between Oppressed and Oppressors.

Gripping Love Story Woven Into Prevailing Problem of Labor.
How a Good Girl Changes Labor Conditions in Oppressed Community.
What the Mill Hands Owe to Young Girl Who Fought Their Battles.
Sociological Problems Cleverly Woven Into Gripping Labor Issues.

Advertising Angles: The labor angle is the best to work from in this picture unless you are located so that you are well out of the labor element. Play up the bravery of this girl of the people and the schemes of the mill owner. Tell how a girl worked reform in one mill. There is also a minor angle to work in the interest musicians will feel for this story. Work this along the lines of "Fiddle and I," if you can locate this poem, and tell of the girl who was willing to give up a career to keep faith with herself.

Advertising Aids: One each one, three and six sheets. Banner unmounted. One, two and three-column cuts and mats. Program cover cut. Lobby display, 11x14 and 22x28. Press sheet.

Released September 1.

But as the days pass, the feud goes on; she finds that he is trying to end the feud, but in his own way. Then the McBriars start to get Anse as he leaves Juanita's cabin and the old spirit rouses in the girl when Anse, badly wounded, crawls back to her. She stands off the feudists, and when succor comes she marries Anse, whom she believes to have been fatally wounded, but his injuries are not mortal and a new condition arises in the valley.

"PETTICOATS AND POLITICS"

The Plaza Pictures Presents Anita King, "The Outdoor Girl," in a Delightfully Brisk Story of a Woman Who Played Politics in a Mining Camp.

Cast.

Ann Murdock.....Anita King
Leonard Blair.....R. Henry Grey
Keno Bill Maguire.....Gordon Sackville
Joe Roberts, the Sheriff.....Chas. Dudley
Mrs. Lou Winters.....Ruth Lackaye

Directed by Howard M. Mitchell.

The Story: It is election time in Red Dog, Nevada, and Ann persuades the women to nominate a ticket in opposition to the poltical ring. Unable to vote, the women persuade their husbands to vote for them, and they win. Ann is elected sheriff; the prisoners are put to work and made to clean the streets; there is a big celebration, and the disgruntled politicians release the prisoners, locking the women up in their place. Leonard Blair, a tenderfoot, comes to their rescue, and he is "framed" and accused of robbing the express office, and arrested. Ann learns the truth, confronts the politician who is the real thief. He tells her she is too late to save Blair. However, after a wild midnight ride, she rescues Blair, bringing the story to a happy conclusion.

Feature Anita King as Ann Murdock and R. Henry Grey as Leonard Blair.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Feminists Carry Their Primaries by Winning Votes at Pistol's Point.
Picketing the White House Don't Compare with Pistoling Voters.
Twelve Women Constitute a Jury in Manless Court of "Justice."
Satirical Western Comedy-Drama on Woman Suffrage.
Anita King, the Out-Door Girl, Experiments in Love and Politics.

Advertising Angles: Make a special appeal by form letter or circular to the suffrage clubs, and play up in all your advertising the fact that this is a story of women in politics. Make it plain that it is not a satire or burlesque, but a comedy with strong melodramatic situations. For a splash get out some home-made placards announcing a poltical rally at Ann Murdock's restaurant. Add that details may be had at your theatre. Get these out the morning you open with the play and use plenty of them.

Advertising Aids: Two designs each one and three sheets. One six-sheet. Thumbnail and one to three column cuts in electro or mats. Press book.

Released August 26.

Cine-Mundial,

Gentlemen:

It is a pleasure to give praise where praise is merited. We therefore take pleasure in giving this tribute to Cine-Mundial.

When we were first approached regarding space in Cine-Mundial, we were skeptical as to the value of such advertising and several parties took particular pains to point out to us that such advertising would be wasted.

It is with gratitude that we acknowledge the fact that every sale we have thus far made in the Spanish and Portugese speaking film markets of South America, Central America and Europe is directly or indirectly attributable to the influence of Cine-Mundial advertising.

You will be glad to know that we have disposed, on our terms, of the rights to the FIRST NATIONAL MILLION DOLLAR CHAPLIN SERIES to all territories that you cover, except Brazil, Peru, Bolivia and Equador - and that in the short time since we first used your publication.

Very truly yours,

MOTION PICTURE CARBONS

GIVE PERFECT

ALTERNATING CURRENT PROJECTION

The advance of modern motion picture photography has exerted a marked influence on modern projection. The exhibitor is selecting his light source with great care. The following requirements must be fulfilled by the light source in order that the picture projected on the screen be pleasing to the eye.

1. The light must be such that the finest variations of high lights and shadows shall be perfectly recorded on the screen and every object depicted in perfect detail.

2. The flexibility must be great enough to compensate for the varying densities of films made under different conditions of lighting.

The White A. C. Special Carbons fulfill these requirements in every particular. They give a strong, pure white light of high intensity which brings out the gradation of tone in the picture, noiseless and flickerless operation, and a rugged light source not affected by any slight changes in voltage. No change of equipment necessary.

SILVERTIPS FOR DIRECT CURRENT PROJECTION
Silvertips combine satisfactorily the features of steady arc and maximum brilliancy.

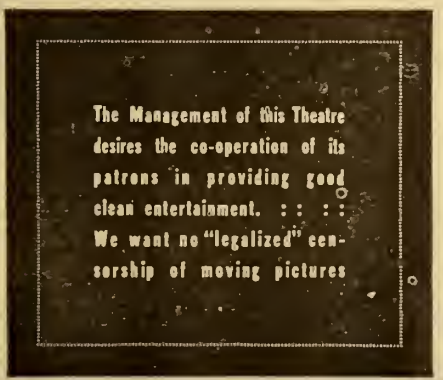
Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.



The Management of this Theatre desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing good clean entertainment. : : : :
We want no "legalized" censorship of moving pictures

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now! Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00.

Sure Fire Helps to Success

The CHALMERS PUBLISHING CO., publishers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and CINE MUNDIAL, the leading trade papers devoted to the Motion Picture Industry, are also publishers of the only library of practical text books dealing with the cinema art adapted to the every-day needs of those already engaged in the business or about to engage in it.

These text books, six in number, have been written by men carefully selected for their proven knowledge of the subjects to be covered, being almost without exception veteran members of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD'S editorial staff; entirely without exception these men are at present actively engaged in the motion picture business—they are not dreamers or theorists.

Each text book has been written to provide real help to the individual who reads it—consistent with the unswerving policy of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD—a genuine "Dedication to Service."

A Lamp
that improves projection and saves electric current

IT'S not often that you can improve the quality of your pictures and at the same time lower your operating costs. But that's just what this new Edison MAZDA C Lamp does. It is the lamp for the small and average sized theatre.

The light has even intensity—a brilliant, steady beam with pleasing color tone; and the lamp, once focused, requires no re-focusing.

The control is simpler than that of the carbon arc. There is less heat, no flicker, and the absence of all carbon ash means less wear and tear on machines and film.

The results please the public, the operator and the management.

You can apply this lamp to your present equipment by purchasing a suitable lamp-and-lens housing and a compensator to convert alternating current to direct current.

When buying a new machine look for the machine equipped with this lamp. It costs no more. Send for Bulletin No. 43607 containing full information. Get in touch with our nearest distributor. Edison Lamp Works of General Electric Company, Harrison, N. J.

"LET THE Simplex TWINS COMMAND YOUR FILMS"

Your Films are your Soldiers in the war for success.

And your Projectors are their Officers, who should command them effectively.

Now, we've nothing to suggest about the picking of your Soldiers. You know your public, its tastes and preferences.

But we do say this: It's a losing fight you are waging if you pick the wrong Officers, and let your Soldiers run amuck on the screen.

But put the Simplex Twins at the head of your troops and you will win one important battle after another until victory is yours.

It will be the well earned victory that comes from presenting presentable subjects the Simplex way—the COME-AGAIN way.

Don't lead good films to failure. The Simplex Twins will lead them to success.

"Power's Cameragraph gets me because it never overlooks a bet.

"Take the reel magazines. Square, aren't they? Sure! The corners allow plenty of room for manipulating the reel. Easier for the fellow who operates, isn't it?

"Another thing. For lining up your machine with the screen you'll find Power's newest device the simplest ever. A mere turn of a screw with one hand—and the trick's done.

"It's this attention to every little thing that makes Cameragraph service. I'm strong for it, because "—the people stood up and yelled"

And yet some Exhibitors wonder if they ought to repeat a picture at which people stand up and yell!

The Auditorium of Cuba City, Wisconsin, says of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin": "Greatest picture we ever ran. It broke all records. The people stood up and yelled when the Kaiser got struck on the jaw and when the mighty blacksmith choked the Hun officer. We advertised it big and sure got the crowds. Although this picture was run in nearby towns three weeks before, we had the people return to see it again. This picture cannot be boosted too much."

Humanity's living Devil stretched out his hand to unloose a Mongolian horde upon the white races of Europe battling to save the world from Prussian brutality.

Berlin's sinister, sneering agent advanced to raise the floodgate and drown the world under the flood of China's 400 million people.

Civilization stood breathless with its back against the wall.

But with one mysterious signal a beautiful Chinese girl saved the world from disaster—

She was a girl who loved America. She has been educated in an American mission. She loved those daring Yankees who always were the true friends of her country.

She had seen China made the helpless pawn of evil German rulers. She hated the Kaiser in whose mind was born "The Yellow Peril."

With her one signal she galvanized China's Secret Socities.

And she said: "China takes its place in the world today beside the Allies; the Dragon and Eagle shall hunt together."

Can you imagine a more stirring story for the screen? A story bringing into pictures the first Chinese star you have ever seen? In this picture you can feel the throb of preparation as America's, Japan's and China's armies make ready to swing across the Siberian plains—at the very moment you are reading the news of their march in the newspapers—in

EARLY IN THE AUTUMN

Here's The Way To Advertise "The Success Series."

Up in the Attic on a Rainy Afternoon

REMEMBER those days? When you used to climb the stairs and rummage for magazines and books among the old furniture and the empty boxes that grandmother wouldn't think of throwing away, for they might come in handy some day.

Great times, weren't they?

You dug up some bully stories—only a year or so old—and they beat anything you had read in a long time. You went up right after dinner—you had it at noon, remember?—and it didn't seem but a minute before Mother was calling you to supper.

Those were the happy days!

How'd you like to do that again?

You can! Once a week. In our theatre.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has gone into its vaults and has brought out the very best of the motion pictures produced in the last few years.

They've polished up these pictures until they're even better than they were when they were first shown. And we're going to show them once a week!

One night a week you'll have all the joy of discovering a bully picture you've never seen—just as you used to find a bully story you'd never read.

They're all Paramount Pictures and all masterpieces—motion pictures that you've often wished you'd seen. Here's your opportunity. Don't let it get away.

The first five we will show will be:

Mary Pickford in "The Eagle's Mate." Marguerite Clark in "Wildflower."

All Star Cast in "The Girl of the Golden West."

Pauline Frederick in "Zaza." Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen."

after having seen

"Italy's Flaming Front"

The First Films of a Whole Battle that it actually does show

Mountain fighting: Bombarding the enemy's trenches with big guns in preparation for infantry charge; men crouching low in trenches, bullets "spatting" on sandbags overhead; they go over the top, advancing in sprints, taking advantage of every cover; the final rush, hand-to-hand bayonet fighting; victory! bringing back hordes of prisoners.

Italian "75" hit by Austrian shell—smithereens! Italian artillery's hot reply—you never saw prettier work. Close-ups of dozens of different types of big guns from 40 centimeter to trench "bombards" in action. Panorama of enemy's trenches and works under fire. These pictures, taken from one side of a mountain valley, give a wonderfully graphic picture of a bombardment.

First complete air fight ever photographed. Austrian bombing plane attacks fleet; six Italian sea planes give chase (two carrying enlisted cameramen); Austrian drops bombs at fleet; the explosions hurl huge pillars of water and spray skyward; a submarine chaser hit; you see the explosion and the craft capsize from quarter mile distance; Italian planes close in; Austrian in desperation does daredevil tail dive to sea and saves his life but is captured by Italian torpedo boat.

Italian monitors and floating gun carriages, each mounting one great gun, in action.

In general: Fighting on mountain peaks above the clouds, Italy's spider men, on skis; the wonderful aerial cable communications; unbelievable feats of patience and hardihood bridging mountain torrents and dragging great guns by hand to lofty positions where tractors, even mules, are unable to go.

The eyes of the night, searchlights make night artillery possible. Shrapnel and barbed wire in night action.

And many graphic pictures not listed here because of lack of space.

Never has feature film had such powerful endorsement from men who know the business and there is not a newspaper editor in America who will not similarly endorse this wonderful film—and you know what that will mean.

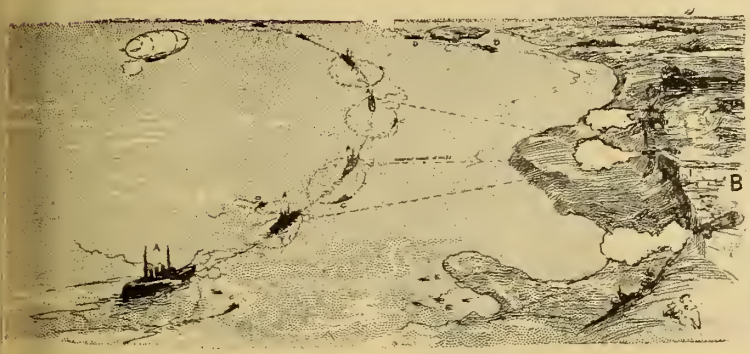
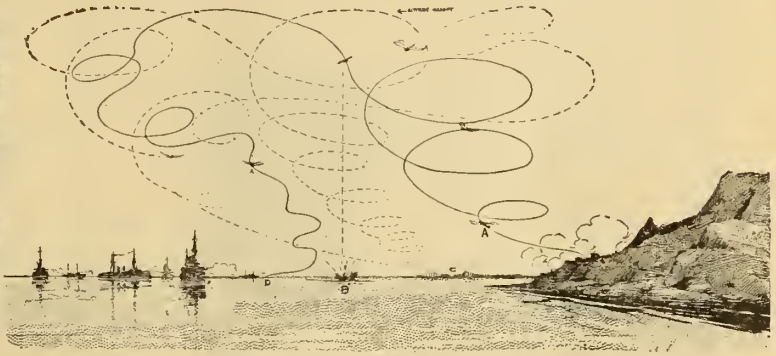
Reproduction of Strategic Sketch Diagram made during the action by military observer.

A—Observation balloon, the eyes of the artillery. Note fleet of planes to protect it from enemy planes and "spot" the shots. The destruction or interruption of this signal system would be the equivalent of blinding the gunners. BBB—Italian big gun positions. CC—Aerial cableways, often several miles long. E—Summit Mt. Pasubio, elevation 9,200 feet, covered with eternal snows. The Italians hewed one tunnel 29,000 feet long through solid rock to secure uninterrupted communication. D—Austrian base against which attack was directed.



Reproduction of Strategic Sketch Diagram made immediately after the action by a military observer.

AAA—Indicates capital ships steaming in a great circle and firing broadsides as they come within range of their 12 and 14 inch guns. B—Austrian stronghold mounting long range coast defense artillery. CCC—Indicates destroyers and submarine destroyers which steam in wide circles around the battleships to protect them from enemy submarines. The speed of these craft is from 30 to 45 miles per hour. DD—Italian floating gun carriages. These are large scows mounting but one heavy gun. They are towed to their positions and anchored. EE—Indicates Italian monitors. These are the only known films of these unwieldy but destructive craft in action. The fleet's observation balloon will be seen to be hovering well out of range of the enemy's guns, but high enough to watch and direct the Italian fire.



Reproduction of the Strategic Sketch Diagram made the day after the air fight by a military observer.

A—Austrian battle plane rises from behind Austrian stronghold and, climbing to about 10,200 feet, proceeds to bomb fleet. B—One of the bombs explodes just alongside a small destroyer which is damaged and capsized by the explosion. (The films show it clearly.) C—Italian planes hidden in cove behind headland rise and pursue Austrian airman. After a thrilling chase they pocket him and, to escape their machine guns, he does a daredevil tail dive to the sea and is captured by an Italian destroyer. D—Indicates point of his capture, within range of both shore batteries and the fleet's guns. Dotted line indicates Italian plane's flight. Heavy line indicates Austrian's.

An Apology

NO—I have lost no faith in the distributing machinery of the film business.

That I am offering, on behalf of this corporation, the first Triangle Special ("The Mayor of Filbert") to independent purchasers of district rights and prints in a hundred districts at once is because the picture, for political, social and business reasons, must have INSTANT countrywide release.

It isn't fair to ask that State Rights buyers disarrange their plans to put it out NOW—and there isn't a day to spare.

Yes, we would likely make some money—and save a good deal—by going about this in the usual way, for Newspaper Advertising in hundreds of cities costs money.

But it gets ACTION.

State Rights buyers welcome, just the same—especially if they have time to put in on a big, quick job—

With a big, quick profit.

More especially if they know how to handle local committees and get the benefit of a live question.

Of course, it's a great picture—eight reels. Most people know the book—everybody knows the subject—"Wet vs. Dry."

The whole trade knows the Director, Christie Cabanne—famous for "The Lamb" and other big pictures.

H. E. AITKEN,
President.

"A six reel picture that really gets under your shirt." (Wid's)

OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW #10

Upon a German officer captured during the latest drive by the Allies in France, was discovered an order commanding the Hun armies to "destroy everything."

In Official War Review #10 is shown how thoroughly this damnable order was followed. Scenes of wanton destruction and murder are shown that would shame a tribe of head-hunters.

Official war pictures of the British, French, Italian and American Governments, issued one reel a week.

What Hodkinson Independence means to You

W. W. Hodkinson is free from producer or exhibitor control. His organization is likewise free and completely controlled by himself.

He is the only free man in the industry and his freedom can do for you what you would like to do yourself, but as an individual exhibitor have not the power to accomplish.

This is the selection of your own product. The picking and choosing of just those pictures that you know will make money in your house.

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation is going to, and in fact is now, acting as a separator and selector for you.

Unlike producer-dominated companies which must force their product down your throat irrespective of merit, Hodkinson can accept or reject product for you strictly on its merits and the producer's willingness to sell it on an equitable basis and at a fair price.

When you think of the Hodkinson organization remember it in this light—of a separating machine that is working for your benefit; that is drawing the good product to you and eliminating the bad.

Every exhibitor that supports the Hodkinson organization, whether he throws his full weight behind it by becoming a Hodkinson co-partner and thereby helping to consolidate the exhibitor's buying power throughout the country, or whether he simply takes Hodkinson service, is helping to protect his own investment from the absorption and elimination that threatens it today.

These Producer Organizations believe in Hodkinson Principles and are benefiting by Hodkinson Independence

BROADWAY STAR FEATURES

GENERAL FILM COMPANY, Distributors

Select Pictures for 1918-1919

ONE FACT confronts the exhibitor as he faces the opening of the new season—judging from past performances, not from promises—there are no pictures that he can book with the certainty of receiving a high quality evenly maintained throughout the year that he can with Select Pictures.

This is not a statement needing proof: It is a fact! The exhibitor who keeps posted knows that houses running Select Pictures during the past season have been not only satisfied but highly pleased by the high average of quality maintained throughout by these productions. He knows that last year's Select exhibitors are bidding strongly to hold Select during the coming season. In a word, he knows that Select Pictures pay!

During the coming season Select will produce only a restricted number of the highest quality of pictures made by a small number of the foremost stars. Some details of the first of these productions follow.

SELECT SP PICTURES

THE Second Star Series of Select Pic will bring to the theatres of the countr same desirable qualities which have distingu
Select's previous output. This means that the very best s and stage successes which the market affords will be emp by Select stars in making their screen attractions. It means productions made with the greatest care, embell with the most desirable scenic and costume investiture, thoughtfully produced under the foremost directors o screen. Starting at high level, Select Pictures during th season may be depended upon to present the acme of the p

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG

One of the first of the truly great stars, Clara Kimball Young brings to her Second Series of Select Pictures that glorious beauty and exquisite artistry which have made her a favorite of the screen all over the world. Appearing only in attractions of highest merit, she begins her new series with a war play, "The Road Through the Dark," from a story recently published in the Metropolitan Magazine. This is a drama of intense emotions, and a vehicle superbly suited to Miss Young's abilities. Following it she will be seen in "Cheating Cheaters," Max Marcin's great stage hit which ran for a solid year in New York.

NORMA TALMADGE

Enjoying an unsurpassed popularity, created by one splendid success after another, Norma Talmadge begins her Second Select Series with the most ambitious production of her career, "A Tale of a Forbidden City" (temporary title) by George Scarborough the author of "Her Only Way." This will be followed by the great David Belasco stage success "The Heart of Wetona," which will be made into a lavish screen-drama.

CONSTANCE TALMADGE

Having achieved in her First Series of Select Pictures a success that places her in the front rank of stars, Constance Talmadge opens her Second Series with "Sauce for the Goose," the smart comedy in which Grace George scored a hit on the stage. Miss Talmadge follows this with Augustus Thomas's celebrated play, "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots"—with Constance wearing the boots!

ALICE BRADY

The sincere acting of Alice Brady was never seen to better advantage than in Miriam Michelson's clever story, "The Better Half," which furnishes the exceptional opening attraction of Miss Brady's Second Series. The brilliant technique which has characterized Miss Brady's photoplays is again in evidence, and the picture is one that will be remembered among the season's best. Stories from the pens of Fannie Hurst, who writes so crisply of New York life, and George Barr McCutcheon, who stands foremost among the novelists of the day, are among Miss Brady's forthcoming productions.

MARION DAVIES

Widely advertised in the first of her Select pictures, "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," this lovely star has for her second production "The Burden of Proof," an international romance of today with a background of war-time activities. Another sensational campaign of publicity will surround this feature, and will accompany also her forthcoming splendid production of that best-beloved of stage successes, "The

A Steady Flow of Splendid Select Productions

FROM the stars whose names appear in the foregoing pages Select Pictures will release a steady flow of high grade pictures—thirty-eight in number—during the year. This will bring one of these features on an average every ten days to exhibitors using Select Service. The number of productions to be made by each star follows:

Clara Kimball Young	8
Norma Talmadge	8
Constance Talmadge	8
Alice Brady	8
Marion Davies	6

Select wishes to emphasize the fact that each of these productions will be a new picture—new in every sense of the word. There are included no reprints or reissues. Each succeeding picture will be the latest effort of the star and her supporting company of players, and will, needless to say, be a sincere attempt to keep the Select standard of quality in the position to which it has already been carried—at the front!

In addition to the pictures comprised in these Star Series, Select Pictures will place upon the market during the coming months a number of special productions of high merit, announcement of which will be made through the usual channels.

INDUSTRY ACTS TO CONSERVE COAL

At Meeting of the National Association Plans Are Made for the Co-operation of Motion Picture Men with United States Fuel Administration Officials

AT a well attended meeting of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry held Wednesday, August 28, plans were made for the active and intimate co-operation of the industry with the United States Fuel Administration in its campaign to conserve 50,000,000 tons of coal during the coming winter.

The meeting was called for the purpose of permitting E. R. Sartwell, publicity director of the Fuel Administration and the representative of Fuel Administrator Doctor Harry A. Garfield, to explain to the members of the association the size and the difficulty of the coal problem and its intimate relationship with the winning of the war.

Mr. Sartwell explained there were two points of contact between the Fuel Administration and the industry at the present time. The first was a movement which has been undertaken by the association committee to bring about fuel conservation within the industry itself. The second was an intensive campaign to be carried out in the motion picture theatres of the country east of the Mississippi River to awaken the people to the size and difficulty of the fuel situation and its direct connection and relationship with the winning of the war. He stated that there was a distinct lack of knowledge on the part of the public of the importance of coal and the myriad ways in which the winning of the war was directly dependent upon it. Continuing he said:

Country Must Save 50,000,000 Tons.

"This is a problem which the people of the country must solve. It has been determined that on account of the war the demand for coal this year will be 100,000,000 tons greater than ever before in the history of the country. The production of coal this year will be 50,000,000 tons greater than was ever before produced. There is a gap of about 50,000,000 tons, and the only way this can be filled is by conservation.

"It is said if there is this great demand for coal, why not mine more, put on more men and get it out. But it is not a question of mining; it is a question of transportation. The greatest amount of coal that can be handled by the railroads at the present time is 700,000,000 tons a year. To increase this amount there would have to be built new railroads, new terminal facilities, and new equipment. This is naturally impossible at this time. Therefore the only other solution of the problem is to save 50,000,000 tons of coal this year."

Mr. Sartwell then made some suggestions as to the manner in which the Fuel Administration hoped to use the motion picture and the theatres of the country in this campaign of education. He believed that there was material enough all ready in existence that had been used in the news weeklies and in other pictures to compile short subjects which would picturize the importance of coal in the minds of the people. He also suggested a series of pictures that would visually transfer war material of all kinds into terms of coal.

J. H. Hallberg, technical advisor to the committee, explained the manner in which it was planned to bring about fuel conservation within the motion picture industry.

Irwin Suggests Use of Trailers.

Walter W. Irwin then explained the methods that had been used in distributing pictures for the Treasury Department in the Second and Third Liberty Loan Drives and outlined the plan that had been formed for handling motion pictures in aid of the coming drive. He suggested that the Fuel Administration adopt a plan of having short trailers sent to the theatres east of the Mississippi River, with instructions to the exhibitor to attach them to each feature picture shown, as a patriotic duty. It was the sense of the meeting that if this plan was followed it would provide a one hundred per cent. distribution.

Mr. Sartwell stated that during the campaign he would have a representative of the Fuel Administration make his headquarters at the offices of the National Association. Theodore Wharton told of a picture, which his concern had made for the New York State Fuel Administrator, and offered it to the National Fuel Administration. Joe Brandt, of Universal, also told of a quantity of film in the possession of his company, which could be used effectively in the present campaign. Mr. Sartwell gladly accepted these offers, and requested that copies of the pictures be sent to him at Washington. It was decided that all details of the work to be done by the industry for the Fuel Administration should go through the present Fuel Conservation of the Association.

WILL REGULATE USE OF ELECTRICITY

Standardization Board Will Be Formed as Result of Adviser Hallberg's Report

AS a result of recommendations made to the United States Fuel Administration by the fuel conservation committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, there is now in process of formation a standardization commission of the Fuel Administration, which will draw up regulations affecting the use of all electric current in the United States used for the purpose of lighting, heating and household utilities.

This commission will be made up of a representative of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, a representative of the National Electric Light Association and a representative of the United States Fuel Administration.

Following is the brief prepared by J. H. Hallberg, technical advisor of the association's fuel conservation committee, containing the suggestions and recommendations which brought this standardization commission into existence. It is expected the personnel of the commission will be announced by Fuel Administrator Garfield in the immediate future. The brief follows:

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, through its president, William A. Brady, has created a fuel conservation committee composed of the following members: Marcus Loew, chairman; Harold Edel, secretary; S. L. Rothapfel, Sydney S. Cohen, William Brandt, J. H. Hallberg, technical adviser; B. S. Moss, P. A. Powers, Albert E. Lowe, Gabriel L. Hess, F. H. Elliott, assistant secretary.

The object of this committee is to cooperate with the United States Fuel Administration in the matter of conserving fuel in the theatres, and motion picture theatres in particular, as well as in connection with the exhibition of motion pictures and stereopticon slides in all other places within the United States.

The writer has already had an interview with Mr. C. E. Stewart in Washington, and, at his suggestion, is herewith submitting the following estimates and recommendations:

It is safe to estimate that there are 12,000 motion picture theatres in the United States operating on an average of five hours a day each.

On this basis the total operating hours a day will equal 60,000, and, with an average consumption of 4 k. w. an hour, the total current consumption will equal 240,000 k. w. hours a day.

When we consider that the majority of the above theatres are supplied by the smaller and less efficient power plants, an estimate of 3 pounds of coal per k. w. h. for current delivered at the moving picture machine, may not be too high.

On the basis of 3 pounds of coal per k. w. h. the coal consumption equals 720,000 pounds, or 360 tons, a day.

Assuming that the average theatre operates 300 days a year, the total yearly consumption of coal is 108,000 tons.

By standardizing the maximum allowable current consumption for specified operating conditions or installations, it is possible to reduce the current consumption 30 to 60 per cent., with a consequent saving in fuel.

If we assume that the average reduction, due to applying fixed standards of current consumption, is 40 per cent. the fuel saving will be 43,200 tons per year.

Estimate of Legitimate Theatres.

In addition to the foregoing conservative estimate of the number of regular motion picture theatres there are thousands of legitimate theatres using spotlights, stereopticons and moving picture machines which would also be subjected to the rules of the standardization committee, and, as a rough estimate, the saving in this class of establishment will be at least 10,000 tons a year.

While the number of theatres may be less, the number of spotlights and other stage lamps in each individual theatre is considerably greater, with consequent possibility of fuel conservation.

In addition to the foregoing establishments using electric power for projection there are thousands of moving picture machines and stereopticons installed for the exhibition of motion pictures and slides in churches, schools, lodges, commercial establishments, manufacturing plants, and in private residences most of which will be subject to current saving, with consequent fuel conservation when operating under the rules of the standardization committee.

While, at the present moment, statistics are not at hand setting forth the number of moving picture and stereopticon projectors installed for exhibitions of this kind, the writer feels safe in stating that there are at least 20,000 such projectors in the United States, and these are in service on an average of two hours a week, or 104 hours a year. For an estimated installation of 20,000 such equipments the yearly hour operation is 2,080,000.

Considering that a saving of 5 k. w. h. can be made on each such installation the total yearly current saving will equal 1,040,000 k. w. h. Estimated as above, 3 pounds per k. w. h. at the projectors, the fuel saving represents 3,120,000 pounds, or 1,560 tons.

May Save Thousand Tons Weekly.

Judging by the foregoing the total estimated fuel saving should be not less than 54,760 tons per year, or a safe average of 1,000 tons per week.

This saving can be effected without sacrificing the results, merely by limiting unnecessary over-consumption, and by practicing ordinary economy in operation.

Many theatres, and most of the educational, commercial and privately operated machines, are still using old and inefficient methods in the production and control of the source of light for the projector.

The great majority of theatres, and practically all of the other installations, use dirty and inefficient surfaces upon which the pictures are projected.

Many theatres are using the carbon arc light where the tungsten projector lamp will give ample and satisfactory illumination. The application of the tungsten incandescent projector lamp, to the average educational, commercial and private motion picture and stereopticon projector, is entirely practical in almost all instances.

Now, therefore, if the more modern and more suitable equipment is substituted for, or added to the present installations the above mentioned fuel saving can easily be doubled.

May Save Also on Displays.

No attempt has been made herein to include the possible saving in fuel due to a reasonable restriction of electric current used for general and display lighting in connection with motion picture and legitimate theatres, but a large saving can be effected by putting a limit upon the amount of current to be allowed for such purposes.

A considerable saving in fuel can also be effected by rules to be issued by the standardization committee as to the temperatures to be maintained for different periods and hours of the day in moving picture and legitimate theatres. The amount of this saving cannot be estimated at this writing.

Recommends Formation of Board.

In order that the foregoing estimated fuel conservation may be taken advantage of, a standardization board or committee should be formed with headquarters in the Fuel Administration Department at Washington.

The object of this board, or committee, will be to formulate and approve the necessary rules and regulations to enable the carrying out of the above suggested program of fuel conservation.

The standardization board, or committee, should consist of one active member representing the National Electric Light Association, one active member representing the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, and one or more active members of the United States Fuel Administration.

It is necessary that this standardization board, or committee, be given power to enforce its rules, with penalties for violations.

It is proposed that when the final rules are formulated, approved and printed, that copies be distributed through all the members of the National Electric Light Association to the class of consumers under consideration, and that copies of the rules also be distributed through other electric light plants not members of the Electric Light Association to their consumers.

It is also recommended that the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry notify all of its members and distribute, through the film exchanges, slide manufacturing and renting concerns, all the necessary publicity issued by the Government standardization board or committee.

In the above estimates no account has been taken of the considerable amount of fuel that can be saved by the decreased consumption of carbon electrodes which will follow the more general use of the tungsten incandescent projector lamp and the saving in fuel in transportation facilities incident to moving the above mentioned amount of fuel which can be saved.

There are many details which could be mentioned in this brief, touching upon the possible work of the standardization board, or committee, but it is recommended that the Government committee, as above suggested, be first organized and in meeting before particularizing.

Respectfully submitted,

J. H. HALLBERG.

Williams, of Rhode Island, Tells How His State's Theatres Have Backed the War

A COPY of the brief prepared by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry setting forth in detail the war service accomplishments of the industry was recently mailed to all of the state chairman of the War Council Committee of the association by President William A. Brady.

In reply to the letter which accompanied the brief, Charles H. Williams, state chairman for Rhode Island, takes occasion to make a report of the war work accomplished by the motion picture theatres of that state.

Immediately following his appointment he organized all of the exhibitors of the state in such a manner that each could be reached by either telephone or telegraph within one hour's time in case of emergency.

The announcement of his appointment brought him into active work on the Rhode Island Food Committee and the Rhode Island division of the Four Minute Men, thus tying up the motion picture exhibitor with these two very important spheres of Government activity.

"Every film that has been produced or issued by the Government," he says in his report, "namely, some seventy or seventy-five reels up to the release of 'Pershing's Crusaders,' has been shown in every section of Rhode Island for war charities, with very little expense, the theatres paying for the advertising and most of the help being donated. In this kind of work alone, over $10,000 has been turned over to the Red Cross, the Tobacco Fund, the Y. M. C. A. and the K. of C. In addition to this the theatres of the state have frequently been donated to war charities and the entire proceeds turned over to some one of the above funds.

"During every drive of the Liberty Loan, Red Cross, War Savings Stamps, Y. M. C. A. and other allied war charities, practically every house in the state was used by the various speakers and collections made direct from the audience. During the last Loan drive in my own theatre, using about fifteen minutes each evening, for six evenings, we rolled up a total of $185,000 in bond subscriptions.

"For the coming year we are planning even greater efforts. For the three Sundays during the period of the coming Liberty Loan Drive our theatres will be used both for the afternoon and evening, and thus far seventeen Sundays have been asked for and given for various drives for the war charitable organizations. This condition holds true practically throughout the entire state as the exhibitors have thrown their houses open for all work sanctioned by the State Council of Defense and by myself as state chairman of the War Council of the National Association."

Five Smiths in Service.

The plate-glass strip in the back of studio manager W. S. Smith's automobile is decorated with a row of six red service-stars. Underneath five of them are the following names, Lieutenant A. B. Smith, Lieutenant George H. Smith, Sergeant Vincent Smith, Corporal Ed Smith and Private Frank L. Smith.

As yet there is no name under the sixth star, but that of Private Ernest Smith will probably decorate this space, as this son of W. S. Smith is daily waiting word to go into camp.

Visit General's Headquarters.

H. L. Orear, manager of the Cincinnati exchange, and H. E. Elder, manager of the Washington, D. C., exchange, were visitors to General Film Company headquarters during the past week.

BROADEN PLANS FOR LIBERTY FILMS

To Eliminate Confusion Each Company Will Handle Subjects Made by Its Own Stars—Most of the More Than Twoscore Pictures Now in Committee's Hands

PLANS for the motion picture industry's Liberty Loan drive in co-operation with the Treasury Department were greatly broadened during the week with the announcement of an elaboration in distribution plans and with the arrival in New York of practically all of the film contributions made by the various stars. As a result the executive departments of the various units of the industry, as well as the National Association's committee in charge of the Liberty Loan drive, are now concentrating on the details of the plan to obtain 100 per cent. distribution for the twoscore and more Liberty Loan films which will be shown in moving picture theatres throughout the country.

The change in the distribution arrangement was announced by Adolph Zukor, chairman, following a meeting of the committee on Monday. Under the new arrangement each company will distribute the pictures made by its own stars, which, it is expected, will promote greater efficiency and eliminate a great deal of confusion in the handling of the 3,000 prints which will be used in the forthcoming campaign. Members of the committee in attendance at the conference were Chairman Adolph Zukor, Walter W. Irwin, Marcus Loew, J. E. Brulatour, Al Lichtman, manager of distribution, and John C. Flinn, secretary of the committee.

The problem of obtaining 100 per cent distribution for the Liberty Loan films, which had been discussed at a conference held by Mr. Zukor and Frank R. Wilson, national director of publicity for the Fourth Liberty Loan campaign, was the principal business considered by the committee. Al Lichtman presented the previously announced plan of centralized booking from a master sheet, and this was discussed at some length.

Each Company to Distribute Its Own.

Walter W. Irwin, who is in charge of the distributors' division of the National Association, proposed that each company should distribute the pictures contributed by its own stars. It was pointed out by Mr. Irwin that promiscuous booking would result in disputes, discussions and controversies in that many exhibitors who have been booking pictures of the various stars represented in the loan drive would find pictures by these stars in other theatres. The only equitable way of handling the distribution of prints, according to Mr. Irwin, would be for each company to distribute its own pictures. He stipulated that no restrictions should be made on bookings under this plan. The Irwin proposal was adopted by a unanimous vote of the committee.

The proposed plan of distribution, as outlined by Mr. Irwin, was called to the attention of Mr. Wilson at Washington, who, in acknowledging receipt of the plan, stated that it certainly had the approval of the government.

Full details of the distribution arrangement adopted by the committee were outlined in the following letter to Mr. Zukor by Mr. Irwin:

"As per your request, I am confirming in detail the resolution passed this afternoon, at the meeting of the Liberty Loan committee of the Motion Picture Industry, after an exhaustive discussion, in which you and all of the other members participated, concerning the method of obtaining the widest possible distribution of the 3,000 Liberty Loan prints to be issued by the government, from negatives made by the motion picture stars, as follows:

"First—Each company shall distribute, through all of its offices in the United States, the prints in which its own stars appear.

"Second—Prints of any subject made by a company or individual not possessing a distribution organization, will be handled by any distributing organization selected by such company or individual.

"Third—Each office of each distributing organization will be held strictly accountable by its home office for booking solid during the four weeks of the drive each print delivered to it.

"Fourth—At the conclusion of the drive each branch office of each distributing organization shall immediately forward to its home office the original booking sheets showing the specific theatres and dates for which each print was on exhibition, as well as the dates for which each print was in transit, such booking sheets to be delivered by you, and by you transmitted to the Treasury Department.

Exhibitors Under no Charge.

"Fifth—No charge shall be made directly or indirectly to any exhibitor for the exhibition of any Liberty Loan prints, nor shall the exhibitor be asked to pay express charges either way.

"Sixth—Express charges shall be paid by the distributing organization, each exchange shall maintain an accurate record thereof, and at the conclusion of the drive forward the record, supported by vouchers, to its home office so that the company may be reimbursed by the Treasury Department.

"Seventh—No exhibitor shall be permitted to obtain a repeat booking for any subject.

"Eighth—Uniform instructions shall be sent by the home office of each distributing organization to its respective offices, such instructions to be prepared by your committee, and to be published in the trade papers.

"Ninth—The Government is to determine the number of prints to be made from each negative.

"Tenth—Each distributing organization shall determine the division of such prints among its respective offices, according to the nature of the territories and the number of prints required for each.

"As you are aware, it is the unanimous judgment of the committee that this method of distribution will cause each of the 3,000 prints to work each day during the drive, unless it is in transit. In other words, no print will remain idle on the shelf.

"In the first place, all of the exhibitors of the United States are more than anxious to perform their patriotic duty by exhibiting a Liberty Loan subject every day of the drive and, therefore, will see to it that they possess complete bookings for the entire period.

Every Print Must Be Busy.

"In the second place, the home office of each distributing organization will not tolerate a branch manager to allow any print to remain idle any day, and, in the next place, each branch manager is just as anxious to do his bit in aid of the Liberty Loan, as the exhibitors are to do theirs.

"Thus both the branch manager and the exhibitors will execute a 100 per cent. result.

"But, as per the judgment of the committee, both the Government and the exhibitors of the United States should understand that considerable disappointment must necessarily accrue to the exhibitors, by reason of the fact that 3,000 prints can fill only approximately a third of the booking days contained in the period of the four weeks' campaign, for the following reasons:

"There are approximately 14,000 theatres in the United States. Estimating the number of theatres that only run one or two days a week, as well as the theatres in territories in which exhibitions are permitted but six days a week, it is calculated that the theatres of the United States at the present time are averaging five exhibition days per week.

"Accordingly there are 70,000 possible booking days in each week of the drive, and as the drive with motion pictures is to consist of four weeks, the total number of possible booking days for the period is 280,000.

"It follows, therefore, that even without considering the number of days lost in transit, particularly in the western territories, the total number of prints required to fill the 280,000 booking days would exceed 9,000.

"Consequently, with only 3,000 prints, more than two-thirds of the possible booking days of the period must at all times remain unfilled.

"WALTER W. IRWIN."

Picture Drive Begins Week Earlier.

Although the actual Liberty Loan campaign will extend over a period of only three weeks from September 28 to October 19, it has been arranged to begin the motion picture drive a week earlier, if possible thus extending it over a period of four weeks. Prints of the various subjects will be in the hands of the exchanges in plenty of time to permit bookings to begin the week of September 21. The motion picture loan campaign will end on October 19, the expiration date of the loan drive.

Practically all of the prints of the various subjects contributed by the two score and more stars who are co-operating with the Government have reached the New York headquarters of the committee. These pictures have aroused the greatest enthusiasm on the part of all who have seen them, and the electrifying appeals carried in the various films are expected to be important factors in making the motion picture industry's contribution to the campaign a tremendous success. Producers and stars have been engaged in a friendly rivalry to see who could contribute the most attractive pictures, and film men declare that the results have been truly wonderful.

A new addition to the list of stars cooperating in the industry's drive was received during the week, when Geraldine Farrar announced immediately on her return from Wyoming that she would contribute a special picture to the drive under the auspices of the Goldwyn organization. All of the other Goldwyn stars had co-operated in the making of a special 1,000-foot production under the supervision of Willard Mack, but Miss Farrar, who was working on location on a forthcoming picture, was unable to reach New York in time to take part in it.

Ince Films Create Enthusiasm.

Friends of Thomas H. Ince are congratulating him upon the splendid showing made by three of his stars, Charles Ray, Dorothy Dalton and Enid Bennett, in their Liberty Loan films. These pictures were received with the greatest enthusiasm by the committee and are expected to create a big stir wherever they are shown. Another picture to win high praise was "It's a Cinch," contributed by the stars of the Mack Sennett studios. Ford Sterling, Louise Fazenda, Ben Turpin and numerous other Sennett funmakers outdid themselves in making this film, which carries numerous big punches despite the fact that at times it is highly humorous. The scene where the American soldiers start for the Kaiser's dugout in Berlin and the final episode, in which the Hun flag on the palace at Berlin is lowered and the American flag raised in its place, is one of the many high points in this film. Another picture which has created a big stir is the one contributed by Elsie Ferguson, entitled "The Spirit That Wins."

Six special productions were contributed by Vitagraph stars—Earle Williams, Harry T. Morey and Betty Blythe, Alice Joyce, Corinne Griffith, William Duncan and Gladys Leslie—who succeeded in presenting some unusual Liberty Loan appeals. Sessue Hayakawa's contribution is entitled "Banzai," or "Hurrah," and is of a high patriotic order. Other films received during the week were: Dustin Farnum in "Ready Money Ringfield," and pictures by Billie Burke, George M. Cohan, Lillian Gish, Alice Brady, William Faversham, Harold Lockwood, Emily Stevens, and Edith Storey.

Marguerite Clark's Liberty Loan picture was filmed in Washington, D. C., in the interesting wartime atmosphere of the capital city, and presents a most effective plea for the purchase of Liberty Bonds.

"Inquiries we have received from exhibitors in all parts of the country indicate that they are keenly alive to the situation and will do all in their power to co-operate with the Government and the National Association," said Mr. Zukor. "The committee urges that the exhibitors make their booking arrangements as early as possible, and that they make every effort to get the films back to the distributing points with the least possibly delay. The stars, producers and distributing organizations are doing their bit for the success of the Fourth Liberty Loan, and the exhibitors have shown that they are equally as patriotic and wholeheartedly interested in making the motion picture industry's part of the campaign a complete success. From present indications, the Liberty Loan drive will be the biggest contribution to the winning of the war yet made by the motion picture industry, and the entire industry can well afford to be proud of the co-operation it is going to give the Government in this drive."

SUNDAY SHOWS CONTINUE IN NASHVILLE

But Mayor's Opposition Doesn't Let Up, Except in Cases Where War Benefits Are Associated

Nashville, Tenn.

DESPITE continued efforts on the part of anti-Sunday openers and their endeavors to have Nashville's mayor, William Gupton, who is an avowed enemy of Sunday movies, put the ban on the opening of theatres in Nashville on Sunday for any purpose, patriotic or otherwise, Nashville continues to enjoy the films on the Sabbath when they are shown in connection with war benefits.

The Sunday movie question, which sprung to life three weeks ago after a relapse of several weeks, is now gaining momentum, and indications are to the effect that it will become a hot issue in Nashville again at a near date, unless the mayor puts the lid on tight and refuses to allow Sunday performances for patriotic purposes.

The latest drive for war benefit to call to its aid the Sunday movie is that for a fund for purchasing an automobile ambulance for the Vanderbilt Base Hospital Unit, which is now serving in France as the representative of Nashville and Vanderbilt University. A collection and sale of old tires recently netted about $5,000 for this fund, but the Confederate Veterans of the city desired to show their appreciation for the services being rendered by the boys over there and decided to stage a benefit movie performance. Accordingly they have secured the Knickerbocker Theatre, through the patriotism and courtesy of Manager W. H. Wassman. The theatre will be under the direction of members of Frank Cheatham Bivouac, Company B, Troops A and C, Forrest Veteran Cavalry, on September 15, and in view of the fact that the occasion is a war benefit for Nashville's own boys and promoted by Nashville's own boys of 1861-65, it is hardly probable the mayor will invoke the aid of his police department to put a stop to the Sunday show at the behest of various Sunday school unions and religious organizations, which have fought Sunday movies in Nashville from the start.

Sept. 14 To Be Flag Day in New York Theatres

THE Mayor's Committee of National Defense has requested the aid and co-operation of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry in making Saturday, September 14, Star Spangled Banner Day throughout the motion picture theatres of Greater New York.

The plan is to have the audiences in all of the theatres of the city rise and sing "The Star Spangled Banner." In order to make this easy the Mayor's Committee is now having made a sufficient number of slides, made in the form of the American flag with the words of the national anthem printed on the white stripes. These slides will be distributed to all the theatres in the city.

The committee is also mobilizing 600 well known singers. One of these singers will be assigned to each of the theatres and will act in the capacity of a leader to get the audience singing.

The request of the Mayor's Committee was made in the form of a letter to William A. Brady, president of the Association.

Mr. Brady referred this letter to Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the association, who immediately assured the committee that it could count on the full co-operation of the National Association and the exhibitors of the city. A meeting will be arranged in the near future between the presidents of the Manhattan, Bronx and Brooklyn locals of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League to take care of all the details of this movement.

Picture Day at War Show.

As the result of a suggestion made by Watterson R. Rothacker, middle western representative of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, it is very probable that there will be a motion picture day at the war exhibition of the Committee on Public Information which is to be held in Chicago during the same week as the American Exhibitors' Association meeting.

Mr. Rothacker made this suggestion in a telegram to Executive Secretary Elliott. The secretary of the National Association consulted with Mr. Hart, who looked on the idea with approval, with the result that Mr. Rothacker was instructed to get in touch with J. J. O'Connor, the representative of the Committee on Public Information in charge of the exhibition in Chicago, and arrange all of the necessary details.

PATHE CLUB HAS OUTING.

On Sunday, August 25, the Pathe Club had a successful and enjoyable outing, members of the club and their friends going up the Hudson by special steamer on an all day trip. Luncheon and supper were served on the boat. An orchestra furnished music. A stop of several hours was made at a place up river and bathing was enjoyed.

Over 125 persons attended the outing. Club President Paul Brunet and Mrs. Brunet, Louis J. Gasnier, president of Astra, Mrs. Gasnier and daughter were prominent among them. Among others were Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Picard, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Wiley and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Zenker. Members of the club from the Jersey City studio and the New York exchange helped the home office crowd to "shake it up" and make the day enjoyable.

Jack Kyle, secretary of the club, and J. T. Richards comprised the committee on arrangements, and the consensus of opinion was that they did very creditable work.

IN TRAINING FOR "THE HELL CAT"

Geraldine Farrar's Story of How She Learned to Ride and Shoot with True Western Nonchalance in Record Breaking Time and of Her Regard for Men of the Range

By Edward Weitzel

WITHIN the next year a three days' celebration will take place in the sparsely populated but intensely alive town of Cody, Wyo. In the vernacular of the region, this celebration will e-clipse any other social affair that has ever been pulled off by the united efforts of every man, woman and child in the community. The scene of the doings will be the largest hall in town, and Buck, Curley and other less celebrated cow-punchers of Cody will be the guests of honor. Ordinary citizens and their wives and sweethearts will push and jam into the hall and divide their attention and admiring glances between a moving picture and a line of proud and happy cow-nurses on the front row of seats.

The name of the picture will be "The Hell Cat," and comments of an intimate and deadly sarcastic nature will be exchanged by the gentlemen in shirts of brilliant hue and sheepskin breeches, as one or more of their number is flashed on the screen before the deeply gratified gaze of the rest of the spectators. For a trio of days and nights the roll of the bones and the cry of the crap shooter will give place to a prolonged movie jag and the delights of letting one's best friend know what an unhandsome, slab-sided critter he is anyhow!

For the first time in its history Cody and its bevy of cow-punchers have assisted in the making of a moving picture. The Goldwyn photoplay, "The Hell Cat," in which Geraldine Farrar gives her first portrayal of a girl of the ranch, is the picture, and curiosity is bound to rise to the all-consuming point when the Cody actors in the Willard Mack story see themselves reflected on the screen.

Farrar Keenly Enjoys Experience.

To Geraldine Farrar the recalling of her experience while the western scenes were in the making, is a matter of keen enjoyment. The novelty of her surroundings, the odd and refreshing character of Wyoming's native sons, and the knowledge that she must learn to mount, ride and shoot in the shortest possible time, and before an acutely critical and embarrassingly frank body of onlookers, all served to spur her on to do her best.

This state of mind, by the way, is the one in which Geraldine Farrar approaches everything she attempts. It is only necessary to listen to her for a few moments and feel the enthusiasm that colors each word to understand her success in life. Her artistic instinct responds to every form of dramatic expression, either behind the footlights or on the screen. The occupation of the moment absorbs her entirely; and she was as anxious to win the approbation of those unpolished but discerning Codyites as to earn the applause of a Monday night audience at the Metropolitan Opera House.

"Curley was a wonderful teacher and a perfect squire of dames, although he probably would resent the title with the aid of his six-shooter." Miss Farrar was sitting on a cretonne covered divan in her Central Park West apartment, as she laughed heartily at the recollection of her riding teacher and his engaging peculiarities.

"I knew absolutely nothing of the three arts of which Curley was master, but he taught me to mount, ride and shoot western fashion by a method that meant quick results or sudden and serious disability. No sympathy is wasted on the unfortunate tenderfoot who can not ride a horse or handle a Colt Wyoming style. There is no excuse for not knowing how. Such things should come naturally while one is young, like the whooping cough and the measles. So the male beings stand around and wait cheerfully for you to fall off your mount and break your neck or pump a few bullets into a luckless bystander. It's the normal result of neglecting one's early duties in life."

"Did you disappoint the populace, Miss Farrar?"

Curley the Blessed Cowboy.

"I just had to! Our time was limited and I was forced to do credit to Curley's teaching without the usual pauses for repairs. That blessed cowboy! I think that he and the rest of the cattlemen were willing to be known as my friends, but none of them could quite reconcile himself to the part I was playing. The girl is the daughter of a sheep raiser, and her father is engaged in a feud with cattlemen. Curley and his companions hold all sheep raisers in the deep contempt felt by every honest cow-puncher.

"'I can't jest see, Ma'am, how you can fetch yourself to act out a sheep raiser's girl,' he said to me one day. 'Them fellows ain't men nohow, jest white-livered coyotes same's their sheep. They ain't got no rights on the grazing lands. When we wants to get rid of 'em we drive a steer into the middle of their flock and tell the owner to get off our land. If he don't move fast enough, we hurry him out of the country with a gun, and kill off his sheep. You orter have a cattleman for your dad.' Curley was a diamond in the rough in most things, but he considered sheep and sheepmen worse than unnecessary."

"Did you stay in Cody the entire five weeks you were away?"

"Oh, no! We rode fifty miles up into the mountains to a place called Valley Ranch, on the South Fork. Part of the road was so narrow that it didn't steady my nerves perceptibly when I was told that a horse and rider slipped off the trail recently just at the particular spot we were at, and rolled down about eight hundred feet. It was Buck who gave me the pleasant information, and when I asked what happened to them he looked me straight in the eye without a smile and replied that he and his companions tied several ropes together and pulled the horse and rider up again. Every tenderfoot is fair game for their tall tales, you know."

"You must have found it comparatively easy to get into the spirit of your part in such an atmosphere."

Santschi a Superb Villain.

"I did. The character is more like Carmen than any other part I have ever played. She has the same quick temper and imperious nature, but is good and lovable. In order to find an excuse for her black hair and the touch of romance in her appearance, the author has given her an Irish father and a Spanish mother. The picture has all the color and action of a typical western drama, but we have tried to dispense with extravagant detail. My scenes with Thomas Santschi are strong and fine. He's the villain and he is superb. I've seen one of the prints run off. The locations are splendid. Those Wyoming mountains are full of marvelous tints and rugged beauty."

Geraldine Farrar in "The Hell Cat" (Goldwyn).

"How are Curley and the Codyites?"

"Born actors, as are all cowboys. They are only a lot of children, and play-acting is second nature. Why, they were so proud of the grease paint, they wore it day and night. They thought it enhanced their beauty, and refused to wash their faces all the time we were there."

A phone call for Miss Farrar gave the interviewer an opportunity to inspect the collection of rare Japanese prints on the walls of the apartment. When the lady returned she was still eager to recall her Cody experiences with the gentlemanly range riders of the West.

"I could tell you dozens of funny happenings out in Wyoming. It was real roughing it. Mr. Tellegen and I occupied a room directly over the barroom of the Cody hotel, and I am afraid we interfered terribly with the free and easy joyousness that ordinarily went on in the room below. It seems that all the cowboys made it a point of honor not to shoot up through the ceiling while we were in our room. It was very thoughtful of them, a piece of delicate courtesy that both my husband and I fully appreciated; but we never felt sure that some stranger might not saunter into the barroom some night unnoticed and send the contents of his shooting iron in our direction before his playfulness could be curbed. The attitude of those boys toward a woman is a very fine thing to see. How I wish I could be present when 'The Hell Cat' is shown in Cody!"

EXPORTS AND IMPORTS HOLD UP WELL

Fiscal Year of 1918 Shows Gain of 8,508,649 Feet in Unexposed Film Sent Out of Country

Washington, D. C.

ALTHOUGH the war has had a very depressing effect upon the foreign trade on many non-war industries, the motion picture seems to have been but slightly affected. Statistics now being compiled by the Department of Commerce, showing the imports and exports of motion picture film during the fiscal year 1918, which ended June 30 last, have been compared with those of the fiscal year 1914, with most encouraging results. The total difference in the balance of trade is about a million dollars loss, our imports having fallen off approximately that amount, while our exports show a loss of only about one hundred thousand dollars.

The greatest falling off in imports appears to have been in the receipts of negatives, which have always been the most important branch of the import end. These fell from 20,057,144 feet in 1914, to 713,363 feet in 1918. Positive films come next, having dropped from over $400,000 in 1914 to but little over $175,000 last year. Unexposed film increased from 44,717,323 feet to 47,462,715 feet, but the value fell off.

Two periods of depression are noticeable in the statistics, one for the fiscal year 1915, which opened about a month prior to the outbreak of the war, the other during 1918, which opened three months after the advent of the United States into the conflict. The years 1916 and 1917, in nearly all commodities, show some recovery from the depression which followed the beginning of the war in 1914, but this is lost in 1918 and, in some cases, notably in negatives, the percentage of loss was then even greater than that of 1914.

The following table shows how our imports have varied from year to year, beginning with 1914 for a base, that being the last pre-war period:

	Unexposed.	Negatives.	Positives.
1914.....	$889,560*	$1,009,469	$402,704
1915.....	967,907	411,999	258,800
1916.....	750,023	225,690	256,332
1917.....	802,324	448,252	227,118
1918.....	739,135	166,033	177,148

*Beginning with October 4, 1913.

Drop of but $100,000 in Exports.

The fact that there has been a drop of only $100,000 in the value of motion picture film exported is due to the rising market which has prevailed over the past two years. Had it not been for this rising market, the loss in this branch of our foreign trade would have been far more severe.

The falling off in exports is due partly, of course, to the fact that the war has hampered our foreign markets, but also, in part, to the great demand which, since the outbreak of the war, has prevailed for the raw materials which enter into the composition of film and which are of great value in the production of munitions. It is this last phase of the situation which has resulted in so greatly increasing the value per foot of film.

While the exports of unexposed film dropped from 155,359,550 feet in 1914 to 57,995,064 feet in 1918, the export record of exposed films is one of the most amazing features of the whole motion picture industry. Because the calling of all available men to the colors had about stopped production in the allied countries, while still progressing at its regular rate in the United States, this country was able to take advantage of the great opportunity that was offered in South America and some of the neutral countries. At the same time, there arose a great demand in the war-ridden countries of Europe for amusement which would divert attention from the war for a time, which tended again to increase the demand for American films.

Because of these conditions, our exports of exposed film, which in 1914 had amounted to only 32,690,104 feet, had increased in 1916 to 158,751,786 feet, and for 1918, after we had entered the war, they were still 84,557,376 feet.

The details of our export trade during the period of five years beginning with July 1, 1913, are shown in the following table:

	Unexposed Film. Linear Feet.	Value.
1914.....	155,359,550	$4,264,722
1915.....	115,067,424	2,591,444
1916.....	72,098,993	2,220,118
1917.....	49,486,415	1,125,895
1918.....	57,995,064	1,385,291
	Exposed Film. Linear Feet.	Value.
1914.....	32,690,104	$2,282,924
1915.....	35,987,460	2,498,504
1916.....	158,751,786	6,757,658
1917.....	128,549,816	6,633,291

NEHLS GETTING GOOD REPORTS.

General Manager R. R. Nehls, of the American Film Company reports highly satisfactory results on the new "direct" selling system inaugurated by President Hutchinson. For the marketing of three series of eight five-reelers by each of the company's three stars, Mary Miles Minter, William Russell and Margarita Fisher, some thirty-odd salesmen covered the United States and deal direct with exhibitors. The Pathe exchanges do the work of shipping and collecting, etc. Mr. Nehls, after five weeks' experience with the new method, believes it to be an ideal one, and large contracts from the entire set of series are coming in steadily.

Funny Face Does His Bit for Uncle's Liberty Loan

OF the many moving pictures planned to aid the United States Government in the next Liberty Loan campaign one of the most unique is that just completed by Essanay and soon to be released.

This picture is entitled "Two Bits for Uncle Sam." It is the first of a series of ten animated doll pictures, created by Howard S. Moss. Director Moss has been working on this series at the Essanay studios for many months and the entire number now are completed.

The patriotic picture shows how the dolls do their bit for Uncle Sam, and stimulates those who see it to do theirs. The chief character is "Funny Face," a doll about twelve inches high. There are several other doll actors in the piece, including doll soldiers and red cross nurses. There is also one flesh and blood actor who takes the part of Uncle Sam.

The dolls not only move and take their parts as any real actor, but they depict all the human emotions through facial expressions, just as human beings. They can laugh, cry, express anger, courage, determination, fear, bravery, love jealousy and the whole gamut of emotions.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

MARITIME EXCHANGE MANAGERS MEET

Discuss Important Questions of Taxation with Various Exhibitors Invited to Session

THE meeting arranged by the Maritime Film Exchange Managers' Association with the exhibitors of the province took place at St. John, N. B., on August 26. Not very many of the out-of-town exhibitors attended, but there was a good representation of the local theatre managers. President G. A. Margetts was in the chair, and after the minutes of the last meeting had been read and some unfinished business settled, Mr. Margetts made a short address.

Among other things he said that there had been many rumors circulated regarding the Film Exchange Association and pointing out that it was "part and parcel of a coast to coast organization for the protection of exchanges in the matter of contracts and collections, and for the adjustment of differences between the exchange and the exhibitor in the interests of both."

The exhibitors present were asked to give their opinion of such an association, and several spoke, some saying that the aims were broader than they had at first thought. A letter was read from N. W. Mason, of New Glasgow, stating his regret at not being able to attend, and expressing his satisfaction with a ruling of the association.

A letter from G. J. Galagher, of Charlottetown, was the signal for a lengthy discussion regarding the damaged reels which are shipped to exhibitors from the exchanges. Mrs. Davidson, of Moncton, spoke on this subject, saying that with the close shipments she had for her theatre the reels were almost invariably in a bad state.

Mr. Margetts told of the difficulty of securing new reels at this time, and advised exhibitors to secure their own. It was felt by some that this was not the share of the exhibitor, but should be an expense borne by the exchange. The blame was laid to the operators and the express companies by other speakers.

Mr. Soskins, general manager of the Famous Players, Toronto, said that he personally should see that their exchanges made it their duty to send out all reels in perfect condition, and that injured reels should be charged up to the exhibitor from whom they were returned. Other managers present spoke of the extreme difficulty of tracing the culprits.

Mr. Soskins gave a history of the formation of the association, and pointed out the great value of close co-operation between the exchange and the exhibitor in the matter of taking steps against excessive taxation, the present system of censorship and other questions which affect the trade. R. G. March spoke of close shipments, and showed how it was impossible to avoid this condition in certain parts of the territory.

The question of moving entirely out of the province on account of the high taxes was discussed. W. H. Golding spoke on the subject, and reminded those present that these were war times, that practically all theatres are losing money, and that taxes everywhere are very high. He said the St. John houses were working in close co-operation with the Government, and felt that its members were willing to give as square a deal as was possible in war conditions. It was stated at the meeting that most of the exchanges do seventy-five per cent. of their business in Nova Scotia as contrasted with New Brunswick.

The system of censorship in force in Nova Scotia is that only those reels are censored which have been condemned in other provinces. This makes a necessity for only one censor instead of four as in New Brunswick, and is a great saving in time and money for the exchange, as well as more convenient for the exhibitor, in that sometimes an advertised picture is "canned" at the last moment and he is forced to fill up with something perhaps inferior.

Speaking on the exchanges being forced on account of taxes to charge a higher rental for film, Mr. Golding wisely said that the public are the ones with initiative, and that, while, for a necessity, a consumer must pay, in the matter of amusement you cannot force the higher admission fee, for the people simply stay home. The president announced that the aims of the association will be printed and a copy sent to each exhibitor.

Two exchanges in the city, the Mutual (Charles Kerr, manager) and William C. Smith, who handles the General on a percentage basis, were present, and were asked to give their reasons for not joining. Mr. Kerr said he would state his at a meeting exclusively of the exchange managers. Mr. Smith told his side of the case, but the discussion was brought to a close by the chair.

It was asked that a committee should be appointed from the Maritime Provinces Exhibitors' League with the Exchange Managers' Association to meet with the Government to discuss matters of great moment to the trade. The meeting closed with a vote of thanks to the exhibitors who had attended.

There were present I. Soskins, of Toronto; A. J. Reddy, of the Perkins Electric, Montreal; W. W. O. Fenety, of the Gaiety Theatre, Fredericton; Mrs. Davidson, of the Dreamland, Moncton; Steve Hurley, of the Hayden-Gibson Theatre, Woodstock; W. H. Golding, F. G. Spencer, W. C. McKay, A. Prince, R. Romney (Vitagraph), R. G. March (Specialty Film Import), A. Donaghy (Superfeatures), J. Lierberman, (Fox), M. Bernstein (Famous Players), Charles Kerr (Mutual), W. C. Smith (General), E. Tearle (Regal).

All exchanges in the city were represented. T. P. Regan, the attorney of the association, was present, and Alice Fairweather, representing the Moving Picture World, was invited to attend.

The Milwey Theatre, Montreal, advertised the new Universal serial "The Brass Bullet," by sending out an automobile the body of which was shaped like a rifle bullet painted to resemble the color of brass.

Canadian Exhibitors Act on "No Canceling"

THE letter which Secretary Thomas Scott of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario, Limited, Toronto, sent out to exhibitors of Ontario and exhibitor associations of other Canadian Provinces with respect to cancellation clauses in booking contracts, was as follows:

"Dear Sir:

"What would you do if you lost control of your theatre? This can be brought about by thoughtlessly binding yourself to one exchange for a period of fifty-two weeks. This association wishes to guard, not only its members but every exhibitor in Canada, against signing any contract that does not give the exhibitor the thirty-days' cancellation clause. You might just as well sign over your investment right away as to sign without this cancellation clause. There is only one safe investment for the future success of the exhibitor and that is open booking. In the very near future, big things may happen in the business; this is the reason that the association is sending out this warning. We will advise you from time to time, keeping you in very close touch with the business. Therefore, do not bind yourself to one exchange. Keep them all open. By so doing your investment is safe."

The exhibitors of Ottawa, Ontario, the Canadian capital, have organized a branch of the Retail Merchants' Association of Ontario, according to an announcement by J. C. Campbell of that organization. Mr. Campbell declares that the exhibitors of Ottawa Valley are also almost ready to come into the organized fold. The Ottawa branch will appoint its own officers.

Maritime Exhibitors to Meet.

Secretary J. M. Franklin, of the Maritime Provinces Exhibitors' League, announces that there will be a convention of that organization at Halifax on Wednesday and Thursday, September 18 and 19. It is expected that there will be a large turnout of exhibitors.

Here's a Corking Good Idea.

Cincinnati, O.—A trifling and yet important feature, which has been installed at the Gifts Theatre by McMahan & Jackson, for the convenience of the public, is a bulletin at each entrance, on which the time of the next performance is kept posted. The firm in this way takes notice of the annoyance which many moving-picture "fans" experience when they enter a theatre in the middle of the feature number, making it necessary to see the last half first, and thereby depriving them of much of the pleasure of seeing the story unfold.

The bulletins will make it possible for patrons of the Gifts to time their entrance so as to see the beginning of the entire program. Incidentally, they will at the same time perform a valuable service for the house, by tending to avoid the confusion incident to patrons arriving and leaving in the middle of a performance, and will in no way slow things up.

Mrs. Henrietta B. Starkey, owner of the Star Theatre, of Le Sueur, Minn., is one of the oldest and most successful small town exhibitors in the Northwest. She has always been in direct charge of the business and has watched it grow steadily. Her son, Edward, was her only assistant for several years and now she is without his aid, for he went to war this month.

Community Singing Great Success.

That theatregoers should get acquainted and be friendly instead of handling out icy stares and sourly scowls to their neighbors in the seats to the right and left of them, is the theory evolved by E. H. Hulsey, owner of three big motion picture theatres in Dallas, Tex. Hence he has started motion picture "sing songs" at the houses under his control.

Mr. Hulsey believes that an audience which sings in chorus naturally becomes friendly and feels good. He started the "sing song" plan at the Hippodrome Theatre late in August.

At first, when the song leader on the stage started up "Old Black Joe," there was little response. Another melody was tried and in a moment or so the big audience had warmed up and were trolling out "Over There" with an enthusiasm which would cause the goose flesh to rise up Kaiser Wilhelms spinal column.

The singing made the audience feel genially at home. It is now being made a regular thing at evening performances for a minute or so before the commencement of the feature film.

To Boost Liberty Loan Film.

Cincinnati, O.—The Associated Film Exchange of the Chamber of Commerce, comprising all the nearly two-score exchanges doing business in Cincinnati, held a important meeting a few days ago with W. E. Lusk, chairman of the Fourth Central District for the Fourth Liberty Loan. The affair was preceded by a luncheon at the Chamber of Commerce, and was held for the purpose of discussing arrangements for the distribution of the films which will be used to promote the forthcoming loan.

As has become known already, more than thirty subjects will be handled in these films, and such leading stars as Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart and others will give their services in producing the pictures. According to Mr. Lusk's announcement to the exchange managers attending the luncheon, 3,000 prints will be available for distribution, this large number being decided upon in order to make certain that as nearly as possible all of the 100,000,000 people in America can see at least some of the pictures during the limited period of the campaign.

Making Critics Out of Patrons.

Colonel Levy, president of the Big Feature Rights Corporation, Louisville, in presenting Petrova pictures to various houses, announces a plan to directly interest picture patrons in presentations of the various subjects. Fairly and intelligently written criticisms of the pictures witnessed are invited, and the theatre patron who sends what is considered to be the best criticism receives an award. It is believed that in this way each member of the audience will be more concerned in the productions, and the idea presents a suggestion to exhibitors in towns both large and small to develop a personal interest in pictures on the part of "fans." Exhibitors who develop the idea would find added interest in the plan if arrangements were made with local newspapers to print one or more of the criticisms, as part of the "reading notices" that advertisers are entitled to in contracting display space with the local press.

WOMEN EMPLOYES HAVE CALL IN TEXAS

Picture Theatres Are Employing Females Wherever It Is Possible to Utilize Them

THERE'S many a picture theatre in Texas nowadays where patrons never see a single male attendant. They buy their ticket from the girl at the door, a girl usher conducts them to their seat and if they want to see the proprietor the chances are that it is a competent woman manager who hears their complaints or receives their congratulations.

It is only up in the fire proof booth that the male is still holding undoubted sway—and so many motion picture operators have gone to the war that already there is talk of having to put women in their places. The operators in Dallas protest that a woman cannot operate a machine, her hair will get tangled in the works, she is too temperamental, etc., etc. On film row it is said, however, that the girl operator is merely a question of a few more months.

For girl ushers in Texas, a military rig is proving popular especially in towns where the great cantonments are located. In Houston for instance, patrons of the leading motion picture houses are greeted with a snappy salute from demure little damsels clad in regulation kahki and wearing army campaign hats. The soldiers like it, and the civilians too.

The overall girl, doing man's work to aid in winning the war, has at last come into evidence in Dallas film exchanges. At Jimmy Kelly's General offices on Commerce streets there are several pretty girls at work in the poster room, clad in honest work-a-day blue jeans.

Blanche Corley and Catherine Rogers were the pioneers in the overall line. They declare that being free from restricting feminine garb makes them fifty per cent. more efficient when it comes to climbing ladders, stacking posters, etc. They fill places of boys who are in kahki.

"Smiling" Kelly Has a System.

Mental suggestion and mild mannered persistence are the methods used and advocated by Smiling Jimmy Kelly, of General, in dealing with censors and censor boards.

He says that by concentrating his mind hard enough he brought the Dallas censor board to the unanimous opinion that "Hypocrites" was a cracker jack show.

Mrs. Boyce, the Dallas censor, turned down "Hypocrites" late in August. Jimmy Kelly promptly appealed to the board of censors. They viewed the show and upheld the censors decision. Nothing daunted, Kelly again persuaded the board to look the film over. On the second trial they passed it.

"I just used a little mental suggestion," Kelly says. "I did not argue with them. They all came around to my way of thinking and "Hypocrites" will show at the Jefferson Theatre right away."

Feature Showings at Liberty Theatres.

"Hearts of the World," the wonderful Griffith spectacle, opened big at Camp Gen. Sherman last week.

Special orders from Headquarters were issued at Camp Jackson to the manager of the Liberty Theatre to secure "To Hell with the Kaiser" for showing in the Liberty Theatre.

E. L. Hyman, Director of Pictures of the War Department, Commission on Training Camp Activities, announces that arrangements are being made to play in the Liberty theatres, "The Prussian Cur," "Why America Will Win," and "Crash through to Berlin."

"The Beast of Berlin" played three successful days at Camp Devens last week with Marguerite Clark in "Rich Man, Poor Man" to follow.

The Picture Division is anxious to have all film concerns, who wish to render patriotic service, notify E. L. Hyman, 1520 Broadway, New York.

Send In Your Ideas on Promotion.

If you have evolved an idea in lobby display that works out with benefit to your box office; if you have thought out a new "kink" in presenting a picture; if you have "put across" a feature by any means unusual or distinctive, pass it along and give your fellow-showmen the benefit. In return for your ideas you will get some from the "other fellow" if exhibitors will take the time and interest to communicate in this way through the columns of the World.

Serial Star Visits Exhibitors.

Marguerite Snow, attractive star of "The Eagle's Eye," is making a unique motor tour, as guest of Marcus Loew. She is travelling alone in her motor car through New England, visiting in person a number of theatres playing her serial, making stops at the larger cities.

Miss Snow's stop at Loew's Bijou Theatre, Fall River, resulted in practically the whole town turning out at noon on the day of her arrival, when the Mayor called a mass meeting on the steps of the City Hall. Two bands helped to greet the serial star, and the meeting was turned into a thrift stamp drive which netted several thousand dollars in cash sales.

She was scheduled to remain in Fall River only one day, but so many people were unable to get into the theatre that she consented to remain another day. Miss Snow's trip will take her from New York almost to the Canadian border. She is an enthusiastic motorist, and long journeys between cities hold no terrors for her.

Burton Rice's Trade-Mark Art Work.

Rialto De Luxe Productions is featuring its attractive new trade-mark. The design is from the facile brush of Burton Rice, whose striking posters for the first Rialto release, Grace Valentine in "The Unchastened Woman," created no end of comment in moving picture circles.

It is the intention of the company, as explained by a Rialto Productions official, to express in this mark the high class and artistic excellence of releases put out under the Rialto brand. At the studio experiments are now being made for the preparation of a trailer, an animated Venetian scene, which will dissolve into the Rialto bridge scene shown as a silhouette in the conventionalized trademark.

"Wives of Men" Keeps Open House.

By special arrangement with the Mayor's Committee, the Pioneer Film Corporation will act as host four nights of this week, at the Casino Theatre, New York, to the boys in uniform, our Allied visitors, and the Red Cross. The attraction at the Casino is "Wives of Men" with Florence Reed, a dramatic epic that has received excellent press notices. Tuesday night was given over to the army, Wednesday night to the navy; our Allied visitors will be entertained Thursday night, and Friday night has been allotted to the Red Cross.

Courtesy Has Cash Value.

Courtesy is something that is taught in childhood, but, like other childhood lessons, is not always learned. Courtesy is a good thing to have for itself alone. But it has an added value. It means actual dollars and cents.

Will Make Eastern Liberty Loan Tour.

WILLIAM S. HART expects to leave Los Angeles for the East on September 20, when he will begin a tour of Eastern cities that will take in Washington, Philadelphia, New York and Boston, in behalf of the Fourth Liberty Loan. Mr. Hart has been specially requested by Secretary McAdoo to make the tour. Hart's new picture for Artcraft, "Border Wireless," which will be released about the time the Loan campaign is launched, has a patriotic theme that is expected to rouse the enthusiasm of all Americans.

Sherman Back from East.

Harry Sherman, of the Sherman Productions, has returned from New York, where he had gone to dispose of the completed Dustin Farnum production, "The Light of Western Stars." The film was sold to the United Picture Theatres of America, and Mr. Sherman made arrangements to supply this organization with six pictures annually from Dustin Farnum. The second of these features is now in preparation, and locations are being settled upon in the forest and lumber camp sections of the West.

Wales Is Little Mary's Manager.

Wellington E. Wales, for nearly four years comptroller at the Lasky studio, has been engaged as Mary Pickford's manager.

Film Actress Dead.

Lillian Peacock, known in private life as Lillian M. Webb, died at the home of her parents in Los Angeles, on August 18, after six months' illness. Two years ago Miss Peacock fell when leaping from one running automobile to another during the filming of a comedy, and was injured internally. She recovered and again took up picture work, but early in the present year she became incapacitated on account of the old injuries. Miss Peacock was twenty-eight years old, and came to Los Angeles eleven years ago with her parents from Pennsylvania. Her picture career began when she was nineteen, and she worked at Universal City, with the Bosworth and the Pathe companies at different times. The body was laid at rest in Hollywood Cemetery.

States Rights Film Man Dies.

Harry Jacobs, who has been handling states rights features in the West, was found unconscious in front of a confectionary store on Fifth street, early in the morning of August 19, and was taken to the Los Angeles Receiving Hospital, where a pulmotor was used in an effort to revive him, but he died without regaining consciousness. Papers found on him gave evidence of the fact that he was a film salesman.

Theatre Pronounced Safe.

The California Theatre, being erected by the Miller Amusement Company, at Eighth and Main streets, has been pronounced safe by the building department of Los Angeles, upon the testing of the balcony with sacks of cement. The balcony, which is built on the cantilever system, withstood the strain of 500 pounds for each square foot, or approximately ten times the weight of all the people who could at any time occupy the space.

Cheering Godspeed for Mechanics.

A service-flag vaudeville entertainment was given to the "Fighting Mechanics," who have just completed their course of training at the State Normal School by a number of film stars at the Normal Auditorium on August 21. The show was a sort of "Cheer-up" affair to send the boys away with a smile.

Gladys Brockwell appeared in the Willard Mack sketch, "Kick In." William Farnum recited "The Prophecy." Theodore Roberts gave a dramatic reading entitled "War." Mary Pickford and Sessue Hayakawa made short addresses. Billy Mason and his wife, Alice Forrest, presented a typical vaudeville song act. The Denishawn dancers appeared in special dances for the occasion and Charles Parrott in a laughable monologue.

The visitors will watch the famous blind girl work in her picture.

New York Photoplaywright Here.

Stone has finished three pictures for the Famous Players-Lasky company during the vacation months from his stage work, and he promises to come back at some future time and make more pictures. Douglas Fairbanks and several of the cowboy members of his company saw Stone off at the train.

Labor Day Picnic for Atmosphere.

A big Labor Day picnic, to be held at the Selig Zoo, is being considered as a location for feature films by no less than three producing companies who have asked permission from the authorities to film scenes on Labor Day when the crowd will be greatest. The Universal Animated Weekly have also made arrangements to film the picnic for the News Film. Fifteen thousand persons are expected to attend the celebration.

Louise Lovely, former Universal star, will be William Farnum's leading woman in "The Man of Power," now in the making at the Fox plant.

Little Thrills of the Week

DOROTHY DALTON had a chance to be the central figure in a romance of real life last week. A tall, stout, and somewhat bald person who said his name was John F. Carroll, of New York, called at the Ince studio armed with a photograph of the star and a taxi cab and insisted upon Miss Dalton's staging an elopment scene with him.

Miss Dalton was very busy at the time, and as she is not in the habit of being kidnapped by gentlemen to whom she has not been introduced she politely but firmly refused. Mr. Carroll was placed in the hands of the police and is being held in the psychopathic ward at the County Hospital and suspected of harboring a large hive of bees in his bonnet.

The week's most important rumor linked the names of Charles Chaplin and Mildred Harris together in the golden claims of romance, and the week's most important denials came from the two above mentioned persons, each of whom said: "There isn't a word of truth in it."

Tom Walsh, former engaging director at the Ince plant, received the news last week that he has inherited a hundred-and-fifty-thousand-dollar estate in Australia, and as he is named one of the executors he will sail for the antipodes next week. We'd go to Australia for that much money any time.

Bennie Zeidman was press-agenting himself.

"I've never had anything like a serious mishap since I've owned my car—maybe a little skidding, maybe a bent fender now and then—just bevo accident, nothing more than that."

The very next day he tried to butt a twelve year old palm tree, from the spot it had occupied on Hollywood Boulevard for thirteen long years—and said car is still laid up for repairs!

SAW FIRST ALLIES AT VLADIVOSTOCK

George Ercole, Pathe War Photographer and Twice Wounded, Has Cranked on Many Fronts

THROUGH the enterprise of George Ercole, the famous war photographer of Pathe Freres in Paris, Hearst-Pathe News No. 68 exhibits pictures of the landing of the Allied troops in Vladivostock. M. Ercole will be remembered as the cameraman who secured some two years ago the pictures of the bombardment by the Russian fleet of the Turkish coast and the sinking of a number of Turkish vessels.

Among the scenes shown are Japanese sailors guarding the French consulate; American soldiers, the Belgian mission, etc. It is interesting to note that after he had secured his pictures M. Ercole was arrested and only obtained his freedom with difficulty.

"Mr. Ercole speaks as one having authority and not as the scribes," says the Shanghai Times, of May 28, "for he has been engaged in war cinematography since 1914. His business connections are with Pathe Freres, who sent him to Belgium when the war began, and he was at Mons when the Old Contemptibles made their great stand. In those days Kitchener was the man at the wheel and he thought the proper place for war correspondents and all their tribe was anywhere but the front. One day a British major strolled up to Mr. Ercole and told him that if he did not make himself scarce he would be shot. They did not want films then, and none of the Belgian pictures saw the light. Other ideas prevailed in St. Petersburg—as it was then—and when the Russian Government asked Pathe Freres for a good cinematograph operator they despatched Mr. Ercole. They knew that he knew his business, and as for the other qualification it seemed to be covered by his parentage which was half Irish and half French. So presently Mr. Ercole reported at the Russian capital and found that the advantages of publicity were better understood than at Whitehall. He had a special coach provided on the railways and carried passes which permitted him to go anywhere.

Wounded at Tarnow.

"Mr. Ercole was first sent down to Przemysl, and during the siege he filmed war in many aspects. Then the steam roller rolled forward to Tarnow, when it was almost within sight of Germany, and this was the high water mark of the advance. He was wounded here as the result of an explosion of a 42-centimetre shell which dropped a piece of a railway station on his shoulder, and the Czar recognized his forgetfulness to be afraid by decorating him with the Cross of St. George. A second wound was sustained at Vladova during the great retreat which ended at Brest-Litovsk, but there were many experiences between.

"He was commissioned to join the Black Sea fleet and he filmed the bombardment of the Bosphor Forts. Through their telescopes the Turks might have seen the remarkable sight of a short energetic man with a camera marching about the steel deck, the only living figure to be seen on the warship. But the Turkish gunnery was poor and Ercole did not feel specially uncomfortable.

"Another adventure of great interest was his march with the army of the Caucasus to Trezibond. He was the first Englishman to enter that city in war, and one of the first small group who went in after the city had fallen. A picture shows the two notables of Trebizond who came out to welcome their deliverers. The priest carries a cross for protection.

"The Russians may do what they like," said Mr. Ercole, "but I shall never forget how splendid they were in the first years of the war. They have gone silly and mad, but the first Russian soldiers were great men. I still believe in the Russian soldier."

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Los Angeles Correspondent Personally Conducts Our Readers Through the West Coast Studios

By Giebler

THIS, ladies and gentlemen, is the Thomas H. Ince studio. The fact that this plant was erected in the early days accounts for its being down here on Georgia and Girard streets, near the seething marts of the city, instead of out in the bucolic bailiwick of Hollywood.

The long row of luxurious limousines and other automobiles that line the curb in front of the studio belong to the players and directors employed here. Everyone connected with this studio in any capacity whatever rides to and from work in cars. Only the machines of players earning salaries in the neighborhood of one hundred bones a week are seen standing outside in the street, however.

The cars used by other players are kept in sheds, which you can see by looking across the roofs of the studio buildings to the right. Note the generous size of the vehicles. Each one is painted a beautiful golden yellow in color, and all use electricity as a motive power. Those who ride in them are never annoyed by engine trouble, blow-outs, or the traffic cops.

It is very fortunate that the street car people have their car barns next door to the studio, and it's very handy for the players who do not own automobiles and do not like to walk.

The people you see leaving the offices of the studio are the players who are faring forth to the wilds of cafetaria-land in search of their noonday cakes.

The three men who just passed were part of the herd of tame writers who are kept here.

The one with the cap at the rakish angle is R. Cecil Smith; the other who wears his headgear in a more dignified manner is C. Gardner Sullivan, the highest-priced script writer in the movie industry. The one wearing the panama hat and looking at his wrist watch in an accusing manner is J. G. Hawks.

Following hard on the heels of these scribes are two noted villains of the screen. The one in the lead is Milton Ross; his partner in screen crimes is Donald MacDonald; and stalking these two scroundels is that diabolical deviser of dastardly deeds, Robert McKim, the dean of all friends of the films.

The little lady near the big automobile is Doris Lee, and the other girl approaching from the door is Enid Bennett. The young chap is Al Ray, a cousin to the celebrated Charles. Yes, Lady, we shall see Charlie Ray very shortly.

The two ladies who came out and walked off in opposite directions were Gertrude Claire and Lydia Knott, and the man getting into the car at the end of the row is Jack Holt. Talking to him is William Conklin and the large party near the curb is Charles French. The other two men walking east are John Lockney and Thomas Guise, well known character men.

Yes, Lady, that was Henry B. Walthall. A great many people recognize him from seeing him in "The Birth of a Nation."

We will now pass into the lot. The man seated at the desk in the office to the right is Thomas H. Ince, one of the important figures in the film world.

Mr. Ince began his theatrical activities at an early period in life. When only thirteen years of age he was under the management of Daniel Frohman, playing the part of office boy and official stamp licker in Dan's New York office.

The sweeping success Ince made in this Broadway engagement inspired him to further efforts. He entered vaudeville, and was known as a "bill-topper," if I may quote our English friends, on the best circuit for a number of years.

When the pictures came along Mr. Ince was one of the few men of brains, artistic ability and vision to see their possibilities. He entered the game and his record has been one of steady progress.

If ever an authentic history of the movies be written, the name of Thomas H. Ince will be set down as one of the seven prophets of the pictures.

The two persons who passed with hungry expressions on their faces were, respectively, Fred Niblo, who directs Enid Bennett, and Julian Josephson, a scenario writer who learned the art of dramatic construction from reading the compositions of the pupils of a school where he was once a teacher.

The gentleman standing near the door of the little office is Director Jerome

Charles Ray.

Storm. Near him, looking at the dog with the ball in its mouth, is Thurston Hall. The other part of the triangular audience is Irving Willetts, who directs special productions for Mr. Ince.

Coming down the walk from the south your eyes may be gladdened by the sight of another scenario writer, in the person of John Lynch, and following immediately behind him is Director R. William Neill.

On this stage Victor Schertzinger is putting Dorothy Dalton, whom you see attired in the humble but fetching bungalow apron, and Edward Coxen through the paces of a picture play. The child is Frankie Lee, one of the cleverest kids in the pictures.

And now, as we are about to leave this interesting and fascinating place, after having gazed on the faces and forms of some of the best known people of the screen, we offer, as a closing attraction, Charles Ray, whom you see standing at the door of his dressing room attired in a bath robe and his best unconventional manner.

Mr. Ray is removing the grease paint from his countenance preparatory to seeking food to stay the ravening hunger that agitates his frame.

New York Exhibitors Will Have Headquarters

ON the afternoon of Wednesday, August 28, representatives of the three exhibitors' leagues of New York City met at the offices of the United Pictures Company to decide upon some plan to meet the operators scale of wages. After discussing the matter it was decided to leave the question to the individuals of the league to handle as best they could, according to circumstances governing them.

At Wurlitzer Hall on Thursday, August 29, a meeting of the Manhattan Local was called for 2 p. m. There were sixteen members present. The first subject of discussion was the securing of a permanent headquarters for the league. It was decided to lease the second floor of No. 727 Seventh avenue, next to the Godfrey Building, for a term of two or three years. The floor is ample to afford space for a pool table and different committee rooms, as well as a large meeting room.

President John Manhiemer and Treasurer Charles Steiner were authorized to complete the lease. Wm. Helkermeier and Mr. Hartjen were appointed a committee of two to attend to the furnishings and decorations. It is anticipated that the rooms will be ready for occupancy by September the 15th.

The discussion of the operator's wage scale was broached, but it was decided to leave this subject to an open discussion at the new headquarters, which will be opened with a special meeting and a luncheon. The ten per cent. tax on all film rentals to be placed by the Government was spoken of in a general way. It was dismissed when someone said:

"That's all settled, and we are up against it good and proper, Uncle Sam has told us what to do."

Vera Royer in Barrymore Company.

Vera Royer has been engaged by Herbert Blache as an additional member of Ethel Barrymore's Metro company producing "Lady Frederick," a picturization by June Mathis and Katharine Kavanaugh of the W. Somerset Maugham drama in which Miss Barrymore appeared on Broadway.

Miss Royer, who was last seen in a Metro picture in the part of Clara Oakes, the artist, in "A Man's World," with Emily Stevens, will play a French maid in the Barrymore production.

Hayakawa Preparing for No. 4.

The Hayakawa company is making preparations for its fourth picture. The finishing touches are being put upon the third production, "Bonds of Honor," and Hayakawa and Director Worthington expect to complete the final scenes in a few days.

One of the beautiful locations to be used by the Hayakawans in the next picture will be Bear Valley, in the San Bernadino Mountains, where the company will be busy for ten days or two weeks.

SEATTLE, QUEEN CITY OF NORTHWEST

Tom North, Pathe Western District Manager, Gives Interesting Interview on War Conditions

TOM NORTH, Pathe's district manager in western territory, made a short stopover in Chicago Tuesday, August 27, on his trip to New York from Seattle. During a hurried interview Mr. North informed me he had spent eight weeks in Seattle, where he had built up an entire new office force, and changed the quarters from the old Central office to the New Pathe building, at 2113 Third avenue. This structure is one-story high, built of brick and concrete, with a frontage of 70 feet on Third avenue, and running back to the alley for a depth of 120 feet. It is solely occupied by the Pathe force.

Mr. North had to scurry around for the members of his new staff. The manager, L. O. Lukan, was secured from the Post-Intelligencer, where he held the position of advertising manager. The assistant manager, Ashley McRae, was also taken from another line of business, and the new shipping clerk, Mr. Lackaye, was induced to give up the management of the Green Lake Theatre (which he owns) to his wife and daughter.

Pathe's Seattle office now attends to the bookings for Washington, Oregon and Alaska. Mr. North, however, established a sub-office in Portland, in the Liberty building, and installed as manager A. J. Sperry, who at one time managed the Pathe Portland office. This sub-office will attend to the bookings in Portland and southern Oregon. A. Clayton, formerly in the poster mounting business, was apointed salesman for the sub-office. The difficulties encountered in establishing new office staffs during the present war times are illustrated by Mr. North's experience.

Seattle, with a population of 375,000, has fifty-two high-class theatres, every one of which is "doing tremendous business," as Mr. North expresses it. A city ordinance has been passed which restricts picture theatres to the number stated.

"Money is doubly plentiful in Seattle just now," Mr. North says. "What with the extensive building of ships now carried on, the establishment of Camp Grant about 45 miles away, the Bremerton navy yard across the Sound, the training school near Washington University, where from 5,000, to 10,000 Jackies are being trained constantly, Seattle is enjoying the high tide of prosperity."

The average admission to moving picture theatres in the city is 25 cents, and they are crowded all the time. Every house is packed, no matter what films are run. As the consequence film rentals are lower in Seattle than in any other part of the country. Assuredly this is a serious condition, especially now when producers are struggling to make both ends meet. Theatre owners must remember that without pictures their expensive buildings would be valueless, in most cases.

There is a great dearth of unskilled laborers in Seattle at present. It was found out, a short time ago, that valuable skilled workers were engaged in labor that required little or no skill. The great loss resulting did not escape the notice of the Seattle Chamber of Commerce. A call was immediately made by the members for professional men, including lawyers, physicians, dentists, etc., to volunteer to do this common work. The call was answered immediately, and these professional men are working in eight-hour shifts, for the entire twenty-four hours every day. This has released the skilled laborers who have come to the assistance of the Government, in hurrying essential work to the utmost.

Beginning the week of September 2 the managers of film exchanges in Seattle will take their turn at these eight-hour shifts, every day in the week, from 4 o'clock p. m. until midnight. This action was brought about by Mr. Korpel, Seatle manager of the World Film Corporation, who is also president of the Film Exchange Board of Trade, of Seattle.

Seatle has always been American to the core, and the old spirit flames more fervently than ever. She is more than ever worthy of the proud title, Queen City of the Northwest.

Martin Joins Quartermaster Corps.

Fred R. Martin, at one time a member of the Chicago business staff of the Moving Picture World, and later traveling salesman in succession for Metro, Fox and Triangle in the Middle West, and recently manager of the Omaha office of the General Film Company, writes as follows from Camp Dodge, Iowa, where he is attached to the quartermaster corps:

"Strange as it may seem to you, the writer has succeeded in getting into the service, and though very busy, as you may guess, I still find time to read the W. G. N. of the Motion Picture Industry, which all leads up to the main purpose of this letter, namely, last week's issue of the World which contains the list of all members of the glorious industry who have given their services to the most glorious of all causes. In that list the following have been omitted, and we shall all be most proud to be mentioned in the next list; for though our work at present is far from the paths of the Silent Art, we nevertheless like to feel that we are still of it. The following are all at Camp Dodge:

"Private Stanley J. Mayer, formerly road man for Paramount, in Iowa, later manager Yale Photoplay Company, Des Moines, and now attached to the quartermaster corps.

"Private Fred R. Martin, formerly of the Moving Picture World staff, Chicago office, later road man for Fox, Metro and Triangle, later manager General Film Co., Omaha, Neb. Now attached to quartermaster corps.

"Private Henry J. Leggo, formerly manager Majestic Theatre, Fort Dodge, Iowa. Now attached to quartermaster corps.

"Private Ray Coffin, former manager theatre at Manson, Iowa, later comedy scenario staff, Fox Film Corporation western studios. Now attached to depot brigade.

"Private Wilbur Ingledue, former manager Strand Theatre, Marshaltown, Iowa. Now attached to Medical Detachment, 351st Infantry, 88th division, A. E. F. The latter was the last division to leave here.

"This is some camp and a wonderful life. I am most happy to be in the game and doing something, and hope my time will come soon to 'Go Over.'"

Fred for many years was obliged to walk with a crutch, owing to injuries received in a football game. He is still compelled to wear a built-up shoe and a cane. For six months he has been trying to get into military service and finally succeeded in joining the quartermasters' department of the national army.

Mr. Martin has always been a plucky boy, who fought his physical disadvantage without let-up. After leaving the World he took up the work of traveling salesman in the business, on the suggestion of the writer. That he "made good" is well shown by his record.

The Chicago office force is proud of Fred and esteems him for his pluck and patriotism. Our best wishes are with him.

Patriotic Affair at Rothacker Plant.

The girl employees of the Rothacker plant gave a bunko card party and studio dance Friday evening, August 23, under the auspices of the Illinois State Council of Defense in aid of the Red Cross. The affair was held in the Rothacker studio, which was handsomely decorated for the occasion by the company. The admission tickets, which were sold by the employees, were donated by a printer in the neighborhood. The sum realized from the sale of tickets was quite substantial and was turned over to the proper authorities. The girl employees, who originated the plan and conducted the arrangements, have been highly complimented by the officials of the Illinois State Council of Defense.

"His Birthright" a Big Success.

President Sheldon, of Mutual, was seen one day last week and expressed himself as being highly pleased with the great success of "His Birthright,"

Sessue Hayakawa's first Mutual feature, at the Ziegfield, where it has been showing for the week beginning Sunday, August 25. Reports which have come in to the office from all the leading cities throughout the country show that the first run of the picture has been highly satisfactory.

George Blair Visits Chicago Trade.

George Blair, of the cine department of the Eastman Kodak Company, spent a few days in the city last week visiting the trade. He returned to Rochester August 24.

I. L. Lesserman on Fishing Trip.

I. L. Lesserman, general manager of Universal's Chicago office, left with members of his family last week for a few days outing at Oshkosh, Wis. Mr. Lesserman will spend his time in fishing. Before leaving he startled his colleagues by appearing in the office without his old-time whiskers. His friends say he looks so young now that he will bear watching.

Paramount's Chicago Manager Pleased.

F. M. Brockell, manager of the Chicago office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, told me last week that business is going very nicely at present. Contracts for next season's output have now been closed with all the leading houses in Chicago, and this applies to all the leading cities in the country.

Small Theatre Contrives to Get By.

John Voumvakis, owner of the Eighteenth Street Theatre, at 1343 West Eighteenth street, informs me he is doing quite a fair business with his house of 275 seats. The Thalia, which seats over a thousand people, is only half a block away, but notwithstanding this handicap Mr. Voumvakis manages to operate his house at a profit. His programs are selected on the open booking plan and are comprised of the Fox, Paramount, Select, Paralta, World, Metro and the Pathe product. A service of about eight or ten weeks old is used.

Oak Park Managers Their Own Censors.

Calvin H. Hill, president of the village board at Oak Park, ruled at a meeting held last week, during which protest was made against the ordinance providing for two moving picture censors, that the managers will be held responsible for censoring their own pictures until a new ordinance is passed. As stated in my Chicago letter of last week, the managers said that they could not afford to pay $2 a day per theatre, for the censoring of pictures and that they would be obliged to close down if the existing ordinance were enforced.

THREE BROADWAY SHOWINGS.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation scored a triple hit on Broadway the past week at the Rivoli, Strand and Rialto, with three big Paramount and Artcraft productions. All three pictures, "The Hun Within," "Till I Come Back to You" and "On the Quiet," met with exceptional favor of both press and public, as evidenced by the reviews accorded them by the New York critics and the crowded houses. Chet Withey is responsible for two of the current Broadway successes and Cecil B. DeMille directed "Till I Come Back to You."

SCHADE PLAYS UP THE "CRUSADERS"

Sandusky Manager Builds Palace for Kaiser, Which Is Then Attacked by Cut-Out Soldiers

REAL novelty marked the exploitation that Manager George J. Schade gave "Pershing's Crusaders" when the big Government film recently played the Schade Theatre at Sandusky, Ohio. Two weeks prior to the opening a lively newspaper and publicity campaign was started in the local press beginning with two-column 2-inch ads and finishing with four-column 12-inch display.

The marquee of the theatre was converted into a striking pictorial arrangement by the exercise of considerable ingenuity, as follows:

The twenty-four sheets furnished by the First National Exhibitor's Circuit were cut out, backed up, and arranged on either side of the marquee just above the sidewalk. A replica of the German imperial palace was then erected on top of the marquee with the legend "To Hell with the Kaiser" displayed on three sides of the imperial lodging house with American flags on top of both turrets. Some cedar trees were placed about the miniature castle, and also used as a decorative border about the front and sides of the marquee.

Below on the sidewalk entanglements of small green trees were built up with mannikins dressed in tin helmets peering over the top. Large American flags were draped so as to furnish a background for the cut-off figures of Pershing and his troops, who seemed to be marching directly upon the Kaiser's palace.

At night the transparent windows in the place were illuminated. There were also lights at the entrance to the palace, and the entire outside was illuminated by means of an indirect lighting system.

The result created no end of comment and assisted Manager Schade in packing his house to the doors at every performance. The last day of the showing, people were lined up for over two hours waiting to buy tickets. Two morning matinees were also given for children.

To the casual observer it might appear that the decorations for the Schade Theatre ran into considerable expense, but such was really not the case. The entire lay-out was made of corrugated board, stiffened up with two-inch strips. The 24-sheet cut-outs were covered with a cheap grade of varnish, so they would stand the weather. The Kaiser's palace was also made of corrugated paperboard and painted with barn paint. As a matter of fact the whole display did not cost as much as is ordinarily thrown away by many exhibitors in injudicious newspaper advertising.

How the Schade Theatre Decorated for "Pershing's Crusaders."

Baker Reorganizes Metro's Coast Script Department

GEORGE D. BAKER, manager of productions, has augmented and reorganized the scenario department at Metro's West Coast studio in Hollywood. Baker is convinced that the keystone of successful motion picture production is embodied in the choice of the story and its preparation for the screen in the form of a continuity, carefully embellished by experienced scenario writers.

To that end, the manager of production recently engaged the services of Tom J. Geraghty, successful and widely known author of motion picture successes for a score of stars, and Albert Kenyon, brother of Charles Kenyon.

Baker himself is in direct supervision of the work of the reorganized department. He is a prolific writer as well as a director. Since assuming his duties, some five months ago, he has written no less than six scenarios and collaborated on six others.

With the acquisition of Geraghty and Kenyon, Metro's West Coast scenario department has been placed on a firm footing. Baker also has engaged two readers who supplement the reading done by himself, his assistant Charles Hundt, and the Metro Reorganizes and Enlarges West Coast Scenario Department, etc., continuity writers. The readers are Lillian Ducey and Adeline Alvord.

BALSDON SHOWS CHAPLIN TO NATIVES

In Home Letter Film Man Tells Interesting Experiences Exhibiting Back of the Lines

SOME months ago George Balsdon, exchange manager for the Vitagraph Company, signed up to conduct picture shows for the Y. M. C. A. back of the lines in France. Writing under date of June 30 to his family from somewhere in France, he tells a very interesting story of his work. Omitting the purely personal matter contained in the letter, our readers are given therein a most vivid account of what it means to conduct a traveling picture show in the war zone:

"Just got back from a fourteen days' trip out in field. I was dog tired, as I covered around 190 miles that day in my circus wagon. I had some really new experience this trip. Started out from Paris in the rain, and we had rain for three days.

"Visited several camps up front and had the pleasure of looking at the Boche trenches and their wire entanglements, but had to keep a close watch for enemy planes. It was a curious feeling that came over me as I stood looking out over 'No Man's Land' and picturing in my mind the many tragedies and battles that had taken place there and wondering what was coming next. We had dinner (my assistant and I) with our boys. It was 'bean' day, and one of the boys had gotten some lettuce and radishes somewhere. My, how good that feed tasted! The officer in charge warned us to keep a sharp lookout for enemy planes while driving across open space, on account of something that had happened just previous.

When Blowouts Alarm.

"We finally drove out into an open plain where there was hardly a tree for five miles, and I was just thinking that if by chance a Boche airman came that way I'd sell my chance of getting out for a quarter. Just then there was a loud explosion and we both thought 'caught, by Heck!' when we felt a bumping and discovered the bomb was only a blowout in a back shoe, and as they are leather covered the blowout made a loud report. We looked at each other and then the humorous side of it appealed to us and Ha! Ha-ed! for all we were worth, and then gave a very correct imitation of two men fixing a shoe in a hurry.

"We stopped at a large rest camp that night, and as we arrived after taps had sounded we rolled up in our blankets in the car and was awakened by hearing a bugle call and then the band marching up and down playing a reveille march and then another bugle call—reveille—to get up. I washed up and went to breakfast with the boys. They had a cook who was from Maine, who has a wife and eight children at home, but who felt he owed it to 'Uncle Sam' to 'do his bit.' We chatted with him and then he gave me the treat of my stay here so far—a stack of pancakes with real syrup. Gee! it was great. But what's the use? It's only a pleasant memory now.

A Rare Experience, This.

"Passing through a tiny farm village the other night about 8:30, we were pulling a heavy trailer loaded with a Delco gas electric generator, and with our own car loaded with moving picture apparatus. We got a puncture and the villagers all turned out to see if they could help us, and were very kind in their offers of assistance, but we hooked up a wire to our batteries and fixed the puncture, and being tired after a long journey we decided to stay there over night. Most of them had never seen a motion picture, so we decided to give them a treat in return for their kindness to us. We set up a machine in a big barn and while doing so every one went out and hunted up 'ma' and 'pa,' and I believe we had 90 per cent. of the villagers there. I never saw such an enthusiastic audience, although it was some 'smelly' place and had not been cleaned for a week, yet they stood around and sat in mangers and hayracks. We happened to have a Charlie Chaplin reel, then they went wild; such laughter! It was good to hear, as many who were there had great sorrow from loss of son, husband, or father (as their black clothes testified), and a good laugh was a magic tonic to them. It was an event to them, and we have passed through the village since then and they recognized the car, as we are the 'Bon Americains.' We had dinner with a wealthy farmer, and on the night we stayed there I wish you could have seen the room I slept in. The place was over 200 years old. The bed was a massive affair which I had to climb up to—a stone floor and great oak beams that would last forever. And the kitchen, a great big French stove, rows of big copper pots that had been handed down from generation to generation, with everything made so solid as to last, and so spotlessly clean, with a sanded stone floor. A warm welcome awaits me at any time I go through that village. I told them of the Woolworth building and other wonders of America. (Yes, I speak French enough to be understandable now.)

"The picture I enclose shows my traveling movie outfit. McCord is the one at the steering wheel, Chico MacDonald is on the trailer. We generate our own electricity with the engine on the trailer. The car contains all kinds of movie apparatus, and my home. Sometimes I have an assistant and sometimes I go it alone. We can set up and give a show on half an hour's notice.

"It's a great life and I look and feel like a blacksmith. Please note the wrinkles in front of my tunic caused by the dissimilation of the balcony I used to carry there."

Reynolds Talks of Mix, Range and Screen Cowboy

THAT a tremendous lot of water has passed over the motion picture dam since the early days of the art is a bromide often uttered. But like many bromides it is true; and in no phase of motion picture art is it truer than in the so-called Western play.

Time was when the photofan was satisfied with galloping horses, wild chases over mountains and down cliffs and the final close-up of the large-eyed hero getting a half-Nelson on the equally large-eyed heroine. That sort of Western picture went big during its day; but its day has passed. Now the wise spectator demands realism.

As an instance of the development of the Western play, Lynn Reynolds, who directs Tom Mix, calls attention to the play which Mix and his company are now filming at Prescott, Ariz. In this picture, which has the tentative title of "The Two-Gun Man," Reynolds has infused in a logical manner the actual handling of cattle by Mix and others, such as would be expected only in rodeo pictures. This realism includes roping, branding, cutting herds and the spectacular and exceedingly dangerous stunt of bulldogging steers, which is considered the acme of cowboy daring.

"Through the final two reels of this picture," says Mr. Reynolds, "there is a prairie fire as a background for stampede and other fast action. In these scenes Tom Mix is shown riding through a herd of stampeding cattle and bulldogging the leader of the herd so that the steer falls and divides the stampede, thus saving Jane Novak, who is lying in the foreground, from being trampled to death.

"This real Western life could be played only by Tom Mix. Any leading man or star can be a motion picture cowboy of a sort, but while we ourselves have fifty of the best genuine cowboys working for us at present, not one of them can duplicate more than a few of the dozens of stunts performed by Tom.

"It took the showmanship of Mr. Fox, however, to recognize that with it all he had dramatic ability and screen personality sufficient to warrant starring him in pictures. With stories, cast and direction, he is certain to go to the front, not as an imitator of other athletic stars, but in a distinctive field of his own."

Madison Square Garden Exposition Will Be War Exhibit of the Motion Picture Industry

LAST week's announcement in the Moving Picture World that the motion picture exposition would be held in Madison Square Garden instead of the Grand Centrel Palace has revived interest in that event to a considerable degree. President William A. Brady of the N. A. M. P. I. promises the largest and finest trade exhibit that has ever been made in New York. Many features of interest have been arranged for and the committees are already at work. One of the features will be a collection of old projections and posters consisting of examples of the earliest designs used by the picture makers. A committee consisting of Sam Spedon, chairman; William Wright of the Kalem Company; Will C. Smith of Nicholas Power, Inc.; Paul Gulick of the Universal, and A. E. Smith of the Vitagraph Company, are combing the country for specimens.

In addition to the companies in the motion picture business, who naturally would subscribe for space, a large part of the main auditorium of the Garden will be taken up by the exhibits of the various administrative departments of the United States Government. For this reason this exposition will be in reality a war service exposition of the motion picture industry as every attempt will be made to show every detail of the work of the motion picture in the war and the importance it has in the winning of the war.

One of the largest exhibits in the whole exposition will be that of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information. The material for this exhibit consists of three carloads of war relics that have been captured from the Germans on the battlefield of France. There are two or three battle scarred aeroplanes and a wealth of other relics, all of which will have the greatest interest, not only to the general public but to those within the industry.

There will also be exhibits by the Army, the Navy, the Aircraft Board, the Fuel Administration and the Food Administration. The War Savings Stamps Committee has requested space and it is very probable that there will be exhibits from the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A. and other organizations closely allied with the war work of the Government.

"BANZAI" IS HAYAKAWA GIFT.

In exactly thirty hours after a request had been received by Sessue Hayakawa from the chairman of the Liberty Loan committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, for a film which would assist the flotation of the Fourth Liberty Loan, the film was made, and six hours later it had been cut, titled and shipped to Washington.

When the request for this propaganda film reached the Japanese star he was engaged upon the final scenes of his current production, the third made by his own company—the Haworth Pictures Corporation for release by Mutual. Hayakawa, who has subscribed liberally to the three Liberty Loan issues which the Government has already made and who has campaigned enthusiastically in behalf of the bonds in each of the drives, gave orders immediately to cease all work on the picture, and calling the members of the company together informed them of the task which confronted them.

"It's an opportunity to do another bit to help win the war and we must get busy at once, because this film must be in Washington by August 25 and tonight is the 15th. Some time tomorrow we'll start the picture, which is to be made in 500 feet, and we'll keep at it until it is finished and out of the way," he said.

The story, which was prepared by Hayakawa himself, is unique. Hayakawa, who has the role of a colonel serving under the stars and stripes in France, gave it the Japanese title "Banzai," corresponding to "Hurrah" in English. It is replete with interesting action.

Hart Coming East to Hunt Big Money for Next Loan

WILLIAM S. HART, famous Artcraft star, has been requested to tour three important districts of the East in behalf of the Fourth Liberty Loan campaign. The request came from the three chairmen of New York, Boston and Philadelphia districts, through the Liberty Loan Committee. Mr. Hart immediately agreed to accede to the request early in October and will leave for the East the first of that month.

In the Third Liberty Loan drive, Bill Hart had the Coast states to cover and raised two million dollars in bond sales, besides subscribing $105,000 himself. This time he expects to beat that record considerably, owing to the more thickly populated territory he will have to cover, for, while the ground traveled will be less in extent, he will talk to from three to four times as many people.

Porto Rico Camp to Have Its Liberty Theatre, Too

San Juan, Porto Rico, August 17.

WITHIN ten days there will be a Liberty Theatre for the soldiers at Camp Las Casas in full operation. The theatre is now under construction and when completed will seat 3,100 people.

Alexander Goldman, manager in Porto Rico for the Universal Film Company, will be the manager of the Liberty Theatre. Mr. Goldman returned from the United States on the last ship after having gone to Washington to consult with W. Prentiss Sanger, director of training camp activities.

Mr. Goldman said that several weeks ago he learned that no provision had been made for the erection of a Liberty Theatre at Camp Las Casas. He communicated with Mr. Sanger and later went direct to Washington to consult with him. As a result of this visit an appropriation was made for the Liberty Theatre at Camp Las Casas and instructions were cabled to Major Seward, the constructing quartermaster in charge, to start the work in the theatre at once.

All sorts of entertainments will be given in the Liberty Theatre for the benefit of the soldiers. Manager Goldman said that, although he believes that moving pictures would make up the greater part of the program, every effort will be made to provide other form of amusements. Admittance to the theatre will be charged, and all of the proceeds will be accounted for in the fund for training camp activities. The theatre, he said, must be self-supporting, and if there should be any surplus it will be available for the soldiers to spend on other forms of amusement. All of the help at Liberty Theatre will be from among the soldiers. Manager Goldman will devote a large part of his time to the Liberty Theatre, but will also continue to represent the Universal Company in Porto Rico. HULL.

STOERMER'S NEW ENTERPRISE.

It is rumored that William Stoermer has resigned all associations with the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation, likewise W. K. Bielenberg, effective September 1, 1918. The American Standard Motion Picture Corporation offices have been moved to Chicago, where business will in future be conducted.

Mr. Stoermer remains in New York City, with offices at 130 West 46th street, and will in future devote himself to the William Stoermer Enterprises, of which he is president. He has several big productions on hand and will announce his plans in detail shortly.

Washington's Views for Universal.

A Universal cameraman took a thrilling airplane flight several days ago over Bolling Field, the aviation field at Washington. The films he obtained are part of a special campaign to help Uncle Sam get mechanics for the division of Military Aeronautics. Jack Cohen, director of the pictorial news departments of Universal, received in acknowledgement of this service, a letter from Colonel F. R. Kenney, of the aeronautics division, expressing hearty appreciation. The aviation films will be released in the Universal programme immediately.

LONDON AGENT PRESENTS EXPORT VIEWS

Lionel Phillips Claims Export Difficulties in America Offer Chance to British Producers

THE FOLLOWING article, which appeared in a recent issue of the London Kinematograph and Lantern Weekly, should prove of interest to all New York exporters:

Lionel Phillips, as exclusive agent for the foreign rights of some of our leading British producers, speaks with authority in dealing with the future of British films abroad. Significant, not to say sinister signs, are not wanting that we have arrived at a parting of the ways, and that New York is making a powerful bid to oust London and to become the world's film trade center.

"I am sorry to say," remarks Mr. Phillips, "that buyers for a large number of markets have recently migrated to America. One by one they have slowly left us. We are selling practically nothing to Japan, their principal buyer having gone to America. The Australian buyers are to-day buying nothing but topicals in this market. The African buyers recently bought everything here and to-day buy 80 per cent. of their films in America. The Scandinavian market has practically left this country, the leading buyers to-day buying in New York. South America has always been more or less a dead letter for us. India is now being carefully spoon-fed by the Americans, who have recently sent special representatives to that country and have placed brands en bloc. The business for British films in France and Italy (which also buys for Egypt and other Mediterranean shores) has never been brilliant, and as most of these countries have only limited powers of consumption, the never ending stream of American productions seems to be up against British films everywhere.

"To-day a magnificent opportunity is arising which we can and must make use of if British kinema productions are to make up the leeway of the past. The restrictions in the importation of American films are not only a question of transport difficulties (for the space taken up by the weekly import of American negatives could be filled by one packing case of 40 cubic feet), but there is a general tendency, owing to many contributary causes, of a curtailment of American importations and indeed of manufactures generally.

"Here, then," says Lionel Phillips, "is the British producers' chance on both sides of the Atlantic," and he calls for a combination and co-operation of united British efforts to enter into a vigorous campaign for the British film both at home and abroad. The sympathy of the entire civilized world is with British ideas and ideals, and although we may not as yet be able to beat the Americans in sumptuousness of production, owing to our hitherto lack of capital, conditions have vastly improved with the British film these latter days, as witness the activity of some recent British productions and the price paid therefor, amounting, in some cases, to four or five times the price obtainable for corresponding American productions in this market.

Although right in his facts our London friend is quite off the track in his conclusions. Some British films might be sold throughout the world, but it is doubtful whether they will ever offer any serious competition to the American article, much less take its place.

If Mr. Phillips really wishes to keep in touch with the world markets and maintain his position as an exporter of films on a large scale he should establish his headquarters in—New York.

OUR ACCESSORIES IN FOREIGN MARKETS

German Carbon "Out to Stay" Says Kaufman of Inter-Ocean Film Corp.

EUGENE H. KAUFMAN, head of the carbon and accessory department of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, and the man who introduced the Speer Carbon to the foreign markets formerly controlled by German carbon manufacturers, is firm in the belief that the American-made carbons are permanent factors in the foreign field.

Eugene H. Kaufman.

"They are no longer mere subjects for experiment and they distinctly are not war-time fill-ins. Our information is the direct testimony of foreign cinema men who have bought them. Their own letters to us tell the tale. The American-made Speer product has stood all tests. These foreign purchasers have settled down to permanent use of it. Many of them have made long-time contracts that they know must outlast the war. These contracts alone establish that the German made carbon is out, to stay out

"The figures on Speer foreign sale are little short of phenomenal. Recent items, for instance, are 100,000 sent to Australia, India 16,000, China 10,000 and Brazil 27,000. Of course the original chance to place them came through the elimination of enemy-made carbons by war conditions. But the market had to be held through sheer superiority of product. Certainly a year is long enough to tell you whether you have that. It was our Speer experience that impelled us to negotiate the recent contract for the foreign rights of the Fulco accessories. The world-market is waiting for good American goods and it wants them permanently."

Mr. Kaufman announced that the first offering of six Fulco specialties on the foreign market would be enlarged in the Fall to ten articles, because of the call for American products Inter-Ocean is convinced exists.

FOREIGN NEWS AND COMMENT.

The establishment of the Film Exporters of America, Inc., an association designed to safeguard the interests of the dealers doing business in films and supplies between New York and foreign markets, marks the official beginning of what might be termed the brokers' era in the export trade. How long it will last it would be rash to predict, but judging by the experience obtained in other commercial lines and by the trend of events in this particular field it may be safely granted that the heyday of the non-producing exporter will be reached during the last year of the war. With the coming of peace there will probably be a sharp decline in their activities.

It is the opinion of quite a few well-informed people that the non-producing brokers as such will cease to exist in New York and other moving picture centers on the present large scale one or two years after the resumption of normal conditions. Their independent organizations of to-day will either be swallowed by the producers, or the brokers themselves, if strong enough financially, will have to decide on any one of the following courses: turn producers, associate with or absorb the producing companies the output of which they are handling; start their own renting organization in the markets they are covering, associate with or absorb the clients they are at present supplying with film.

However, whatever the future may have in store for the flourishing merchants of the Film Exporters of America, Inc., they represent at this time a very powerful element that is opening and developing new and profitable fields for the industry in general.

Will "Hearts of the World" be exhibited in Latin America, or are we heading for a repetition of the "Intolerance" case? The scandal in the British trade and daily press caused by the peculiar booking methods adopted in connection with the Griffith war drama is still fresh and has left a very disageeable impression. There appears to be no doubt that this picture does not constitute a purely commercial transaction. The privileges granted and the financial assistance given to the producer seem to imply that it was made to be shown throughout the allied and neutral world, and to be shown now—the question of profit playing a secondary role.

If it is going to create the effects intended, and its value to the cause of the Allies reaped in full, copies of the picture should be on their way to every Latin American republic without a moment's delay.

The difficulties that on account of the war must be overcome when shipping films to foreign markets have also certain advantages, some of them of real importance. At the present time, for instance, it is practically impossible to ship films abroad that have not been obtained through the proper channels, and the legion of more or less unscrupulous dealers that made their headquarters in New York is rapidly disappearing. Needless to state, although many buyers, particularly from Latin America, were caught napping before the new rules went into effect, in most cases the victims had only themselves to blame, either because they were trying to purchase at prices at which pictures cannot be sold, or because they would not listen to the repeated advice of Cine-Mundial in the matter of sending money in advance to unknown people.

Sam E. Rork, general representative of the Haworth Pictures Corporation, announces that the rights to the Hayakawa pictures in the British Isles have been sold to J. K. Walker, of London, and the rights to Australia to the Williamson Company. Both deals include the entire eight productions which Hayakawa will make for the Haworth Corporation for release in this country by special arrangements and through the Mutual exchanges. Negotiations are now pending and nearly closed for the sale of the Hayakawa pictures in South America and Japan.

In the story published by the New York Times on the arrest of William C. Thompson and others implicated in the illicit film traffic between this country and Latin America, the reporter exposes the mysterious and threatening practice of changing the English for Spanish titles in this illuminating way:

"It was learned that when the films were shown in the southern countries the English captions were eliminated and captions in Spanish substituted. The authorities are investigating all the circumstances surrounding the changing of the captions."

The Co-operative Film Company of New York has just released "A Grain of Dust" and "Just a Woman" in Santiago, Chile, opening up with a week's run in the Teatro de la Comedia. José Traver & Co., their local managers, report that "Thais," "Dodging a Million" and "Polly of the Circus," the first three Goldwyn subjects to be released in Chile, have already been exhibited in all the large theatres of that territory.

Figures published in the South American trade papers show that "The Submarine Eye" made 2,400 pesos during its first exhibition in Iquique and 4,600 pesos in the two first exhibitions in Antofagasta. The picture has been one of the big successes of the year in Chile.

Ben Blumenthal, president of the Export & Import Film Company, announces the recent closing of a contract for all Metro productions for the next year for Brazil. With the signing of this contract this company has disposed of all the Metro output for the entire world with the exception of enemy countries.

The Houdini serial, which is being produced by the Rolfe Company, has created a great deal of interest in all foreign markets. The international rights to this production are controlled by the Export & Import Film Company.

WEST'S DOUBLE IN CENTRAL AMERICA

Unique Proposal to Advertise King-Bee Comedies in All Central American Republics

A MODEST request for $50 per week salary has been made to J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., from Central America. A letter explaining the proposal has just been received by Mr. Garrett from some unknown who wants to tour Central and South America for the well known foreign film house. The request is unique, as for that modest stipend the writer of the missive desires to be allowed to traverse the entire country on foot accompanied only by a pack mule.

It seems that he is the living double of Billy West, whose comedies are handled by the Brockliss firm in all foreign countries. Dressed as Billy West and with suitable placards decorating his trusty mule, the correspondent thinks that he can arouse such widespread interest in Billy West comedies in all centers of the Americas that all competitive comedians will be forever eliminated from the field.

He has enclosed a photograph of himself and said pack mule to verify his statement as to his resemblance. However, the familiar stiff hat of Billy has been supplanted by a huge sombrero, which we presume meets with the approbation of all things in general below the equator.

Say Toronto Operators Will Not Raise Scale

PRESIDENT DENTELBECK of the Toronto Moving Picture Operators' Union has issued a vigorous denial to the report published in several Toronto newspapers to the effect that the local operators had held a meeting to consider a demand for higher wages. The operators were reported to have met on Friday evening, August 23, but they did not do so at all. Their regular monthly meeting was scheduled for Sunday, September 1.

Mr. Dentelbeck declared that conditions in Toronto theatres were satisfactory on the whole. He believed that the operators could secure a raise if they went after it, but there was no intention to do so. The officials of the union have taken a very fairminded stand in the matter.

"We are looking to the future," said President Dentelbeck. "What we want is a living wage after the war. We are not getting as much, in proportion, as some other classes of labor, and we are not getting what we should when the high cost of living at present is considered. But we are not making any wage demands because we want the managers to treat us right after the war."

FARRAR TO MAKE LOAN FILM.

Geraldine Farrar has been invited by the United States Treasury Department to make a picture to stimulate interest in the Fourth Liberty Loan and the singer is meeting the emergency with her accustomed zest.

But recently returned from Wyoming where the entire production of "The Hell Cat," her second Goldwyn picture, was made, the diva found everything in readiness at the Goldywn stduios in Fort Lee for her next production. Orders had been given by Samuel Goldfish, however, that everything should be held in abeyance to the wishes of Geraldine Farrar and she chose, of course, to begin work at once on her Liberty Loan production.

Conceived by herself and Reginald Barker, her director, the picture promises to be strikingly original and will present Geraldine Farrar to her admirers in her most gracious guise. While she prefers not to make known the nature of the undertaking until it is finished, Geraldine Farrar's reputation for sincere effort and her well known contributions to patriotic service in the past are enough to guarantee something out of the ordinary.

FACTS AND COMMENTS

JUST a few words about ourselves. It is very seldom that we do any boasting or self boosting, but right now we think it is proper to call your attention to some of the points of excellence in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD which you may have overlooked or just taken for granted in the general run of goodness that has always characterized this publication. You may have noticed that the MOVING PICTURE WORLD is always a little different from the rest of the trade papers you read. Always in logical and readable form our departments are supplying you with the latest and most dependable information on the various topics. The Projection Department has always been the leader in that branch of service. Alongside of it in the front rank stands Advertising for the Exhibitor, always ahead of all others in the matter of bringing to your hands the best and most successful plans and ideas for presenting your program to your patrons and for instructing you in the methods of advertising an amusement business. Now our Music Department has been rejuvenated and restored to its proper position and kind words of approval are coming in with every mail. The department of Educational Pictures gives the only proper and sufficient description of current educational pictures and is sought and read by leading educators all over the United States and Canada who are adapting the screen to school purposes.

Our news pages, always reliable, are the most varied and exclusive in point of information conveyed. The great majority of stories being written by our own staff gives the MOVING PICTURE WORLD a distinctiveness that no other publication in the trade possesses. In all instances is the press story minimized and our own given preference. In this way our patrons are given better service and our readers more interesting entertainment. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the only trade publication giving attention to country-wide events. Our corps of correspondents, situated at the most advantageous points, keeps us informed upon the daily happenings in their several localities. A considerable number of pages is devoted to this service and is highly appreciated by our readers. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD reviews of current pictures have long held the highest esteem and confidence of the trade. Competent reviewers contribute to this department of the World's activities and their opinions are the best from any point of view.

With a few exceptions this about covers what we are doing for our readers. "Rambles" has already made a place for itself and now our Los Angeles Correspondent is stirring your risibles with his incomparable "Rubbernecking in Filmland." Altogether the MOVING PICTURE WORLD is giving the biggest value for the price and is getting the best price for its service in comparison with its several contemporaries. For all that we are not yet through, as you, dear reader, will shortly realize, but just now we are sure that you need not have us tell you that it is so. Your continued patronage proves that. We thank you.

WILLIAM A. BRADY has again earned the thanks of the motion picture industry for the excellent manner in which he has handled the question of essentiality of the business before the Priorities Committee of the War Industries Board last week. As one of the committee which went to Washington said: "The entire credit for the successful issue should go to William A. Brady." The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is prepared to accept that statement to its full value. Ever since Mr. Brady has come into the picture business his services to the trade has always been of the foremost importance. His diplomatic handling of delicate questions has been most satisfactory to the last particular. As president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry Mr. Brady has given the trade the first organization that has done anything of a considerable value and, at the same time, he has not used the organization or his position therein to advance his own position in the trade.

Of the importance to the trade conferred by the action of the Priorities Committee little need be said here. Everyone engaged in the motion picture business knows what it means. Attention should be directed at all times to the few restrictions that men and material shall be fully conserved. While the presentation of the claims of the motion picture men by Mr. Brady enabled the Government to reach the favorable decision it did in the least possible time, there is little doubt that the Priorities Committee's favorable attitude was largely induced by the whole hearted and unhesitating manner in which the industry has always responded to every request of the Government and the absence of profiteers from our ranks.

ABOUT PLOW HORSE DRAMA

Louis Reeves Harrison.

MOST of it is very tame. It is driven back and forth over the same old limited pasture without a chance to escape into wider fields of action, until it grows accustomed to dull routine and is untempted by wider horizons and themes, especially those which call for superior development.

The main objective is the embrace of a man and a woman.

They may have tried very hard to kiss before the end of five reels, but something has always happened to prevent them. Perhaps one of the characters has displayed a revolver. What a thrill goes down the spine of an audience when a pistol is taken from the drawer of an ornate desk, or merely from a hip pocket and laid on the table!

Perhaps there is a storm, vivid flashes of lightning! We may be treated to a downpour of studio rain!

Trains may be wrecked; the lost child may be restored; the mortgage on mother's home may be paid off; the comedian may be injected into the midst of appalling dangers and knock 'em all endwise; the spy may get the plans of American fortifications; the outlaw may reform under woman's tender influence and be a real man "after all"; the heroine may disguise herself as a boy and find herself in some very embarrassing predicaments; the country maiden may win the young Wall Street millionaire "after all"; the heiress may disguise herself as merely a woman and discover that the humble hero is a "nobleman at heart," the millionairess may cut up pranks with a burglar thrown in, who is not really a burglar "after all"; the erring woman may not be a bad one "at heart" and be silently clasped in his arms "at last"—the old plow goes up one side and down the other without variation.

Complication—Chase—Rescue—Embrace.

Nearly every man in real life has a responsibility.

The drama should have an intimate and direct interest in reality.

Nearly every society in real life has some responsibility.

Each of us shares that of the society to which each belongs.

The leading responsibility of our American social organization is that of our mutual enlightenment. We share that as individuals, and our dramatic art can be made to share it also, especially that of moving pictures, because of their general accessibility to the whole people. Just so far as our social institutions are imperfect and work wrongfully against our common enlightenment and happiness, just so far do they furnish topics of live interest to our people. One of the prime functions of literature, stage drama and that of the screen is to appeal to that live interest with all the strength in their power.

How can this be expected of a plow horse who never gets outside of a daily routine, that of going over the same ground continually?

He may have started out to explore a vast domain of thought, but he has settled down to a daily grind, and he gradually comes to believe there is no other field on earth except that in which he works.

A pays B a good salary to pick plays which suit C, not because C knows anything about it, but because he draws a big salary and must be jollied along. Then A puts out money and effort to sell the product and finds it hard work—he lays it to war times, when foreign rights are selling for more than the entire cost of any live picture.

B is satisfied to be a plow horse—it pays him to be.

He knows there is a vast untrained audience throughout the country composed of people who turn this way and that in search of stories new and delightful, which shall stir them to laughter or to tears, but he has been up and down in one field so long that he is out of touch with the eager longings and progressive spirit of those people, even out of sympathy with their unceasing search for drama of significance.

The greatest need of production today is less that of money than of men, men broad and liberal in spirit, with a high and clear outlook, far beyond one narrow old field. With their coming, moving pictures will flourish as never before, and people will not be constrained to say "the surface has not yet been scratched."

PSYCHOLOGICAL STORIES

By Robert C. McElravy.

THE writer once saw one of those printed memorandums sent out by magazines with short stories, technically known, we believe, as "rejection slips." These rejection slips, it seems, are sent with stories on their homeward journey to authors, when the editor is too busy to write personal letters. Frequently they give an outline of the sort of stories the magazine wants, and the particular slip mentioned above even went so far as to tell what the editor did not want.

"We don't want psychological stories!" The exclamation point is ours, but that is what the rejection slip said, in one item.

Now, psychology is a big word, and has quite an alarming sound. But since this particular editor seemed so opposed to it, there was nothing to do but look it up in the dictionary. Otherwise, if one should ever attempt so hazardous a job as writing a short story, one might put psychology into it without the least intention of doing so. In fact, the writer has since come to believe, that is the very thing a young author instinctively does. And, without meaning any disrespect to the editor in question, for his rejection slip spoke only of his own requirements, if every young author should continue to follow his natural instinct in these matters, more bound volumes of short stories of permanent worth might decorate the library shelves.

Psychology is defined in Webster's Unabridged as "The science of the human soul," and anything of a psychological nature has to do with "the systematic or scientific knowledge of the powers and functions of the human soul."

A psychological short story, then, is one that deals with the soul struggles of at least one or more individuals. It is distinguished from stories of action, detective stories or stories of adventure from the fact that it deals largely with the delineation of character, and this in turn leads to the study of human motives and the changes wrought by the various turns of the plot upon the characters themselves.

The psychological story, or scenario, if it is to be prepared for the screen, is undoubtedly the most difficult to master. But that is a poor reason for not attempting it if one is interested in story writing. For a good psychological story, properly constructed, stands head and shoulders above a simple story of action or adventure, and is likely to outdo the other sort both in immediate popularity and lasting value.

This is not to class the psychological story by itself, for it may be blended with action and adventure. Neither does it mean that the author must turn his back upon lusty tales of the road, crook stories and the like in favor of religious or goody-goody stories. It simply means that where the author knows his characters well and is able to give the psychological touch at the right time, he will get almost twice the effect that could be attained by simple action.

A current screen production, entitled "Her Man," is a case in point. This is adapted from "The Battle Cry," a novel by Charles Neville Buck and is one of the best of recent screen releases. "Her Man" is a feud story of the Kentucky mountains, a fact in itself almost enough to damn it for the ordinary picturegoer, for there have been feud stories without number in past years. This story contains nearly all of the familiar situations found in the average feud tale, the secret murders, clashes between clans, night riders and all that sort of bally rot, as the Englishman says. But it has something more, and that particular something is what lifts it above other feud stories and sends a thrill through the observer not soon to be forgotten. The entire story is built up about a girl who goes into the feud country to instruct and civilize the natives. She preaches against these evil outbreaks and even induces the hero, with whom she is in love, to take his troubles to the law courts for satisfaction. He does this, for the sake of the girl. But eventually, in spite of this, his own life is threatened. The girl begs and implores him to remain at home out of danger, but when his enemies suddenly appear she forgets her teachings and fights herself with all the savagery of a mountaineer at his side. What were her private convictions against mountain feuds when the life of her man was to be taken in this unjust way? She began to fight for the same reason that America set out to kill the Hun.

It was the soul struggles and character changes in this girl that made this an unusual story. Without this it would have been as colorless as the average story of the kind.

Psychological stories are usually the stories you can remember. They affect an observer more deeply because they raise a moral issue in his own mind and he is constantly measuring the actions of the hero or heroine by his own sense of justice. Then there is a slip in the moral status of the hero, the observer's sense of justice is offended and the effect of the story weakens. In other words, the psychology of the production is faulty and it accordingly falls back in strength.

EMPTY TANKS, FULL HOUSES

By E. T. Keyser.

ABOUT a year ago we listened with scant patience to the wail of the Gloomy Gusses that war conditions, war taxes and the Draft were about to put a quietus on the moving picture business, and a few of the more timorous of the exhibitor group, scenting trouble from afar, closed up shop and tried some other line of endeavor.

Like the old sailor in "Midshipman Easy," their judgment was correct but not accurate. There was trouble for some lines of commercial activity, coal retailers and railroad presidents for instance, but it has skipped the picture men. The industry has been declared essential and the operators have been ruled as immune from the "work or fight" regulations. The Government has learned to appreciate the fact that the only possible propaganda for use in Russia and in neutral countries is the celluloid story, which requires no translation and which is more obviously truthful than the printed word.

And now comes the intimation that Sunday automobiling is to be discouraged, not because there is any governmental disapproval of Sunday motoring but because fuel and oil are needed for sterner service.

This means that the city dweller whose Sunday trip took him afield for the entire day will now spend a portion of that day in the picture theater and that the suburbanite will help to fill the ticket box of the local show instead of his gasoline tank. This means that from now on the attendance at Saturday and Sunday picture shows is slated for a profitable increase.

Which adds proof to the statement of the wise man who said the worst of his worries had been over troubles that had never happened after all.

Pennsylvanians Win Decision On Sunday Shows

One of the most important decisions handed down in Pennsylvania was delivered by Judge McLaughry in the Circuit Court at Mercer, Pa., in the case of Farrell vs. Adler, Leslie and Stahl. The decision states that Sunday shows are legal under the present Pennsylvania statutes providing they are properly licensed under the borough law. Judge McLaughry ruled that the boroughs are self-governing and that matters pertaining to the licensing of amusements come properly under the borough's governing powers.

In the decision the Judge ruled that the act of May, 1915, provides sufficient power to be vested in the boroughs to permit such operation if the proper license has been granted, and that the entire matter is outside the court to interfere.

The decision came as the climax to a case which grew out of litigation raised over a year ago, on the operation of motion picture shows in Farrell on Sundays. The borough authorities permitted their operation, but the case was appealed by the various taxpayers on the ground that the State law forbade Sunday shows, and that the local authorities were exceeding their authority in granting permission to operate on Sundays.

This decision of Judge McLaughry is the first definite ruling of the kind and will undoubtedly put a quietus upon anti-Sunday crusades from a legal point of view throughout the state. The motion picture men of Sharon hav made application for Sunday license t the borough authorities, and upon ad vice of counsel will open their show to the public in a short time. Farre and Sharon are industrial towns clos together, and the exhibitors feel sweeping victory has been won fo them. Movements favoring Sunda operations in other industrial sectio will undoubtedly take form in the nea future, and it is believed that it wi not be long before the Sunday idea be comes general. The three defendants i the case at Farrell have fought a har fight and credit must be rendered the for taking the initiative in a matte which may have such far reaching con sequences.

PATHE-NORTH SALE COMPETITION

Being the Second of the Series of Sound Suggestions from a Master Sales Manager to His Staff That Will Be Read with Interest by Exhibitors and Exchangemen

AS detailed in the last issue of the Moving Picture World, Tom North has determined upon a sales campaign for Pathe in the Western District, the trophy to be permanently awarded the exchange holding the cup for three months in succession. The cup is a really handsome affair, but its intrinsic value is slight as compared to the record the cup will stand for, and the bonuses will amount to far more than the cost of the cup.

Having received favorable comment from the managers in his district, to whom the idea of a contest was broached, Mr. North sent out this letter, more fully outlining the terms of the contest, and contributing some ginger talk. He wrote:

Dear Mr. ———:

I didn't begin with askings. I took my job and stuck;
I took the chances they wouldn't, an' now they're calling it luck.
And they asked me how I did it, and I gave 'em the Scripture text,
'You keep your light so shining a little in front o' the next!"
They copied all they could follow, but they couldn't copy my mind,
And I left 'em sweating and stealing a year and a half behind.

—Rudyard Kipling
in "The Mary Gloster."

Hurrah! Each and every member in the Western Division accepted the cup competition proposition, and each one swears that he will win the cup, so that, commencing August 1, the race for the cup will be on! Lay out your plans for a real hard driving race, as the balance of the boys swear by all that is holy that the cup will land in their office.

Competitors.

Manager of the following branches are in competition for the cup: Salt Lake City, Denver, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Spokane.

The Contest.

This contest is for a silver loving cup. A cup will be awarded to the exchange that exceeds the business done by that exchange during the month of April, 1918, by the largest amount. In other words, the business for your office during the month of April, 1918, amounted to $———, and if you exceed this amount during the month of August by $1,000 and the next highest office exceeds their amount by $999, why you win the cup for the month of August competition. If, during the month of September, you exceed your August month by the largest amount of any of the offices, you will retain the cup another month. If you again succeed in exceeding in October the business you did in September, then the cup belongs to your office for all times, and another cup will be put in competition. To be more plain, if you succeed in winning the cup for three successive months then the cup remains the property of your office.

Campaign.

Lay out your campaign dates, and advise each and every one of your staff of this competition. The race is going to be a hot one and the pace fast and furious, so it will behoove you to get busy right away.

Remarks.

It is really with a great deal of pleasure that I note your promptness and the spirit in which you have accorded this contest. I feel mightily proud to have association with a man like you, and you can believe the writer that he is very sincere in this exclamation and if he can be of any service to you please know that that is what he is in this position for; and another thing, do not overlook the fact that he is more than glad to co-operate with you in any and all matters.

With such spirit as you have shown it is an absolute cinch that the western division will lead the entire Pathe organization before November 1, and it is going to hustle the balance of the organization to take the supremacy from us after that time.

The home office is going to furnish us with the best product that they can obtain, and we are going to show our gratitude by securing the best business of any part or division of our entire organization.

During the time that I was back East I heard nothing but good words and lofty exclamations about the hustlers in the film business out West, and you know how proud it made the writer feel to know that the boys of the West are held in such high esteem, and during this contest we are going to show them that they have not underestimated us by any means.

As a suggestion the writer thinks it would be a good idea if you would advise your local Chamber of Commerce, Commercial Club and Rotary Club of this contest and get their backing, as there is always a great amount of civic pride displayed by the bodies above mentioned, and you could use a letter from each of the bodies above mentioned to good advantage in circularizing your territory, and at the same time you could get a corking good newspaper story on this contest and the local civic bodies sanctioning it.

The writer also suggests that you have a rubber stamp made reading about like this:

"This branch is in competition with other Pathe branches for a silver loving cup, which will be won by the branch turning in the largest amount of business during the month of August! You know how proud we will be to have the ——— Branch win this cup, and we feel quite certain we have your undivided support in this contest, for which we thank you."

Also as a suggestion a neatly painted card placed in the location which will meet the direct gaze of each and every one coming into your office, reading as follows:

"Did you know that we are in a competitive race for a silver loving cup? Ask us about it."

Lay out your plans for the hottest campaign that you have ever instituted, and forward the writer copy of it. As a slogan the writer suggests that you send a copy of the following to each and every one of your salesmen, as well as your booker:

"Every time you see an expressman take a feature, serial, scenic, comedy, or in fact any piece of film belonging to an opposition concern into a theatre, just impress upon your mind the fact that a chance went by to make a Pathe sale."

Get busy at once, and when the bell sounds August 1, instead of sticking with the bunch, jump out ahead.

Yours for success and lots of it,

Yours very truly,
Pathe Exchange, Inc.,
TOM NORTH,
Western District Manager.

Screencraft Pictures Begins Work at Studio

WORK on the first production to be made by Screencraft Pictures, Incorporated, was started August 26 at the Thanhouser studios in New Rochelle. Previously the necessary sets had been made, props secured and everything put in readiness. Before a foot of film was exposed Mr. Fleckles and Mr. Wineberg of Screencraft had all of their plans completed. Frank Reicher, who is directing the production, has completed his cast.

The leading roles will be assumed by Mary Boland and Lucy Cotton. Miss Boland has appeared in several well known special productions in the past. She also enjoys a wide stage experience. Miss Cotton also has had camera experience. She is a splendid type.

The story for this first play is "Flaming Ramparts," written by Edith Barnard Delano. It is not a war story. The picture, however, will not be issued under this title. Miss Eva Unsell wrote the screen version of Miss Delano's story and has done her work full justice.

The leading male roles will be handled by Harris Gordon and Raymond Bloomer, with Ira D. Schwarz at the camera.

BETTY HOWE UNDER KNIFE.

Betty Howe, former Vitagraph and International Film star, was operated upon last week. Miss Howe, who since her appearance in "To Hell With the Kaiser," has had the ingenue role in the new serial being produced by the Western Photoplay Company, was taken suddenly ill during one of the final scenes of that production. Reports following the operation were to the effect that Miss Howe had undergone it successfully and that complete recovery might be counted upon within a few weeks.

The operation was most unfortunate because of the fact that Miss Howe has just been placed under contract for a series of pictures in which she is to be the featured player, announcement of which has been postponed until her readiness to enter into the new association is definitely assured.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Looks Like a Record.

HAL HODES, of Universal publicity, seems to have dug up a record holder in Carl F. Miller, of the Strand, Fremont, Ohio. The Strand had "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," for two days. There are two daily papers in town. Mr. Miller ran a total of 23 advertisements, covering 330 column inches of space for the two-day run, varying from a two three-quarters to seven fives, there being six of the latter. With this went fourteen reading notices totaling 101 column inches and five cuts, adding 72 column inches making a grand total of 503 column inches of space for a single two-day run in a small town. Mr. Miller adds that the papers took everything they could get on the subject, and that he used up most of the press book. He is fortunate in working in with a live exchange, but given the cuts—and the nerve—any small town man can do what Mr. Miller has done. If anyone can beat this record for a two-day run of any subject, we'll be glad to hear from him.

Getting Results.

L. W. Barclay, of the Grand Amusement Co., Johnstown, Pa., writes that he is getting more material and attention as a result of his article in the big Convention Number, but sends in one cut for a Bluebird which he was able to use by sawing off, and adds that a second cut, one for "The Deciding Kiss," was so covered with company advertisement that he could not get rid of it. Publicity men may think that it is clever to smear a cut up with advertising for the production company, but in the main they merely spend their employer's money. Men like Mr. Barclay are paying space rates to advertise their own attractions and not the production companies, and yet Paramount, which has spent the most money for national advertising, is the limit in trying to make the managers share the expense, by plastering their cut material. Mr. Barclay got action by making a definite complaint instead of a general kick, and by backing up his statements with the evidence in the shape of the cuts. Let's get together with specific complaints and see what can be done.

Program Copy.

Try this on your own program. It is from the Garfield, Chicago. We note that Mr. Ryan does not yet sign his name to these appeals, though we think it would help not a little.

"LET'S LIVE"

A life in two hours—out goes the library lamp. Be sure you have the key! We're bound for a chair in a theater that knows and shows what we want to see in photoplays. We don't have to hunt for it—don't even have to take a chance on what we'll see. At the "Garfield" we'll see foremost stars, superbly directed in clean motion pictures. And when those two hours have past we can't forget the pictures that work such a happy transformation in us.

Mr. Ryan has been using his front page for special attractions of late, but we think that some talk like this is as well worthy of the space as the weekly program. Get your patrons interested in pictures as well as certain pictures.

The Wholesale Hardwicks.

The Hardwick Brothers, Clovis, N. M., seem to hoard their advertising until they get a couple of pounds before they send it along. It's all worth while and there's the trouble. It's not easy to pick out stuff for mention, but one novelty advertisement takes first place. It is a small envelope of the sort known to the trade as a "prescription envelope." Inside is a capsule containing a 5 by 8 throwaway, on very thin paper, advertising "Believe Me, Xantippe." The chief bank reads:

Office—Lyceum Theatre Building
Hours—7:30 to 11:00

DR. WALLACE REID
Specialist
Grouches—Blues—Melancholia

For..... Everybody In Clovis .....

DIRECTIONS FOR TAKING—ON INSIDE

Medicine envelope containing a capsuled advertisement.

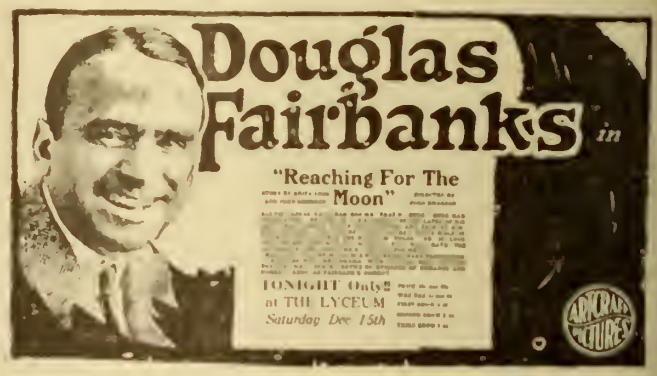
A $40,000 bet——a $100 forgery——a million dollars' worth of girl and enough fun and excitement to pay off England's war debt! Like "Xylophone" it sounds different than it looks——and like "Xmas," it's something to look forward to! Try and pronounce it, be sure and see it, it's the only sure cure for grouch, blues or melancholia.

The same type was also used to run these off on wall paper, a light ground being used. It is the first wall paper bill we've seen in a long time, but it is possible to get a job lot of paper cheap or to use the sample books that most decorators have laying around their shops. The same style of talk is used for "Vivette." The introduction runs:

It was lots of fun to be engaged to two fellows at once—until they found it out. Then—'!?xx—Bloole!

(NOTE—A girl that can get two nowadays with Uncle Sam in the field against them—she's some humdinger.)

This sort of thing may not sound like selling talk, but it gets a laugh that is credited to the play itself and a good impression is established. We have shown before the cross-page rules, but here is another example that is good save for the lack of lower case letters in that ten point bank. In the original the line is five inches wide—and there are eleven lines, making entirely too much all-caps to be read with ease.



A cross-page space dropping nine inches. The frame is stock and the current attraction is put into the mortise with type. There is too much all capital copy.

The frame is all one piece and the title and selling talk is dropped into a mortise. With a set of these for popular stars, the cost of art work can be materially cut without a loss of effect. It might be possible to carry this further and letter the top for the house and mortise for cut as well as copy. The next examples show a pair of four elevens, one advertising with a cut attractor and the other depending upon the type display for effect. These two examples take better care of the house signature than the cross page, and even in a small town we are strong for a big signature. The title of the house should stand for as much in the minds of the patrons as the name of the star or the title of the play. In the next cut four examples are shown. Two of these are four columns wide and two are two columns each. All drop about seventeen inches. The Talmadge display is the best of the four, but the use of the dollar mark in "purchase" is apt to be regarded as an error since but one is used. Were there a chance to use several it would be more apt, but a single $ does not suggest the taint of money but rather that the linotype operator hit the wrong key. The smaller advertisements are good examples of the all-reading style. That for Huck and Tom pages. Four days are shown on this page, and each day has a special box, though in this case all four of the boxes have been used for "A Man's Man.' A better layout would be a display advertisement for each space and selling talk in the boxes above and below. The page is 5½ by 8½, the cut showing the double middle page. We liked the Hardwick monthly program, and perhaps they are still getting it out, but no samples were sent in this batch. We hope they do not wait another six months before sending the next batch.

It's Big Enough.

Don't argue that your house is too small to make it worth while to advertise. Advertise and watch your house grow. We know a man who advertised a frame shack into a brick building. You can do it, too.

Posting.

Just because the whole town passes your house in the course of the day, do not suppose that you need no poster displays. In New York there are three candy stores under the same management in two blocks leading to a railroad station. The third does the largest volume of business because it has been advertised by the other two. The first gives the idea and the second is a reminder. The patron goes into the third. It's the way with posters. Start to talk to them before they can see your house lights.

Try It Yourself.

Advertising put the stars where they are. Try some of it on the house. Make your theater known three towns away if you are in the country or three theaters away in town. It pays.

Bottled Up.

The Oneonta (N. Y.) theater sends in a two drachm vial such as druggists use labeled:

Pep and Punch
The Sure Cure
Open me up and look me over.
Oneonta Pharmacy
41 Chestnut street Oneonta, N. Y.

This label nearly covers the vial. Inside is a sheet of very thin paper 4x7 inches advertising "A Fight for Millions" and offering an admission for five cents and the announcement to the first chapter. The idea is not new, but it is not often worked, because the vials cost money, but any novelty of this sort will be read and read carefully where a far more attractive sheet will be dropped scarcely noticed. And in passing, the Oneonta got a good job of typesetting on this circular, with a nicely proportioned selection of type faces to throw up the most important points.

Don't Use Quotes.

Be sparing in your use of quotation marks. Too many exhibitors seem to think that the lavish use of quotation marks gives point to what they write. It is like a man laughing at his own jokes to put quotes on what you think is clever. Don't do it. If it is really clever, the reader will appreciate it the more if he finds it out for himself. Quotation marks should be used only in quoting the words of others.

Ours and Yours.

Remarks the Hill theater, Newark: "Just look at our, or I should say your, program on the other side, &c." We like that idea. Make it the patron's own program. Give him an interest in it.

Drawn Designs.

Lately we asked Thomas D. Sorerio, of the Park theatre, Boston, for his ideas on the drawn designs he always used for that house. We asked if he did not think that type would be better than hand-lettering. Mr. Sorerio explains:

> Under separate cover I am sending you last week's ads as they appear on the pages, and you will see that the first ad that catches your eye is Park theatre, because I take special pains personally to see that it is properly drawn and the right kind of hand-lettering put in. These ads before they go to press are seen by me two or three times before I give them my final O. K.

> positors, as they are not up to the minute—in other words, progressive. They are so used to the type ads they have been getting that you cannot get them out of that rut.
> I also note what you state about having a mortised cut. I use the mortised cut in every other city where we have our theatres of which I am general manager. It is not necessary in Boston for me to use same. Of course, if I had a lot of theatres named Park theatre I would have them all mortised. As you know, that saves a lot of money in the long run, but many exhibitors do not know the value of advertising. Advertising and making these ads is hard work, and lots of exhibitors do not like to tie themselves down to hard work. I am very conscientious in my ads, and if at any time they will do the exhibitor any good I should be only too glad to send them to you.

Boston is pretty bad on the matter of display, as we pointed out last Summer, and the drawn design seems to be the general rule rather than the exception, but it makes a pretty poor advertising page as you will find if you will put the glass to this reproduction of a page from one of the Boston Sunday papers. There is so much reverse cut work and so much hand-lettering that nothing stands out particularly well, but we think that a space no larger than the Park takes, with a one-inch margin of white all around it would get more results than the most elaborate design—until the others started to copy. The second example gives a better detail of the Park display. This is a double-column four and a half inch space in which the stars are fairly well displayed and the titles not so well. The lettering is fairly clear, but the best hand-lettering possible will not equal a similar letter in type. When reduced space is taken, as in the daily single three and one-half inches, the effect is even less good. In suggesting a mortise we did not have in mind a mortised frame, but a mortised original design in which the minor type could be set, though a mortised frame would also work well, and this, too, would cut down expense and give greater legibility at the same time, were the printer to be trusted, but apparently the Boston printers are not up to standard. Perhaps this is one reason why even "My Four Years in Germany" is given but a two fives—and rather scant fives at that. We think that if some paper gave more careful attention to composition, it could coax larger displays. Here part of the cost must be put into the designs.

Over the Top With Ryan.

Charles H. Ryan sends in his program for Over the Top, which may give hints to others who have still to produce this play. It would work as well for other patriotic subjects. At the rise of the drop the stage showed a trench scene, this following an overture of southern medleys. Singers from two music publishers "plugged" their songs not too violently, then the stage and house lights were turned out for ten seconds while the orgnuist played the chimes slowly. Following this the stage was flooded with a dark blue while the drummer played the fife (flute stop effect) and the drummer came in with the snares. There was just a moment of this and then the stage hands sang a few bars of "Tenting tonight" off-stage, interrupted by the bugle call to "Charge." Red and green-fire torches were lighted while the drummer blew the whistle signal for over the top and then the stage hands called "Over the top, best of luck, boys." The drummer worked the bass drum for a distant cannon effect while a stage hand rattled the thunder sheet. Then one pistol shot was fired from the orchestra and this turned loose three guns and two cannon on the stage. During the "battle" the organist played hurry music. Then came the bugle call, "Stop firing," followed by the "Call to colors." The blue flood was changed to red and a huge flag was raised on the stage, illuminated from below through a trap. There followed a set of patriotic slides, then some patriotic short lengths, and the feature followed. We think that it would have been better to have run the slides and short features before the production, going from the flag-raising right into the feature, but the general layout is excellent, and even a small house can suggest the trenches with sand bags after the manner shown in the issue for July 13.

Lacks Text.

Justin Fair, of Pathe, sends in a page advertisement used by Textile Hall, Greenville, S. C. The page cost but $40, which is pretty reasonable, but Mr. Fair opines that it takes some nerve to take so much space in a town of but 17,000. It does, but having paid that much for space, we think that the house might have told more about the film. It is not so much the space you take as what you say in that space that counts. If the same feature has been running in a large town nearby, then the copy is enough, but there should be some selling talk unless the story is exceptionally well known. A few lines about the plot, telling the high lights of the story, would have helped a great deal, but the alliteratlve phrases below are not selling talk unless backed up by argument. There are times when the bare announcement is better advertising than all the selling talk that could be crowded into a page, and this is at least better than a page overloaded with explanation and promise, but there is a happy medium to be followed in most instances and we do not think that the fame of the stage play is so general in the small towns as to make unnecessary some identification of the story. At any rate the house had the nerve to plunge on advertising, and even size will have its effect in persuading many persons that the play advertised in such space must be out of the ordinary.

Too Much.

Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

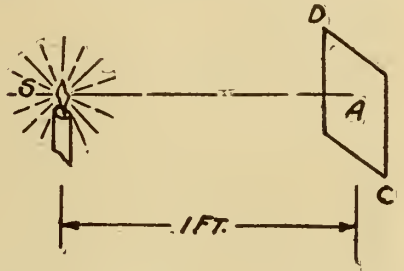
Foot-Candle Standard for Comparison.

The principal difficulty confronting prospective purchasers of Mazda lamp projection is found in the lack of any convenient method of comparing its screen illumination with that of the arc they now have in use. To say that the arc of given amperage D. C. or A. C. will duplicate a given type of Mazda in screen illumination is, at best, but a very rough and unsatisfactory method of approaching the problem, because two 25-ampere D. C. arcs may give very different results as to screen illumination, due to difference in kind or set of carbons, difference in condenser, distance from condenser to aperture, distance from aperture to projection lens and position of revolving shutter or its matching to meet existing conditions. This department has up to this time advocated an amperage basis for comparison for the very simple reason that it has seen no way of applying any other more accurate standard of comparison. But after all what is the use setting up something which must in due time be pulled down. Why adopt something which is a makeshift because of the difficulty in introducing that which is right and accurate? Therefore we propose reversing our position and advocating the foot-candle as a right and proper standard for comparison of the arc and Mazda.

This matter rightly approached is not so difficult as it sounds, for the foot-candle is simply a unit used to measure the illumination on a newspaper, a desk top or a motion picture screen, as the case may be. In the sketch, if the source, S, gives an intensity of one candle along the line SA, which is perpendicular to the plane CD, and if A is one foot distant from the source, the intensity of illumination on the plane CD at the point A is one foot-candle.* As a matter of fact, the intensity of illumination, measured in foot-candles, is the unit of measurement most intimately associated with our everyday use of light and a measurement which the eye either consciously or unconsciously is making whenever the faculty of vision is being employed. A working idea of a foot-candle of illumination can be obtained by considering the intensity on a newspaper being read by the light of a candle, the paper being held approximately one foot away from the candle.

The usefulness of the foot-candle as a measure of screen illumination depends: first, upon the providing of Mazda lamp salesmen with reliable portable photometers (which, I undersand, has already been done); second, upon the proper understanding of what difference there may be in the foot-candle screen illumination as between the arc and the Mazda to give equally satisfactory results, and third, and most important, upon the co-operation of projectionists and their willingness to accept and understand this new method of comparison. Besides simplifying a comparison of the two sources, this plan will also form a basis for the setting up of a standard of screen illumination necessary to bring out the photographic detail of films, and that is a very important matter indeed.

The real diffculty of establishing standards of screen intensity necessary to do justice to the films is found, I think, not so much in the size of picture or the distance the picture is projected, as in the variation in reflecting power of different screen surfaces. The illumination on a surface as indicated by the foot-candles must not be confused with the appearance of the surface as regards brightness. A gray surface lighted to an intensity of one foot-candle does not appear so bright as a white one, for a greater proportion of the light falling upon the gray surface is absorbed and lost. The brightness of a projected picture depends, then, not only upon the intensity of illumination, but upon the percentage of light which the screen reflects as well.



The injection of unfamiliar terms into any industry is always accompanied by some temporary confusion, but I have faith to believe that we can work it all out to a satisfactory conclusion, and to this end I have arranged with the engineers of the National Lamp Works for publication in this department of fundamental light measurement as applied to motion picture projection. These engineers have also kindly offered their services in answering inquiries on this subject through this department or direct.

*The definition of a foot-candle is "An intensity of illumination equal to that produced at a point on a plane which is one foot distant from a source of one candle and which is perpendicular to the light rays at that point."

A Most Excellent Letter.

From Marvin H. Thoreau, Victoria, B. C., comes the following letter, which is the type of communication we hope will be quite common in this department in the not distant future:

Inclosed find ten dollars and five cents, to be applied as follows: Four dollars for handbook, third edition, of course, three and a half for a year subscription, two and a half for Hallberg's Motion Picture Electricity and five cents for carbon copy of department matter if you use the letter therein. Have studied the handbook many times, but never owned one of my own, and in this connection think the near-beers are on you. When you addressed the theatre men of Vancouver you asked: "What is the proper amount of tension at the aperture," to which I replied: "Ninety, etc." "Correct! There is a man who owns a handbook and has studied it," was your comeback. (Nope, brother Thoreau. Drinks are on YOU. Very evidently you HAD studied a handbook and I gave you credit for being a real sport. Apologies (but no drinks) for my error. It was a very natural one. Umph, guess that'll hold you for a few minutes, darn you! Ed.) In Toronto you paid us (Vancouver) quite a compliment considering those two questions about tension and clock. Wm. McCourtney, of the Orpheum, answered the latter question. Since your visit to Vancouver and Victoria I know of only two new projectors being installed in the first named city (May be some excuse for that. War is hell, you know. Ed.), both at the Rex Theatre, and one in Victoria. The Rex clock is still black figures on white; also, another clock has been installed on the other side! (If the Rex manager is determined to hand his box office a black eye he should at least respect the eyes of his audience. Ed.).

The theatre in which I work has no clock and, personally, I hope it never will have. (Wrong, brother. A clock, IF PROPERLY INSTALLED, not only is unobjectionable, but is a convenience to the audience. I have never objected to the clock itself, but to the utter foolishness of using a white face with black hands and letters, with light smeared all over the whole clock and much of the surrounding wall. Ed.). The exit lights in this theatre (8 of 'em) used to be red letters on yellow art glass, 10x24 inches, with two big tungstens behind. Now I have only the red letters showing and will soon have 2 c. p. lamps behind them. (Good! That is just plain common sense. Audience now sees the exit just as well as before, and the eyes are not strained and annoyed by the big blotches of light. Ed.). The orchestra and auditorium lighting comes next on my purity squad activities.

My Power's is A. C. driven, with friction speed control. The Simplex is D. C. driven, with rheostat speed control, though new A. C. motor and friction control are ordered. Have removed tops of lamphouses and installed metal hoods, with 3-inch vent to roof. (Good. Ed.) Carbon alignment is as recommended for D. C. My screen is glossy and smooth, with a perfectly be-yutiful fadeaway. House is 70 feet wide, so you may imagine results with that type of screen.

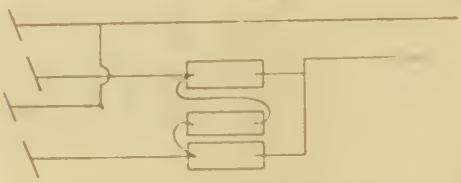
Before I came the light was always stolen from one arc to the other. Here is what I have done: One Power's and one Simplex rheostat connected in multiple, with all grids cut in. (Your sketch does not show rheostats in multiple. You have one on each lamp. Ed.) They were delivering 45 amperes at the arc. By connecting an old coil rheostate as per sketch and putting the Power's on next to high and Simplex on high I was able to get 40 amperes at each arc on changeover. As soon as the switch of either lamp is pulled the other jumps to fifty. Generator is rated at 65 amperes, and would give 100 at changeover, but the motor will not pull more than 80. (I read your text several times before your plan entangled itself. The third rheostat has little or no effect as to actual changeover. With both arcs burning it would, I think, steal current from the arc having highest voltage, delivering the pilfered goods to the other arc. But with one arc shut off, assuming the rheostats to be connected in ahead of the machine table switch, there would be a multiple, consisting of the rheostat belonging to the arc in use and a series of the other arc's rheostat with the third one. This would operate to boost the amperage. If the idea was to do that without purchasing additional equipment or changing switches or wiring, as I see you say in next sentence, the plan is a clever one—decidedly so. Ed.) I had to do this without changing wiring or using additional switches. The arcs are easy to handle and there are no complications to puzzle the occasional substitute projectionist.

Attached find pattern of my Simplex shutter. I want to know what it would be if speeded up 50 per cent. I realize that, due to faster covering and uncovering, the blade would be narrower, but would it be enough so as to give a 50-50 two-winger? I have my shutters so made that they allow only the beam to pass, and all vagrant light is stopped at the ports; also, I intend stopping down at the aereal image as well. The gears of the Power's are so badly worn that I cannot get a good shutter on it. Can you tell me where I can get gears made for the speeding up of the Simplex shutter? (The question of so radical a change is something you should take up with the Precision Machine Company, 317 East 34th street, New York City. If I understand you aright you have the once-and-a-half-around shutter in mind. Whether or no you could get a 50-50 two-wing shutter on your machine by using that plan is too much of a problem for me to figure out, and anyhow the necessary gears should by all means be made by the Precision Company. I would not advise even trying the plant except the Precision Company approved, or at least consented, and made the necessary gears, etc. Ed.) What do you think about stopping down the front condenser to reduce the beam at the shutter? Think I have my optical system about as nearly correct as possible, but want your opinion. Sometimes use 54 and sometimes 50 amperes D. C. May get a new generator soon, so give me data for both amperages, with plano convex and M Bi-C. Am enclosing plan of theatre for comment on picture size. Picture, 21 foot 2 inches; throw, 130 feet; drop, 45 feet. Screen has two-foot black border and stage is set in medium green. What happened to the Sabo short back focus lens?

A most interesting letter indeed. Here is a man who apparently has studied his business to some purpose. He is far advanced in understanding of scientific projection. He can talk understandingly of the problems he presents, and unless he really understands them pretty well he is a stem-winding wonder. I wonder how long it will be before the man who talks understandingly will be the rule, instead of the exception?

Now mind you this is NOT a roast on projectionists in general, but a commendation of those who understand that there really are problems in connection with projection requiring careful, intelligent handling, and the application of expert knowledge. I have preached the red letter exit sign, but how many projectionists have grasped the importance of the matter, and have taken it unto themselves as a legitimate part and parcel of projection? And how many have followed it out intelligently, to the cutting down of the exit illumination after accomplishing the red-letter-black-background part? In other words, how many of you really apply brains to your projection problem? Now don't get peeved. If you are one of those who do, then this does not hit you. If you are one of the aw-dats-good-enough sort, then you have my permission to get just exactly as mad as you want to—the madder the better!

More recent data bases lens formula on amperage. For 55 amperes D. C. here is your lineup. Piano convex lenses, 6 6 and 7 5, with 16 5 inches from center of combination to film; diameter of objective, 2 inches, though that is just a trifle small. With 2 inches diameter, however, the waste will not be much. With M Bi-C lenses you should have 6 5 Meniscus and 9 5 biconvex, with 18 inches to film. Your



2-inch diameter projection lens will still do fairly well.

For 60 amperes D. C., plano convex, you need same combination, with .5 inch less distance to film, and with M Bi-C the same, with ¾-inch greater distance to film. In each case the projection lens diameter is the same and is based on your back focus (3 19 32 inches on Power's and 4 1 16 on Simplex). This data takes care of distance of arc from lens and presumes condenser lenses to be not to exceed 1 16 inch apart. Your present lenses (1⅜ diameter on Power's and 1 9/16 on Simplex), is wasting light, or will be with higher amperage. Very soon I will publish a resume of projector optical system, by Griffith, later I shall have something of large value to offer, I think.

As to size of picture, I never have and don't think I ever will recommend such a large one as you have, except in very rare exceptional cases where rear seats are an abnormal distance from the screen. In my opinion a 19-foot picture would be large enough, and would give you a better general result, the reduction being added to the black border. The Sabo lens is still hanging fire. War conditions have made it impossible for Mr. Sabo to proceed. You will, of course, reduce the effective ray at the aereal image if you reduce diameter of front condenser, by stopping down or otherwise, but by so doing you cut off a portion of your available illumination. If you do that you might better use a condenser of less diameter; stopping down may, under some conditions, sharpen focus. Your distance from screen to front row of seats (26 feet) is most excellent indeed. It more than complies with the rule of minimum of 15 feet for a ten-foot picture and one foot of added distance for each added foot of screen width. My compliments, Brother Thoreau. You are a projectionist—not a mere machine "operator." There is a large difference!

The Wage Scale of 306.

Local Union 306 has adopted a new wage scale, as has already been noted in another department of this paper, page 1232, August 31 issue, same having already taken effect. In the main the scale seems moderate enough, particularly when present conditions are considered. It contains a few items upon which comment seems in order. The scale contains a classification of houses based on prices of admission and seating capacity. Viewed broadly, I cannot see wherein seating capacity has any right and proper place as a governing element in this kind of classification. Aside from hours of labor there should be no classification of projectionists based on anything except ability. The higher price is presumed to and should secure to the theatre a superior grade of ability. For an equal number of hours of duty that is the only proper reason for a difference in pay. The theatre seating 500 and charging 50 cents is in duty bound to supply its patrons the same grade of expert projection service that is given by the same price house seating 1,000. On regular positions the scale runs from a minimum of $25.20 to a maximum of $33.60, which is moderate enough. In fact, one might question whether real ability can be had at these figures. Oh yes, I well know the exhibitor has a heavy burden to bear, but handing the box office a wallop by means of inferior ability in the projection room is not going to help him any. In this connection I might add that the audience paying 25 or 50 cents admission has the RIGHT to expect better service in every particular than has the one paying a less sum.

The recognition of a seven-day week may possibly be defended on the grounds of war time conservation of labor, but I do not believe a man who works 365 days a year is ever an efficient man, or that there is any true conservation of labor by requiring or even allowing seven days of labor. And if the union recognizes the 7-day week, on what grounds can it defend substituting the six day week for computing fractions?

In its last paragraph, the scale forbids union men from operating stereopticons. This was, I think, not intended, but the prohibition is there, nevertheless, and there very clerly too.

The last clause of the scale reads: "All members of this union holding positions as manager can relieve operators (Pants, coat, ladies' waist or motion picture? Ed.) for supper only. This applies to exhibitors also."

This is, it seems to me, ill advised. Should an exhibitor become a projectionist I venture the assertion that he would be shown no special favors by the exhibitors' league. In fact, I think he would be immediately asked to present his withdrawal therefrom.

To sum up, the new scale is, aside from the points I have named, moderate, and errs, if at all, on the low side.

Motion Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON and MARG ARET I. MACDONALD

Opening of School Renews the Educational Campaign

SCHOOLS everywhere are reopening. In these days of advanced methods, this means that the educational institution desiring to do the most effective work must surely be fully equipped with the moving picture method of teaching. It ought almost to seem unnecessary to have to present any argument to support this statement. It is, however, a regretable fact that for many absolutely inadequate reasons many school authorities are allowing themselves to be lulled into a state of indifference by the varied conditions of the times, which, when studied, ought to prove an incentive rather than a hindrance to the progress which the education of today demands.

The most fallacious idea presented for still further delay beyond the vacation period in adopting the picture-teacher is the "after the war" slogan. This is not only foolish, but is as bad as a pro-German idea in that it hinders the education of young America as to the needs of the hour.

History in the Making.

These are days highly favorable to the pupil in that he is able to learn the most important period of the world's history in the making with all the interesting and progressive details rather than superficial facts afterward. It is everywhere acknowledged even in governmental circles that the present up to the moment readiness of the American people is due entirely to the enormous supplementary aid of the publicity films of every kind. Indeed, it must be said that never before has there been known such a campaign of education which has at once lifted whole nations into a full knowledge of truths, facts and conditions which in days long ago would have required a generation of time to accomplish. This fact alone stands as a pre-eminent factor claiming the immediate adoption of the moving picture in the schools.

In addition to the facts and claims above noted the actual experience of those institutions which have already used the pictures is the last needed proof. It is of importance to note that there is not a single technical school under control of the United States Government which has not its picture-teacher outfit. There is not a school of instruction, a warship, a training camp of any description without this equipment. The lack in one single instance would immediately be reported as a dereliction of duty of those in charge. Let every school and educational institution in the land be at once similarly equipped.

Offerings in Screen Magazine No. 87.

Among the interesting items in Universal Screen Magazine No. 87 are the hunting of wild honey in the forests of the state of Washington, together with views illustrating the ingenuity and artistry of glass blowers, and how they transform molten glass into the graceful articles that adorn milady's boudoir. An official film of the Department of Agriculture shows how 1,780 farmers, growing berries in an area in the northwest fourteen miles square, operate their own canning factory. Another section of this reel shows the hatching of pheasants' eggs, worth $5.00 apiece. One of Willie Hopkins' miracles in mud, "Kaiser Bill," concludes this reel.

The Psychology of Song.

Among the interesting educational pictures showing at the Strand last week is that part of the Government publicity series which deals with the psychology of song. That soldiers are helped by music when on the march is a fact as old as military marching itself. Indeed it is doubted if ever an army existed that did not in some measure at least know the value of even the crudest elements of rhythm.

Napoleon was the first to officially note and command the use of music to sustain his weary troops. The further use of all kinds of music in army life is too well known to be repeated here. It has remained for America, however, to appreciate and initiate to the fullest extent the psychology of song as a necessary part of military training.

The United States Government has secured the services of eminent singers to give musical training to all the soldiers. The pictures shown are of these talented leaders training large numbers of men in both patriotic and the latest popular songs, so that they can bring up their spirits in times of stress. The audience caught the enthusiasm when they saw upon the screen an army of enthusiastic soldiers singing "We won't come back till it's over—Over There."

Trout Streams of the Catskills.

The 134th release of Paramount-Bray Pictograph contains a treat for followers of Isaak Walton. A trip to a fishermen's paradise, where brook trout abound in countless numbers in the hundreds of streams that twist and turn through the valleys of the Catskills, has been recorded on film.

Not all trout are taken by fishermen equipped with the most expensive tackle. For the cameraman came upon a barefooted boy whose rod was the peeled branch of a tree, whose line, no doubt, once served to hold some parcel together, and whose bait was a worm from the garden patch. His catch would have been the envy of any angler.

The art of fly casting as exemplified by men who know it, furnishes some spectacular incidents and little Mr. Brook Trout lived up to his reputation as the most gamey of fish.

This reel in addition contains two other interesting subjects which were originally scheduled for release in Pictograph No. 133, "The Psychology of Song" and "Aerial Warfare."

"If" Is the Secret of Harry Hoyt's Success

OF ALL the generative forces in the generative forces in the creation of plots for photoplays, the greatest is the word "if," says Harry O. Hoyt, author of "The Road to France," a World Picture starring Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley. Mr. Hoyt ought to know, as he is the creator of over six hundred photoplays—a record that has never been equaled by anyone else. He makes use of "if" in this manner: "I walk ten to fifteen miles a day, and as I pass along I observe people and objects. I say to myself: 'If that man or woman should step out in the street and hail a passing vehicle what would happen next?' I mentally follow up the situations that would naturally evolve from such an action, and the first thing I know I have a complete story. This formula can be utilized in a thousand different ways, and each one is productive of plots. It is a never failing well of ideas, and one thing is sure—it will never go dry."

Harry O. Hoyt.

Thornby to Direct May Allison.

Robert T. Thornby has been engaged to direct May Allison in "Kate of Kentucky," by George D. Baker and Thomas J. Geraghty. Thornby came to the screen from the legitimate stage. He first directed for World Film Company in the East and then for Paramount in the West. He has directed also for Pathe, Universal and Fox.

SELECT SHIFTS MANAGERS ON COAST

Hicks Goes to Seattle, Knappen to San Francisco and Lotz to Denver—All Promotions

AN important change in branch executives in Select Pictures' Pacific Coast exchanges will place Harry H. Hicks, now manager of the San Francisco branch, in charge of Select's Seattle office the middle of September. J. S. Woody, Select's field manager, is temporarily in charge of the Seattle exchange and will operate it until the arrival of Mr. Hicks. Mr. Woody will then move eastward, visiting other branches in his capacity of field manager.

Mr. Hicks has made a great success with Select Pictures, having been with that concern from the day that it started business, August 6, 1917, when he opened the Los Angeles branch. His success in the southern California territory was so marked that last December he was promoted to manager of the larger and more important San Francisco branch. Here Mr. Hicks' success has been even more marked than in Los Angeles. Mr. Hicks has brought business up in such a manner that in recognition of this work he has been given charge of the Seattle branch, covering the states of Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana.

Harry Hicks is by no means a stranger in the Pacific Northwest. It was there that he made his start in the film exchange business, with the General Film Company in Seattle. Later he became district manager on the Pacific Coast for General, having charge of the Seattle, Portland, Spokane, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Denver and Butte branches.

Knappen to San Francisco.

Select's Branch Manager, H. L. Knappen, now at Denver, will assume management of the San Francisco branch on September 9. This, too, is in the nature of a promotion, as San Francisco is a more important branch than Denver and is given to Mr. Knappen in recognition of the success he has made for Select in the latter exchange since he took charge there last December. Knappen, who was a newspaper man before entering the picture business, is returning to his old stamping ground in getting back to San Francisco, for it was here that he was employed on the most prominent of the Pacific Coast dailies.

Lotz Goes to Denver.

Beginning September 4 Select's Denver branch will come under the management of H. E. Lotz, who makes his first appearance as a member of Select's field force on that date. During the last year Mr. Lotz has been, first, special representative of the Triangle Film Corporation, traveling among exchanges, and latterly representing Triangle in its western division, embracing Salt Lake City, Denver, Seattle, Los Angeles and San Francisco, with headquarters at the latter city. Prior to that Lotz was for a year in the San Francisco exchange for Pathe. Previously he had been Canadian general manager for General, with headquarters at Montreal, having worked up to that position two years after his start with the General as roadman out of the Seattle exchange.

VITAGRAPH PUTS OVER THRILL.

Montgomery and Rock, the Vitagraph Big V comedy team, did night scenes on one of the busiest traffic corners of Los Angeles one night recently. This was much to the entertainment of a throng of sightseers. A polite "drunk" was the role being taken by each of the boys. The scenes were part of the Montgomery and Rock new two-reel Big V Special comedy, "Roffs and Riots."

One of the roof thrills in this picture was the breaking of a flagstaff with Montgomery and Rock at its very highest point. Another thrill was the boys sliding down a drainpipe from the top of a seven-story hotel. It was a hand-over-hand performance and difficulty was experienced in filming it, as the camera buckled five times. Both Joe Rock and Earl Montgomery claimed their muscles to be sore all over when the stunt was finally completed. The pipe had been whitewashed. This made it slippery and thus made the thrill all the harder to put over.

Doris Kenyon to Increase Yearly Number of Pictures

BY special arrangement entered into between Theodore C. Deitrich, president of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., and William L. Sherry, president of the William L. Sherry Service, eight Doris Kenyon features, with Miss Kenyon at the head of her own company, will be produced within the next year, beginning September 1. The original arrangement entered into between De Luxe Pictures, Inc., and the Sherry Service called for from four to six pictures for the first year.

The great success of the first Doris Kenyon pictures, "The Street of Seven Stars," by Mary Roberts Rinehart, and "The Inn of the Blue Moon," by Louis Joseph Vance, resulted in a demand by exhibitors and motion picture patrons for a larger number of Kenyon features. The pictures will be released through the Sherry Service upon specified dates.

The same policy will be maintained in future as has marked the past productions by Miss Kenyon. Clean, wholesome stories by famous authors produced on a elaborate scale will be the rule followed.

Miss Kenyon has started work on her third production, "Wild Honey," adapted by Louis Joseph Vance from the original story by Virgie E. Roe.

ARMY PRAISE FOR BIG U.

"Crashing Through to Berlin" is taking a big part in the entertainment provided for soldiers at the various camps before they leave for France. H. N. Berman, head of Jewel Productions, Inc., has arranged with the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities, to show the big film at all the Liberty theatres, conducted exclusively for soldiers.

Mr. Berman received several days ago a letter from E. L. Hyman, director of the picture division of the commission, extending hearty thanks and appreciation for the use of the film.

"Jewel Productions, Inc., can feel justly proud," writes Mr. Hyman, "of being able to present to the men its inspiration just before they are leaving the country to go over and drive out the Hun."

NOT RELEASED BY GENERAL.

Referring to an item in a recent issue of the Moving Picture World a representative of General Film Company states that the Broncho Billy reissues are not being released through that company, and that distribution of those subjects is in other hands as formerly.

Nazimova Talks About Metro's "Eye for Eye"

THE title of Mme. Nazimova's forthcoming superfeature, "Eye for Eye," which Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger will present in October, was chosen by the star herself from a list of fifty titles submitted. "Eye for Eye" is the name that has been given the screen version of the great three-act play, "L'Occident," by the Belgian dramatist, Henry Kistemaeckers, which Albert Capellani and June Mathis have adapted for Mme. Nazimova's use, with Mr. Capellani directing.

"The reason I chose the title 'Eye for Eye' from the list of those submitted," says Mme. Nazimova, who will be seen in the fascinating role of Hassouna, a girl of the desert," is because it exactly expresses the meaning of the play. The original title, meaning 'The Occident,' expresses it, too, but unfortunately a great many people do not understand French, and to many minds 'The Occident' means very little more. Kistemaeckers wanted to bring out in his great drama the vital difference between the standards of the Eastern and the Western worlds—the Orient and the Occident.

"Because the words 'An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth' appear in the Bible, many people consider that they are wholly Hebraic in application. That is not the case. 'Eye for eye and tooth for tooth' is the rule throughout the Orient. It is the Mussulman's creed."

"An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth" is also the creed of Hassouna, the heroine and principal of the play. She is a true daughter of the Orient."

SHERRY SERVICE ANNOUNCES ITS STARS

Product of Well-Known Players Now Under Its Banner—Gilbert M. Anderson to Come Back Strong

THE William L. Sherry Service, organized in June, is now releasing on regular schedule a continuous line of ultra features, with an array of feminine stars famous for their charm and beauty. William L. Sherry, the founder and organizer of this young giant of an enterprise, is now smiling in contentment over the perfection of his new company, which is now running like a well oiled machine. Most of his former lieutenants, when they heard that Mr. Sherry was perfecting a new organization, resigned their positions and enlisted under the banner of their old boss. Among those who changed their business affiliations were Norman J. Sennett and A. C. Novotny, the former exchange manager and the latter auditor of the Paramount New York exchange. Mr. Sennett with the Sherry Service is now presiding as general manager. The auditing department is in charge of Mr. Novotny. Daniel J. Savage, formerly manager of the Buffalo Paramount exchange, is now general manager of sales, and has shown himself to be a live wire in his branch of the business.

A Bevy of Stars.

Four feminine stars thus far made their debut under the banner of the William L. Sherry Service, all four sponsored by able and reputable producers. These are Jewel Carmen, Catherine Calvert, both presented by Frank A. Keeney; Doris Kenyon, presented by Theodore C. Deitrich, and Vangie Valentine, presented by Harold J. Binney. In addition to these there has been brought into the service the Burlingham Travel Pictures, an excellent array of thirty scenic subjects taken in various parts of the world by the American explorer, Frederick Burlingham. These five releases from the nucleus of the William L. Sherry Service. A full series of fifty-two productions for the ensuing year is being arranged for.

The latest news is that Gilbert M. Anderson, famous for years on the screen as "Broncho Billy," has returned after a few years' absence and will be seen henceforth in big, virile, western productions, all of which will be released through the William L. Sherry Service. In this new picture productions Mr. Anderson graduates from the two-reel class to multiple reel features, with strong stories from fiction successes and a capable supporting cast.

"Broncho Billy" Returns.

Mr. Anderson's first release on the Sherry program will be a rugged masculine five-reel subject that is perry well summed up in the strong title, "Red Blood and Yellow." This picture will be released September 22. On October 6 there will be released a two-reel G. M. Anderson picture. This will be in the nature of a "special," as the G. M. Anderson pictures will be long subjects hereafter. On October 20 the second Anderson feature will be released. It is a five-reel picture entitled "Son-of-a-Gun." The contracts between Mr. Anderson and Mr. Sherry were closed in an unusually short space of time. Mr. Anderson arrived in New York on August 24. On that same day he exhibited his first three pictures privately to Mr. Sherry, who was so impressed and pleased with them that contracts were drawn up immediately, covering indefinitely all of the Anderson productions, and signed August 26.

Mr. Sherry is extremely enthusiastic over this last addition to his program, and maintains that the former "Broncho Billy" will come back stronger than ever and will prove a formidable rival to those few other strongly masculine actors who are at present such a furore in motion pictures. Furthermore, Mr. Sherry has requested particularly, that some announcement be made of the fact that none of the G. M. Anderson features distributed through the William L. Sherry Service will be re-issues of any pictures acted by Mr. Anderson in the past. They are to be all new and up to date features, most of them adapted from play and story material that has met with big success in other mediums.

Famous Players-Lasky's Season in Full Swing

THE new season of 1918-19 of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which opened September 1, is now in full swing. Ever since the plans of this organization for the new year were announced, some two months ago, the activities of every department have been speeded up to take care of the greatly increased output of Paramount and Artcraft pictures. Enlargements in studio space and facilities to meet the new release schedule of twenty feature productions weekly, exclusive of the many short subject, have been completed, and all the studios of this company and its affiliated producing units are now reflecting the rush of the new season's activities evidenced in the distribution department and its exchange offices throughout the country.

In addition to beginning the new year for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, September marked the opening day of Paramount and Artcraft week throughout the country. Some of the large exhibitors are running one Paramount or Artcraft picture for the seven days, others are making several changes during the week, while smaller theatres are showing a different subject released under these trademarks.

Over forty of the largest newspapers in the United States, covering a circulation of 30,147,583 readers, carried full page advertisements in which every theatre that announced Paramount and Artcraft week was given free representation. In addition to this the bill of each of these theatres for the entire week was given space in these advertisements. Besides this, announcements of Paramount and Artcraft week are presented on billboards which were recently rented by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for its national billboard campaign.

In outlining the plans for the new season of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Adolph Zukor, president, said: "The new year should prove the greatest in the history of the motion picture. Never before has the screen been called upon to do such important work as is clearly cut out for it during the season 1918-19. The Government has decided that the motion picture industry is essential, that it is an important factor in winning the war. That the motion picture industry will more than live up to this faith placed in it by the Government is apparent from its past achievements in this direction.

"The entire organization of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has been dedicated to two purposes, to help keep up the spirit of America and to perpetuate and refine the art of the motion picture. For the season of 1918-19 we have laid out the most ambitious plan ever conceived by any film organization. As has been previously announced, there will be 208 feature productions released under the Paramount and Artcraft trademarks. Besides this there will be 156 short subjects, including educational and comic films. Thus the output of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is being doubled for the new season."

World Actors Organize to Diminish Wastage

A MEETING held by World actors regularly employed at the World studio, in which an organization was formed to work in sympathy with the War Industries Board in conserving film and reducing wastage, should have a far-reaching effect in the industry and be the forerunner of similar action on the part of actors in other studios.

The forming of this organization came about through the desire of the World actors to show their appreciation of the board's action in declaring motion pictures essential and to do their bit in complying with the board's demand that all wasteful methods be eliminated. The actors pledged themselves to make re-takes unnecessary, wherever possible; to save time by being prompt at the studio and ready at scenes so that the greatest amount of work can be done in a day and to have all costumes and clothes ready for scenes in advance.

A system of fines was also agreed upon, the fines to go to the Red Cross. Where re-takes are necessary, the footage is to be estimated by a committee and a fine of four cents a foot to be assessed against the guilty party. One dollar fine is to be assessed on each actor who is late if he has no legitimate excuse. A dollar fine will also be levied if the actor is late because of not being made up when the director is ready to "shoot" a scene.

The agreement has been signed by all actors and actresses who are regularly employed by the World. Present at the meeting were the following: Montagu Love, Carlyle Blackwell, Evelyn Greeley, Louise Huff, Barbara Castleton, June Elvidge, Madge Evans, Johnny Hines, Frank Mayo, John Bowers, Muriel Ostriche, George MacQuarrie and Jack Drumier.

FOX EXCHANGE GROWS.

To take care of the new business which has developed since the announcement of the William Fox campaign for the fall the New York exchange of the Fox Film Corporation, on the seventh floor of the Leavitt building, 130 West Forty-sixth street, has found it necessary to enlarge its office space.

A large room, formerly used as a reception hall for visiting exhibitors, has been converted into working space. A number of mohogany desks and other office furniture have been installed, affording better facilities for meeting the increased demand for Fox pictures.

BLEICH KEEPS FAITH WITH PUBLIC

Kentucky Exhibitor Tells How He Built Up Business from a Store to Three Theatres

AN exhibitor whose name has been seen often in the "Advertising for Exhibitors" department of this journal is George A. Bleich, of Owensboro, Ky. His entry in the field dates back to 1908, beginning with a little store show in Jonesboro, Arkansas, soon after acquiring all the theatres in the town, then later at Hopkinsville, Ky., where he built a handsome seven hundred seat house, which he sold in 1912 to the Crescent Amusement Company of Nashville, and in that year he erected the Empress at Owensboro, in the same state, in which town he has since remained, controlling all the theatres in his town.

Mr. Bleich has been a successful showman from the very beginning, and his Empress Theatre in Owensboro is not only an institution in that town but is one of the largest and most handsome in the state. He attributes a great deal of his success to newspaper advertising and is a firm believer in this method. He was probably the first exhibitor to use the personal, "You-can-depend-on-this," "take-it-from-me" style in his announcements, and at whatever the cost to tell the truth and to refrain from exaggerating. Keeping faith with his patronage is his hobby, and many can secure a lesson from his views, which we have asked him to write and are as follows:

Introducing Exhibitor Bleich.

When I entered the business of exhibiting motion pictures I did so with the full realization that while it was different in many ways from that of "the butcher, the baker, the candlestick-maker," yet the same principles of ethics obtained. It seemed to me that to secure a permanent and profitable patronage in my theatre I must be honest and deal fair with the people.

How could I possibly afford to be less honest in my dealings with the public than other tradesmen? I had known several managers who deluded themselves into believing the old P. T. Barnum adage about the people enjoying being humbugged and who therefore took every unfair advantage that opportunity presented. They are now out of the business or else hanging on the ragged edge. They thought that they could "get by" with it, but they did not. They had to pay the penalty for every untrue statement and every unfair advantage.

Suppose a grocer shortweights the housewife. Will she continue her patronage with him or will she take it elsewhere? The answer is obvious. Likewise, if I speed up a show to the detriment of proper projection in order to turn the crowds in and out quickly I am shortweighting and I may justly expect the same fate as the dishonest grocer.

Must be Truthful to Win Respect.

I believe that I am one of the first exhibitors to have ever used the personal method of advertising. Using such method, my advertising must be reliable to be effective and I must be truthful if I hope to have the respect of the community. When I bill the appearance of a highly popular star in a warmed over reissue of a release of long ago I always offer it as such, and sometimes call attention to the contrast between the old and the new. If I am to show a picture that I know is not good for children, I make friends of the parents by advertising that fact. I have many times stated that the picture I was offering would probably prove a bore to many or that it was not up to the standard.

My effort to keep faith with the people has been pleasant and profitable to me. I know that my advertising is effective and I believe that the community regards me as a man of integrity. I think that the patronage I enjoy in my town is enduring. I am convinced that the Empress Theatre is regarded as highly respectable. And I know that these results are in very large measure due to my efforts to keep faith with the public.

HART COMPLETES LOAN FILM.

William S. Hart has completed his propaganda picture for the Fourth Liberty Loan and says it will be a real "thriller." "Why," remarked Bill, "even my Pinto pony emerged from retirement to take part—the first time he has appeared in a film since he was pensioned off. Once he has appeared in public for the Red Star—that's all." The picture runs about 500 feet and is a western subject, but every act and scene is a moving expression of the necessity of putting this loan over the top with a bang. Mr. Hart wrote the scenario and the plot is also his own. The film will be handled by the National Association Committee, of which Adolph Zukor is chairman.

Drucker in Medical Corps.

E. J. Drucker, former manager at General Film Company's St. Louis exchange, is now at Camp Greenleaf, Chickamauga Park, Georgia, having been inducted into the Medical Corps since his recent entrance into army life. His station is in Detention Camp, Bn 15, No. 10. In a letter to Sales Manager W. F. Rodgers of General, he reports camp life O. K. and his work as very interesting to him.

Garson Company Leaves for West Coast Studios

BLANCHE SWEET left August 24 for California, where she will start work immediately on "The Unpardonable Sin," by Hupert Hughes, a story which recently ran as a magazine serial and which has just been published in book form. The picture will be produced at the Sunset studio, which Harry Garson, under whose management Miss Sweet is now working, leased some six months ago, and which has been fully remodeled and enlarged.

In the meantime the various sets to be used in the picture have all been completed, and everything is in readiness waiting Miss Sweet's arrival. Her first picture, "The Hushed Hour," was completed before she left California. It has not been decided yet just how they will be released, but it is expected Mr. Garson will make this announcement soon. "The Unpardonable Sin" will be ready for release about October 15.

Among those who accompanied Miss Sweet westward were Marshall Neilan, who will personally direct "The Unpardonable Sin," and who has been appointed supervising director of all the Garson productions; Katharyne Stuart, who made the screen adaptation of "The Unpardonable Sin" and who is also responsible for "The Savage Woman" and other successes; Arthur Edeson, cameraman, and Bertha Fenwick, general auditor of the Garson enterprises.

JEWEL PUSHING SALES.

Jewel Productions has opened an intensive campaign among its exchanges to exploit current and forthcoming feature productions. It is the purpose of H. M. Berman, sales manager, to inaugurate a system of advertising and distribution that will take the last ounce of waste effort out of the company's operations, and to provide the last degree of help in every direction for the exchangemen.

As part of this plan, Hal Hodes, assistant sales manager, left last week on a tour of the exchanges, prepared to provide a special advertising program for each exchange executive. His task will be to pass enough time in each district to thoroughly educate the exchangemen on the new campaign, and also to get the benefit of the ideas they may have developed for their own needs.

Older Men Prepare for War.

Middle-aged men have their day in the films of war service that will be released September 20 in Universal's Screen Magazine. The scenes were produced by H. E. Hancock of the Y. M. C. A. and form a message of the way men of advanced years are rallying like young fellows to the needs of their country. Volunteers are shown going through the course of instruction and physical training provided by the Y. M. C. A. at its college at Lake Massasoit, Springfield, Mass. The day begins with lectures and singing. Then follow scientific games, boxing and swimming lessons. The men find to their own astonishment that they are pretty spry and have lots of "kick" left.

How Uncle Sam Reclaims Bullets.

How tons of bullet and shell fragments may be reclaimed in the future from the battleground of Europe is shown in scenes of the Universal Screen Magazine to be released September 13. The scenes are taken on the rifle range at Camp Logan, Texas, and show Captain E. A. Moreno, reclamation officer, and his men salvaging the bullets spent in rifle practice. The magazine also includes "A Bit of Japan in America," "Following the Hounds," "The Evolution of a Cough Drop," "Through Coney on High," and "Miracles in Mud," by Willie Hopkins, the sculptor.

Romantic Stories for Kerrigan.

That J. Warren Kerrigan has a host of admirers, who have been waiting for his appearance in high class feature pictures, has been proved to the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation by the way in which the exhibitors throughout the country are booking Hampton-Kerrigan pictures and their expressions of satisfaction.

It is the intention of Jesse D. Hampton, producer of Kerrigan pictures, to produce this popular star only in romantic stories of adventure with an occasional light comedy touch.

So far but four Warren Kerrigan features have been released through Hodkinson Service. "A Man's Man" and "The Turn of a Card" met with success, and the exhibitors waited impatiently for the star's recovery from the accident that laid him up for a year. Then came "One Dollar Bid" and "Burglar for a Night," Paralta pictures, to enjoy good business during the hot weather. Kerrigan's next, a J. D. Hampton production, "Prisoners of the Pines," promises to be different from anything he has done in a long time. It will be released September 16.

Lewis Joins Pathe Staff.

Randolph Lewis, well known in the motion picture business, has been added to the Pathe publicity staff by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc. Mr. Lewis becomes manager of the publicity department.

Mr. Lewis was formerly in the publicity and scenario departments of the Fox Film Corporation. Prior to that he was a New York newspaper man for a number of years, among his important engagements being that of editor of the Sunday Herald. He is a member of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers.

P. A. Parsons remains in general charge of the advertising, publicity and poster department, this being his sixth year in that capacity.

Mr. Lewis' engagement heralds a very active publicity campaign on the new Extra Selected Star Photoplays, the Special Features and "The Wolves of Kultur," the serial which, it has just been announced, will be released by Pathe.

Robinson Joins Gordon-Mayer.

The Gordon-Mayer Film Corporation, which is rapidly perfecting its organization, has signed George K. Robinson as sales manager and efficiency man. Mr. Robinson was formerly connected with Louis B. Mayer, but for the past four years has been with the Paramount offices in Boston. Mr. Robinson helped organize and place the Paramount on their present efficiency basis. He is fast putting the new Gordon-Mayer concern on a similar footing. His experience and reputation in New England places him in the leading ranks of film men.

H. Hirsch, who has been connected with the Mutual Film Corporation in Boston for many years, has resigned from that corporation and joined the forces of the Gordon-Mayer Corporation and of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Mr. Hirsch is favorably known in the entire New England territory, and will no doubt take a prominent part in distributing the coming Gaumont serial, "The Hand of Vengeance," which is to be distributed through the Gordon-Mayer Film Corporation.

No Conviction at Lexington.

Lexington, Ky.

LITIGANTS, lawyers and witnesses, filling several automobiles, journeyed to Justice Bodkin's court at Coletown, Ky., ten miles from Lexington, to hear the Sunday picture show cases against the employes of the Ben Ali Theatre as well as the proprietors, on August 22. The cases were to have been heard on August 15, but were postponed due to witnesses being absent. The cases were taken to Magistrate Bodkin after a number of Lexington magistrates refused to hear the cases, claiming that they were in favor of Sunday shows, or else were not satisfactory to members of the Churchmen's Federation, which is pushing the prosecution.

On August 22 a jury was obtained after considerable trouble, and the cases were opened on August 23. The principal witnesses were soldiers from Camp Buell, who testified that they were on duty from 5.30 o'clock in the morning until 6:30 o'clock at night, and that their only chance for recreation was on Sunday. The defense was based on the fact that picture shows are essential in war times, especially for soldiers, and that they cannot be classed as a violation of the old Blue Law statute, which prohibits unnecessary work on the Sabbath. A case was recently won on this contention at Lexington.

After examining many witnesses the jury was unable to reach a verdict, the jury of six men becoming hung with four for acquittal and two for conviction. No announcement has been made as yet concerning further prosecution.

Ruth Roland Hurt.

Ruth Roland, star of the Pathe serial "Hands Up," was painfully but not seriously injured during the filming of the eighth episode, according to a despatch from Los Angeles.

She was riding a blindfolded horse without saddle, bridle or reins. The horse, terrified at his helplessness, made a bolt for a cliff Unable to stop him Miss Roland threw herself from his back and was kicked and trampled upon. Some of the ligaments of her right leg were torn and the bones badly bruised. She was confined to her bed for a week from her injuries.

Heavy Demand for Weeklies.

Reports from Universal exchanges reveal that the various news weekly services are having enormous growth. The exchangemen declare there is scarcely a film theatre in the country now that does not run some sort of news pictorial on its programme every night.

It has become a task of great magnitude to supply the demand for news pictures and to cover the news through the camera's eye as fast as it happens. Jack Cohen, in charge of the department, believes he has a more colossal task than a feature film director.

Industry Needs Ideals, Say Hodkinson Producers

THAT the moving picture industry, in its present state, needs new ideas and ideals is the belief of producers whose output is distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Jesse D. Hampton, a producer who recently became allied with Hodkinson Service, making pictures starring J. Warren Kerrigan, recalls the fact that it was just three years ago that he first talked with Mr. Hodkinson about producing and found they both had the same ideas.

In a recent letter to Mr. Hodkinson, Mr. Hampton writes: "Through all the changes and turmoil of these three years I have retained my original viewpoint—that the business needs new ideas and more ideals, and that both are commercially possble with you at the head of a great distributing company. Your breadth of vision, ability, fairness and honesty will, of course, make for success

"I selected your organization because of my belief that the policy you have adopted for exhibitors will, in the long run, prove most satisfactory to all interests—exhibitors, distributor and producer."

Lester Park, president of the Lillian Walker Pictures Corporation, another Hodkinson producer, who has run the gamut of the industry from exhibiting to producing, is convinced that the Hodkinson plan is the only one so constructed as to gain genuine co-ordination between producer and exhibitor

Mr Park writes as follows: "I feel it would be a serious personal lapse to let the consummation of our contract for the distribution of eight Lillian Walker pictures pass without an expression of my satisfaction in having effected this releasing arrangement with you.

"As you know, I have been working for more than a year with exhibitors in an effort to develop some sort of practical co-operation between exhibitor and producer.

"When I say to you, therefore, as I do, that I believe your plan is the only logical business policy now before the industry that will gain genuine co-ordination between exhibitor and producer, I trust you will accept the assertion, not alone as a personal tribute, but as a plain statement of facts by one who has been in the closest touch with all the co-operative plans in the field.

"In placing the series of Lillian Walker pictures in your hands for distribution, therefore, it is my honest belief that I have not only served the interests of my own company best, but that I am doing 'my bit' along lines that have a most vital bearing on the interests of the exhibitors of the country as a whole."

many famous stars, having been starred in several Manhattan hits herself.

Miss Lyle is particularly well remembered for the excellence of her work as leading support with Louis Bennison in "Johnnie Get Your Gun," which play has been recently made into a picture by Fred Stone for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Previous to appearing with Mr. Bennison in this play, she played as principal support to Frank Craven in "This Way Out" and created the leading feminine role in the Morosco production, "Mile-a-Minute-Kendall."

Among the stars that Miss Lyle has been associated with as leading woman may be mentioned William Mackaye, John Barrymore and Thomas Wise.

Miss Lyle is in Hollywood, where she will appear in a spectacular motion picture production under the direction of George Foster Platt.

Canadian Exhibitors May Help a Most Worthy Cause

"Canada's Work for Wounded Soldiers," a five-reel serial showing the work that Canada is doing in the way of hospital treatment and vocational training for her wounded men, is open for booking free of charge to all Canadian exhibitors who care to ask for it. The film has been used quite extensively for educational purposes by the Federal Board of Vocational Training, a committee from which made a trip through Canada from coast to coast last May to study Canadian methods.

In order to make the serial as great a success as possible the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, which is issuing it, is furnishing publicity just as is provided for any feature film. The department's publicity branch is sending out posters, sets of photographs for lobby display, and special newspaper reading matter, which is sent directly to the newspapers. The reason for this is that the department can obtain greater co-operation and space from the newspapers by direct contact. In the smaller communities in particular letters are being sent to all prominent war workers asking them to secure locations for posters, and co-operate in every other way they may find practical.

The serial, which took eight months to complete, was photographed by W. J. Craft, who photographed "The Hazards of Helen," and who of late has been taking educational film for the Pathescope Company of Canada.

Rambles 'Round Filmtown

With WALTER K. HILL

Boosting Along a Good Thing.

FROM the pages of Amusements, Minneapolis, Minn., we clip the following pertinent and timely suggestion that looks toward the formation of some propaganda that will "prop." We quote:

You know the fellow who comes in and casts anchor at your desk and tells you how Baker is a failure, the railroad administration has fallen down, Hoover is a grafter, the coal trust is running Garfield, the wrong kind of ships are being built and President Wilson has been hoodwinked by the Shah of Persia.

The next time he comes in, put your fountain pen in his hand and your knee on his chest and make him sign this pledge:

THE ANTI-BELLYACHE SOCIETY

Unincorporated :: Offices Everywhere
No Dues :: No Offices :: No Annual Banquet :: Object: To Discourage
War-time Bellyaching
Emblem: Peppermint. Cure-all: Patriotism.

I Avow the Belief, That even I could not run this war and please everybody;

That war must necessarily interfere with some peaceful occupations and pursuits;

That all men should HELP as much as possible and complain as little as possible—that they should "'can' the bellyache."

Therefore, I hereby join the Anti-bellyache Society and thus becoming an A-b (Anti-bellyacher) I pledge myself: To refrain (so far as possible) from and to discourage bellyaching for the term of the war; to get new members whenever possible; to impose on myself a fine, payable to the American Red Cross, for each bellyache of which I may be guilty.

Misunderstandings, typographical errors and a host of other everyday excuses are offered to cover the fact that in recent stories and advertisements of "The Common Cause," J. Stuart Blackton's forthcoming war production to be distributed by Vitagraph, the actor was identified by the name, Philip H. Van Lorn. Hence, this correction.

Van Loan, who plays the poilu in this feature, which is under the auspices of the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission, has had an eventful career, which began in Amsterdam, Holland, his birthplace. His first film engagement was with the Great Northern Co., in Copenhagen, Denmark. In this country he has played leads and heavies, and also directed many notable productions.

Puzzling the Picture Fans.

For a long time before William S. Hart, as "Riddle Gawne," began circulating the producers of pictures have been puzzling the fans. For instance:

"Riddle of the Green Umbrella" (Kalem).
"The Riddle of the Silk Stockings" (Imp).
"The Riddle of the Tin Soldier" Kalem).
And

Suggestions for same are now in order.

Ryskind's Rhymed Review.

BELIEVING that this stuff is too good to be confined to the free and unlimited coinage of Progress-Advance circulation, we copy Morrie Ryskind's snappy comment, in worse than verse, on Pauline Frederick's presentation of "Fedora."

A tale one cannot help but liking:
So pepperful it will not bore a
Blase roue, the plot's so striking;
And so's Miss Frederick as "Fedora."

She is engaged to Vladimir
A Russian Count of No-account.
(Excuse us, but we know you'll cheer
To learn the film's a Paramount.)

But Vladimir is really "nuts"
On Mr. Ipanoff's young wife.
So Ip cuts the "ifs" and "buts",
Vlad took his wiff—he takes Vlad's life.

Fedora says she'll get the guy
Provided she has zip enough.
But finds—so Fate hands us the lie—
That she is gone on Ipanoff.

And when she hears the how and why,
And learns that Vlad is just a cad;
She says, "I'll stick through thin and thick
With Ip!"—and so she does, begad!

Music for the Picture

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON

Synchronizing Your Music Score Means Perfect Feature Fitting

THE slowly progressing evolutions in picture playing are bringing forth the quintessence of musical art to add to the beauties of the screened drama. There have been eras as distinctive in picture music as those which marked musical history.

First, we had the "slappity-bang" noise created by piano and drums operated by alleged musicians. Because musically inclined people shunned the "movies" of that day, it mattered little whether the racket fitted the scenes or not. It was only another feature to use in the "bally-hoo" of the loud-lunged lout who called for patrons to his species of side-show. When something new had to be found, the illustrated songs were added to the puerile program, but its accompaniment remained as vile as before.

Hanging tenaciously to the edge of precipitous ruin, pictures pulled themselves not only to safety over the ledge, but to prominence. Cultured people perceived its claim to merit as clean entertainment and began to patronize the "movies."

This was the beginning of the second era or transition in the realm of picture music. Catering to the better classes meant providing real music and small orchestras took the place of the erstwhile piano-drums combination. The orchestra played music chosen while the picture was being screened. There was no attempt to suit the situations, but dreamy, sweet, popular melodies lulled the people into a pleasant frame of mind.

Picture producers saw the possibilities in music and brought on the third period by providing cue sheets for the orchestra leader. These gave the cues to start a certain kind of musical effusion, and served the purpose of portraying the emotions of the scene depicted. Of course, the first few were weird indeed, viewed in the light of later advancement, but they served the purpose in that they taught the musician to analyze his picture.

Then came the call for musical scores, specially synchronized and arranged to minutely interpret every inch of the film. The plan proved successful beyond the most rosy expectations and the producers clamored for composers. Scores by the hundreds were arranged and sent the exchanges. Here they remained, for the exchanges employed no musicians to handle that department. Some exhibitors received the benefit of them by insistent demand, but, in the large majority of cases, they were blissfully ignorant of the new method of enhancing a picture. No publicity was given the movement and it drifted into spasmodic and sporadic attempts. The light dimmed into fickle flickerings and is still flickering.

In the meantime, the playing of pictures generally has advanced upon the basis of the cue sheet. Although it is well-nigh impossible to cue a picture and provide at one and the same time suitability and synchrony, the cue sheets have materially helped the leader to offer an adequate accompaniment. Until recently, he has not attempted to synchronize his music to the picture, feeling that the obstacles were insurmountable.

We have now reached what might be called the Synchrony Era. All the larger theatres make it a special feature of their settings. The Rialto and Rivoli orchestras in New York have brought this point to a very high standard. Not only is the musical setting synchronized for the feature picture, but the Pictorial Review and the Scenic receive just as careful treatment. The pleasure derived by the auditors is thus materially increased. There is no breaking of phrases, no harsh clashes of extraneous keys. Every number fits the situation upon the screen, each theme is clearly defined, and, as the curtain rings down upon the picture, one feels that the music has been cohesive and coherent.

What does it mean? Nothing if not a perfect score. The musical setting, cued from the picture, chosen from standard numbers in the musician's library, carefully cut to fit the length of scene, becomes a musical score perfectly synchronized. Thus, while the light may flicker with the producer, the exhibitor is feeding it oil and making strong the flame of art.

There can be only one ultimate result. It may come in some unusual form. It may be that the time is not yet, but sooner or later, the photoplay must carry with it a musical score to make it appealing to the smaller exhibitor. The larger theatres have facilities for providing their own scores and are utilizing them. This straw shows which way the wind blows.

Oh, for a prophetic vision to see the wonders of the music of the future! Filmcraft developed to the highest degree and enveloped in musical beauty, what a combination! A clean, educational, artistic form of entertainment to recreate the body, mind and morals! Let's all strive for it!

The secret of synchrony lies not so much in the careful timing of the selections as in the accurate judgment of the musical director. Music need not be cut up to fit the situations, but if care be taken in the finishing of phrases the musical setting becomes cohesive, one complete whole that conveys to the audience that sense of unity so essential to plot portrayal.

An Open Letter to the Photoplay Musicians.

ALL we can say to the many letters of congratulation is the time-worn yet time-honored THANK YOU. "Music for the Pictures" has found itself and in its enlargement is finding every leader in the country.

We have received more kind words from musicians than would seem possible. Space does not permit us to publish these letters at present, but, from time to time, we expect to print some of them.

Boys, we sincerely appreciate your hearty co-operation and take pleasure in dedicating these columns to the picture playing musicians of America. It is a delight to note the deep interest taken in our work and we can assure you all, that it is an incentive to greater endeavor.

This portion of the Moving Picture World belongs to you and your interests, and we are depending upon you to assist us in making it the success for which we all hope. Without your hearty support, it will lose its usefulness and become of no value to you nor to ourselves. From the spontaneous response elicited upon the first issue, we know that you appreciate its merit and believe in its service facilities. This is a fine beginning. We want to hear from all the leaders, organists, and piano players in the country.

We do not aim to please ourselves nor strive to glorify our name. We want to help you solve the problems of picture playing, keep you abreast of the times, and serve you with implements of warfare—the cue sheets. We court constructive criticism and welcome your suggestions. Nothing gives us more pleasure than to be called into consultation.

Again thanking those who have been so kind in their felicitations and assuring you of our deep interest in the personal welfare of each, we are,

Yours musically,
GEORGE W. BEYNON.

Votichenko Dedicates New Composition.

The eminent Russian musician, Sacha Votichenko, who is said to be the only exponent of the tympanon, which used to be such a popular instrument in the days of King Louis XIV, has dedicated his new series of Russian and Polish folk lore to Madame Petrova. These selections are now being arranged for full orchestra, and will be played between the acts when Madame Petrova returns to the speaking stage in October. She is to appear in a new play by herself and W. E. Roberts, author of "Dwellers in Glass Houses" and other successful productions on the English stage.

Rialto Theatre Turns To Oratorio Solos.

We have heard ballads, mushy and touching; popular songs, patriotic melodies, classic effusions, and grand operatic arias, but it remained for the Rialto to introduce oratorio selections. You may think that the theatre is no place for sacred song, but had you heard the enthusiastic reception accorded Lorrie Grimaldi, a basso, singing "Shall I In Mamre's Fertile Plain" from Joshua, your opinion would be altered.

Stepping quietly upon the stage, in a dim light, and accompanied only by the organ, Mr. Grimaldi rendered this famous bass solo in a most acceptable manner. It is true his diction was a bit faulty and his enunciation rather poor, yet his interpretation and cantabile style won the hearts of the audience.

The overture, American Fantasie, played by the Rialto Orchestra and conducted by Nat Finston, proved pleasing. The fact that it was not finished, but blended into the march which opened the Animated Weekly made it more interesting. This method robs the director of merited applause, but has the advantage of carrying the show along more briskly.

The musical opening to "The Hun Within," a feature of intense dramatic value, was, to say the least, surprising. Light and of popular trend, it naturally gave the impression that we were to see a comedy drama. The early part of the picture was very light in character and that may have excused the bright introduction, but in view of the fact that the introduction was changed immediately after the characters had been listed and another light intermezzo took its place, we believe that a heavy dramatic prelude would have proved more effective. At least it would create the proper atmosphere and afford a splendid contrast.

The playing of selections from "You're in Love" was very "draggy," making the number altogether too long for comfort. Portions of it were delightful and the trio arrangement of the theme for 'cello, harp and organ was exceptionally well done. Mention might be made of the lighting effects.

The comedy and organ solo closed the bill. At the organ consul George Crook offered a "Concert Overture in C Minor" by Hollins in a manner that clearly placed George in the foreground of the picture organists. He is good and will become one of the greatest organists in the industry.

Popular Song Featured at the Broadway.

To the strains of "March Slave," by Tschaikowski, played by The Broadway Concert Orchestra, we were ushered by the prettiest lady to a cool and secluded seat. We liked the overture in its interpretation and rendition generally, but the drummer annoyed us. He seems to hold a grudge against the famous Russian composer, for he banged the daylights out of his timpani evidently from sheer cussedness. This was not nice of him. Besides, it spoiled the pleasure of the auditors.

While passing, it might be noted that this aggregation of men are known and programmed as a Concert Orchestra. This speaks well for the management in this day when three pieces are loudly heralded as a Symphony Orchestra. And it must be remembered that the orchestra comprises sufficient men to play symphonic works.

The organ solo, programmed as "The Courts of Jamshyd," was not played. Something else must have been substituted or our memory of melodies is playing us a trick. Mr. Johnston is a good man at the consul and the people appreciated whatever he was playing. The fact that he did not finish it seemed to make little difference.

The best thing on the bill was the singing of the popular song, "As Washington Crossed The Delaware, So Pershing Will Cross The Rhine." The gentleman who perpetrated this number lays no claim to artistry, but his enunciation was clear and his voice pleasing. During the song, two tableau effects, emblematic of the two periods—1776 and 1918—were given with beautiful lightings. The first showed Washington and his little band as they crossed the Delaware River, while the second displayed Pershing leading his heroes in Hunland. It was well staged and most effective.

"Crashing Through to Berlin" proved interesting from the picture standpoint, but disappointing from the musical angle. After a feature has been run a week, there should be no excuse for non-synchrony. The sudden breaks and crashes are things of by-gone days in picture setting and those who carelessly persist in offering poorly synchronized scores mark themselves as antiquated.

The use of Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance," filled with hope and triumph, was hardly warranted in the scene depicting the ruins of Louvain, nor could there be any justification in playing The Marseillaise only part way through. We are proud of France and her warlike achievements and we are glad to pay her just homage when the strains of The Marseillaise are heard, but consider it bad taste and in the nature of an insult to be left sheepishly standing as the number is suddenly broken off in the middle. If played at all, it should be finished, and there was ample time to do so in view of the long sub-title immediately following the scene.

There were many parts of the picture that received a musical interpretation that could not be excelled and with but a few more minor exceptions—such as sixteen bars from the "Hallelujah Chorus," introduced by the organist for the apparent purpose of showing that he knew it—the music fitted. An educational picture is always hard to set, and this feature is especially difficult, so that we must not be too hard on it.

Mr. M. Kashin, who now has charge of the destinies of The Broadway, shows his showmanship in his wonderful lobby displays, his artistic stage settings and house lightings. No doubt the music will improve and we look for big things from The Broadway in the future.

Mr. George W. Beynon,
Musical Editor,

My dear Mr. Beynon:

Congratulations to you on your success in making "Music for The Pictures" of special and greater interest to those of us who are engaged in this important line of work, as shown in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, issue of August 31. Speaking for myself, I must say that you have made a decided acquisition in the interests of good music for the Picture and I am sure that my fellow musicians will all appreciate with me the value of this important addition to the journal, which should make it an incentive to all who are earnest in their desire to raise the musical standard and make it what it should be, namely: a source of pleasure and inspiration to the listener and a real help to the subject presented on the screen.

You have my best wishes for your continued success in the noble work which you have undertaken, this first issue of which reflects great credit on your efforts and good judgment.

With regards to you, I remain,
Very truly yours,
ARTHUR EDWARD JONES,
Theatre and Concert Organist.

"Dixie" Adopted as a Southern War Song.

One Saturday night in 1859, Daniel Decatur Emmett, a member of the famous Bryant Minstrels, was told that a new "Walk-Around" was wanted before Monday's rehearsal. He attempted it the following day, but the inspiration was lacking. Going to the window and gazing discontentedly out on a down-pour of rain, his thoughts reverted to the Sunny South. He sighed and, turning to his wife, murmured: "I wish I was in Dixie." This expression was a favorite one with the troupe when enduring the Northern winters. As the exclamation passed his lips, he knew he had stumbled on the inspiration he had needed. He seized his violin and soon had the melody worked out.

The song was enthusiastically greeted wherever it was heard. It really had no connection with the war. But it was chosen as a catchy piece to be played at the inauguration of Jefferson Davis. It made a distinct hit and was adopted as a Southern propaganda song. Several war writers tried to change the lyrics so they would have some bearing on the Southern cause, but their efforts did not meet with popular favor and Emmett's words became universal favorites.

Emmett was a Northern man and his sympathies were always with the North. He came of a line of warriors, his grandfather having fought in the Revolution and his father in the war of 1812. For himself, he gave his services to his country in the civil war, going as a player of the fife and later taking up the drum. Yet the simple little song, which has been called the most original of all American national songs, came near being his undoing among his Northern friends. In Secession days, the song was branded as a rebel song, and one editor went so far as to attack Emmett in his paper. A rather amusing story, showing the bitterness and narrowness of the period, is related: It seems that when Emmett was traveling in the South he visited the grave of Stonewall Jackson. Being a very warm day, the old man removed his hat to wipe his brow. The papers made much of the incident and dilated at length on how Daniel Decatur Emmett stood with his head bared and wept at the grave of the Southern general.

What is fame? Surely not monetary gain. During eighty years of honesty, frugality and piety, for Emmett was intensely religious, his returns as a composer amounted to only a very few dollars and obscurity in a little Western town. The man who had the ability to write "Old Dan Tucker" at the age of fifteen and who had the creative talent in a marked degree, could not commercialize his faculty. In his old age, he crept back to Mount Vernon, Ohio, his birthplace, and made his home in a tiny cabin on the outskirts of the town. Here he eked out a scanty living by raising chickens and tilling a garden. A small annuity from the Actor's Fund was a great source of comfort and joy to him.

When he was 79 years old, a minstrel manager conceived the idea that the old gentleman might still be useful as a figurehead in a show. Accordingly he traced Mr. Emmett to the little town where he had become practically lost to the world. Upon inquiry, he was given the following information: "Yes, Dan Emmett lives here. But he never wrote 'Dixie' nor anything else." "A prophet is not without honor—save in his own country."

The artistry of picture playing truly indicates the personality of the leader. Don't offer a slovenly performance, for by it you will be judged.

REMARKS	The dramatic suggestions should be carefully followed out to interpret the picture.

One swallow does not mean a summer or a meal, and, by the same token, one excellent performance sandwiched in, once in a while, does not indicate good picture playing.

Questions Answered—Suggestions Offered

Questions Answered—Suggestions Offered.

Q. CAN you tell me if Herman Rodeheaver, the singer, plays the slide trombone? We have had some discussion on the matter and are referring the decision to you.

A. I suppose you have reference to the gentleman who led the music in the Billy Sunday revival meetings. Mr. Rodeheaver plays the trombone and, as a matter of fact, used it in the services. Just at the present time, you may be interested to know, he is in New York on his way to France. He intends to lead the boys in singing at the meetings in the Y. M. C. A. huts and in the dugouts when the soldiers are resting at the front.

Q. I have played and sung Burleigh's compositions for some years. I have received great enjoyment and inspiration from them, but know nothing about the composer. I am told he is a colored man. Is that correct? Can you tell me something of his life?

A. Harry Thacker Burleigh, the negro singer and composer about whom you ask, is a very remarkable man and an honor to any race, colored or white. He was born in Erie, Pa., in 1867. He studied singing and sang in the church choirs of his native city. In 1892, through the kindness and aid of Mrs. MacDowell, he competed for and won a scholarship to the National Conservatory of Music. Anton Dvorak was at the head of the institution. Burleigh was indefatigable in his studies and paid his way by singing during his vacations. He also aided Dvorak by copying orchestral parts. Later he taught voice for two years at the conservatory. He has toured America and Europe in concert work, being especially famed for his interpretation of his negro melodies.

Q. I happened to notice in a back number of The Moving Picture World one of your answers to a correspondent promising him with names of non-union players. Will you give me the names of several first-class musicians for cornet, drums, 'cello, clarinet, flute and violin. I prefer women.

A. Our space does not permit us to give this very personal information. We answer here only questions that we feel will be of general benefit. Send us a more complete address and we will be glad to help you out of your difficulty in a personal letter.

Q. I take the liberty of writing to you introducing myself as a competent violinist and orchestra leader. I have been in my present position for several years, but feel that there is no chance for advancement here. Could you give me, in your Leader's Service Bureau, the address of a good theatre where my services would be appreciated? I have advertised in my union paper, but regret to state that I have not had any results.

A. We are always glad to do all we can for our brother musicians and hope they will feel free to put their problems before us. At present we know of no one needing the services of a conductor. When we do we will gladly write you. It is not at all surprising that you did not obtain results from an advertisement in your fraternal organ. It could not be anything but abortive, for it only reaches your brother musicians, who are doubtless also looking to better their condition and could not have any situation to offer. We are of the opinion that an ad among the classified ones in our department is what you need. It affords you an excellent medium of coming in contact with the exhibitor who needs a musician. This applies to a great many musicians who have written us to the same effect as you have done. If one has anything to sell, even time, one must bring it before the purchaser.

Q. I am an orchestra leader in a small town where union wages are low, and working hours long. To add insult to injury, we are forced to play in a pit having a cement floor. Of course you know what that means—instruments always out of tune, damp feet and continual layoffs for sickness. What should I do?

A. The expense of laying a board flooring over the cement would be small. Your house manager will doubtless be glad to have it done if the matter is presented to him in the right way. But if he refuses to do so you could do it and save the expense in doctors' bills alone. Besides, it creates a sounding board which enhances the general ensemble of the orchestra.

Q. The instrument that I have studied for many years is the organ. I believe I could make good in a picture house which contains a large one. Thus far I have been unable to obtain a hearing. I understand there is some objection to engaging Canadians in the States, although not of military age. Can you help me?

A. There seems to be a strong disinclination to accepting a Canadian for a position in the United States in view of the fact that the average American believes the fair dominion to be a wilderness inhabited only by the ignorant and the Indians. We lived there for several years. We know better and hope that our influence may be sufficiently strong to secure you what you desire.

Q. I have been a close reader of your Music Department and find it a great help. I fully agree with you that an orchestra should consist of only first-class men. We have had one of the best small orchestras in this part of the country for a number of years, but have lost a couple of our men on account of the war. We would like to know if you can supply us or put us in touch with a clarinet and flute player. As we have the only orchestra in the city our men can, if they wish, make considerable money with extra work which does not interfere with their playing.

A. We thank you for your kind words of encouragement, and assure you that our efforts are aimed toward the best possible service to the exhibitor and his orchestra leader. Regarding your request for a clarinet and flute player, we have our lines out for such instrumentalists as you mention. We hope to be able to give you the addresses of some good prospects in the near future.

HONOR ROLL

"ROSES OF PICARDY"

By

HAYDN WOOD

Published by Chappell & Co.
New York

This beautiful song surely lends itself to screened action. It is sweet, catchy and wonderful as a theme. Just off the press, it should be welcomed by every musical director.

Provost Marshall General Amends Ruling.

After considerable diversity of opinion regarding the "Work or Fight" law, subdivision C of section 121 K, selective service regulations, has been amended to read as follows:

"Persons, including ushers and other attendants, engaged and occupied in and in connection with games, sports and amusements, excepting owners and managers, actual performers, including musicians in legitimate concerts, operas, motion pictures, or theatrical performances and the skilled persons who are necessary to such productions, performances or presentations."

This amendment seems clearly comprehensable and there should be no further misunderstanding relative to the status of picture players. Musicians engaged in the theatres devoted to screen dramas receive the same recognition that orchestras enjoy in playing for vaudeville or legitimate concerts. And why not? Is not the form of entertainment equally important?

It strikes us that unless the musicians get together either in a fraternal body or a special union they are going to lose prestige and fail to gain that necessary recognition which will make for the betterment of conditions.

After all, that Picture Player's Club is not a bad idea and should receive some consideration for the mutual benefit of the "movie" musicians.

Sues Galli-Curci for Auto Injury.

Amelia Galli-Curci, grand opera singer, has been sued in the Supreme Court for damages, because her automobile ran down Benjamin J. Mendelssohn on July 16 last through the alleged negligence of the driver. This fact became known yesterday when Pauline Mendelssohn, mother of the plaintiff, was named by Supreme Court Justice Ford to bring suit in his behalf.—New York Times.

Shades of Mendelssohn! Oft has thy name been linked with operatic stars, but never in suits for damages, though frequently thou hast had good grounds.

Spokes From The Hub

By Marion Howard

IT was my pleasure to meet Doris Kenyon and her mother at a dinner party recently. They came from Nova Scotia where they went on a holiday, and while here the young star made a personal appearance at the Park Theatre which took the initiative in giving us "The Street of Seven Stars." Theodore Deitrich, president of De Luxe Corporation, distributing Miss Kenyon's offerings, was along. About the picture? Well it might be shortened a bit here and there, as some of the action is too prolonged and unnecessary. Miss Kenyon is adorable on and off the screen, and so we anticipate her next picture, now issued, "The Inn of the Blue Moon." Why do they inject graveyard scenes? The one here was a blot, also the cabin scene. There was good snow stuff and plenty of action, but too long drawn out. Thomas Soriero, who engineers the social act, when the stars come over to appear, invited a few to meet Miss Kenyon, who made a big hit with us all.

At last we get Frank Keenan in a genuine comedy called "More Trouble." Great picture for the "tired business man" and average fan. Surely they did pile it up on old Deering, when it came to trouble. John Gilbert, the son, gave us a pleasant surprise, and how the house roared over the final words of dad about the college secret society, which he called the "Eta Bita Pie Bros." Guess the title editor must have had a day off, for we got "avalance." Helen Dunbar, the dignified, once with Bushman-Bayne pictures, had a good part as a society snob.

Oh that I could write more frequently, in order to do justice to many really fine pictures seen day by day. "The Danger Mark"—there's a play, with a purpose, showing a taint in the blood and how to overcome it. Elsie Ferguson, in a previous picture, enacted the intoxicated, and we did not like to see her that way; but here, with the motive shown at the start, it was different. Did you notice how greatly she resembled Julia Marlowe in her early days? It was startling in the bed scene. At this theatre—the Exeter—we had two pictures with "Adventure" in the title—one "The Glorious," the other "The Successful" and these words fit both, as to production and treatment. The first a Goldwyn with Mae Marsh, the other a Metro for May Allison—safe to book any time.

"The Ordeal of Rosetta," with Alice Brady, is great. We liked every bit of it. Also "Sandy," with Jack Pickford, but not in any way his best. "The House of Mirth" of course went well, especially with the highbrows, because of the author and theme, to say nothing of the presence of Katherine Harris Barrymore. She seemed cold at first, but warmed up to the part. Edward Abeles was simply awful in his attempts to be funny and caddish, at same time.

"A Pair of Sixes," with the inimitable Maude Eburne and Taylor Holmes, was some comedy and far better than the stage version. On the same day I saw another pair—a "Pair of Cupids"—mighty good for Bushman and Bayne, and it got a hand too. Also "Back to the Woods," admirable for Mabel Normand. Why "Other Men's Daughters"?, a sensational picture in which Peggy Hyland does not fit. A Fox picture.

Among the pictures difficult to enthuse over, from my point of view, are "Marked Cards," a melodrama with no new features—same old rehash without a lesson in any of it; "Daddy's Girl," the first poor picture to feature little Marie Osborne, who is getting quite plump, by the way. Here we again get the colored kid, who was immense in the circus stunt.

"The Grain of Dust" is too long by a reel or so, and but for Lillian Walker's personal popularity and presence the play would not get over so well. There are strong situations and the critics seem to like it. One thing certain, it is a fine dramatization of David Graham Phillips' book. Ramsay Wallace was very fine in a rather difficult and contradictory part, and the young things round me thought him "simply great."

Marguerite Clark scores heavily in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," played to crowded houses everywhere here. We have seen many doubles, but, with the exception of Mary Pickford's "Stella Maris," nothing has been so perfectly portrayed, for there was no resemblance between the impersonations. We were glad to note that some of the harrowing incidents in the book were softened. "Jack" Johnston made a capital Legree and Frank Losee an ideal Uncle Tom. Fine picture, and educational in a way for the rising generation, as the "lead-up" to the Civil War is better understood.

Among picture players in town are May Robson in a play opening the Hollis Street Theatre for the season; Edward Abeles at the Wilbur; Raymond Hitchcock at the Colonial and Maud Odell here in "Maytime" and renewing many pleasant acquaintances. She is a member of the Professional Women's Club and is working with it Tuesdays doing Red Cross Work. Her play is on for a run and she finds time to look in at the picture houses.

For the life of me I don't see why all theatres do not run the O. Henry stories, as they are virile, have an appeal, differing in theme always, and with ever the real punch and clutch at the close. I quite agree with an eminent managing director that they are a credit to the industry, yet I have to go out of my way frequently to see them, but not one would I miss. The reliable Vitagraph company picks from its capable players a strong cast, and no pictures hold the house better than these. A Vitagraph picture of this brand is "One Thousand Dollars," put on at the Fenway with Edward Earle, Florence Deshon and Templer Saxe. Light comedy, with dramatic features worth while and of course distinctly original in plot. Another Vitagraph of a different order is "Love's Watches," an attempted French farce with old stuff. Corrine Griffith is rather good to look at, and how she did struggle with this offering!

"Merely Players," with stunning Kitty Gordon, Pinna Nesbit, Muriel Oestriche, Johnnie Hines and Irving Cummings in support, we liked over here and I went twice to see it. New ideas well worked out, pretentious interiors, classy all through, with a little lesson for those who aspire to the footlights. Cummings made a dandy critic, and he was right, too, it seems. Naturally, Kitty wore some fine clothes and it strikes me she is better in this picture than in any seen this year. A woman back of me exclaimed: "Goodness me! how does she escape pneumonia?"—you know to what she referred. Glad to note that Mrs. L. Case Russel wrote the scenario—her very best.

Well "The Safety Curtain" had action enough for three pictures, and wasn't the fire scene a thriller! And wasn't Anders Randolph some heavyweight villain! Norma Talmadge had an opportunity to display her emotion ability. Barring the very convenient planting of Puck's former hubby—the aforesaid Anders—in a faraway land where the hero and heroine were, the plot seemed convincing enough, but it took skill on the part of Director Franklin to keep up the tension. Eugene O'Brien, who is rather hectic in his love scenes usually, held himself well in check in this until the right moment. Good picture for Select and a safe one to show anywhere.

What a cast in "We Can't Have Everything" and what a dear young thing Wanda Hawley is with her bewitching ways and blonde tresses! No wonder two men "fell for her." Kathlyn Williams, Elliott Dexter, Theodore Roberts, Raymond Hatton, Tully Marshall, Sylvia Breamer and Thurston Hall—some combination. Well-directed picture, under the only Cecil B. DeMille, lot of new situations and a pretty wedding at the end, to say nothing of a big fire, with Roberts doing the comedy stunt, making this a sure to be popular offering for Artcraft.

Charles Ray's name is enough to call the fans out, so we went to see "The Claws of the Hun." Very strong picture, timely and splendidly done. A woman near me actually fainted when the torture scene was on, so natural was it, but I for one do not care for this sort of stuff. Ray is dependable, but we like him best in different characterizations, like "The Coward," for instance, his first success, the play of the war of '661 period, with Frank Keenan as the patriot father. Melbourne MacDowell was in the cast of the new picture, playing the father with the invalid-slacker wife, who repented. This seems a very big thing if one is not tired of German spy biz.

PICKER SECURES ANOTHER HOUSE

David V. Picker, a master strategist in the photoplay world, has once again stormed the picture trenches and come forth with a most decisive "Victory." It was formerly known as Miner's Bronx, situated at 156th street and Third avenue, but because it is considered a vantage point of great importance, he has renamed it the Victory theatre. The opening date was Saturday, August 31, and for the first week he secured as an attraction "Ashes of Love," written and directed by Ivan Abramson, produced by the Graphic Film Corporation, with James K. Hackett, Effie Shannon and Mabel Juliene Scott as the stars and Ruby de Remer, Paula Shay, William B. Davidson, Hugh Thompson, Dora Mills Adams, Thea Talbott and William Bechtel in the cast.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

First National Announces Five Big Productions

THE coming two months will be momentous ones in the history of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit owing to the number of important releases that are scheduled for presentation in first-run houses during that time. The First National has listed five super-features that seem good for exceptional runs in every instance.

"Romance of Tarzan," sequel to "Tarzan of the Apes," will be released September 16. A comprehensive advertising and publicity campaign is now under way to assure this production of adequate exploitation. It is safe to say that every theatre that booked the first of these big jungle novelties will be eager to play the sequel, which is said to be even stronger from a dramatic standpoint.

Charlie Chaplin's second million-dollar comedy, "Shoulder Arms," is now being cut and assembled under the personal supervision of the comedian himself, and will undoubtedly be released on or before October 1. It has not been definitely decided the exact length in which the production will be distributed, but in any event exhibitors can look for the most telling work of Chaplin's entire career set off against a war-time back ground that simply abounds in novel thrills and patriotic pep.

Mme. Petrova's fifth picture made under her own management, entitled "The Panther Woman" will be shown in first-run houses about two weeks later. The personal tour which Mme. Petrova has just completed in First National theatres has increased the box office value of her productions to such an extent that it is predicted "The Panther Woman" will overtop all other features she has made up to date in actual drawing power.

Anita Stewart's initial appearance under the joint auspices of Louis B. Mayer and the First National will take place, according to present predictions, about October 1. The production in which Miss Stewart will first be presented has not been definitely decided upon, but will undoubtedly be the dramatization of one of the most popular novels of the day. George Loane Tucker has begun work upon this production, and the combination of star and director should guarantee exceptional box office possibilities.

Alice Brady Plays in Government Film.

Lieut. Edward H Griffith, War Department, U. S. A., attached to the commission on training camp activities, who is directing the Government's forthcoming propaganda film, "The End of the Road," spent several days with his company at the Paragon studios last week where one of Alice Brady's Select pictures is being filmed. Miss Brady gladly consented to be "borrowed" for several of the scenes. These fitted in with the script of "The End of the Road," so it was an easy matter to "plant" the principals in the Government picture among the extras of the Brady company. Miss Brady herself consented to play an important part in a very unsympathetic role, which few screen stars would have cared to essay.

This latest of the Government's propaganda pictures which Mr. Griffith is directing is part of the Government's fight to keep camp communities clean physically and morally. The company includes Richard Bennett, who will be remembered for his work in "Damaged Goods" and "The Very Idea"; Sergeant Raymond McKee, who played in "The Unbeliever"; Robert Cain and Arthur Housman. The picture will be released under the authority of Surgeon-General Gorgas, and will follow "Fit to Fight," the Government's earlier picture on the same subject.

Blackton Stars at Strand.

Huntley Gordon's last screen appearance before he is seen in J. Stuart Blackton's super-feature, "The Common Cause," which is to be distributed by the Vitagraph Company, is in the leading role opposite Ethel Barrymore in "Our Mrs. McChesney," at the Strand this week. Mr. Gordon is the third of the trio of principal players in Commodore Blackton's production, which features Herbert Rawlinson and Sylvia Breamer.

Mr. Rawlinson's last appearance before the advent of "The Common Cause" is as leading man in "The Turn of a Wheel," with Geraldine Farrar, booked for the Strand the week of September 1.

Miss Breamer is also well known to Broadway photoplay audiences, particularly for her work in Commodore Blackton's recent release, "Missing," which Mr. Rothapfel gave an impressive presentation at the Rialto.

Good Reports from "Triple Trouble."

Contracts for the new Essanay Charlie Chaplin picture, "Triple Trouble," are pouring in faster every day, according to the George Kleine distributing system. Many theatres, after showing the picture, have made arrangements for second, third and even fourth runs of the comedy. W. C. Patterson, manager of the Criterion Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., after screening the picture, booked it for a six days' run, and afterward wrote, "second, third and fourth runs will be taken care of as suggested."

Exhibitors who have run the picture have reported that it has drawn unusual crowds and that everyone has been pleased.

Eugenie Ford in Strand Comedies.

Eugenie Ford, the well known character lead who has appeared with Billie Rhodes in Strand Comedies, is now appearing with Elinor Field, the seventeen-year-old school girl who is now playing in Strand-Mutual comedies.

Miss Ford's years of experience on both the speaking stage and before the screen have endowed her with mannerisms and an individuality that serves her well in the comedy roles she interprets.

Eugenie Ford will be well remembered among Mutual customers for her work in "The Diamond from the Sky," an important feature production with William Russell and Mary Miles Minter.

Two Striking Scenes from "The Romance of Tarzan" (First National).

Hale Hamilton,
Metro's newest star, whose first picture will be an adaptation of George Randolph Chester's popular novel, "Five Thousand an Hour."

Buck's Story, "Her Man," Leads Pathe September 8

ELAINE HAMMERSTEIN, in "Her Man," a six-reel special feature, picturized by John E. Ince from Charles Neville Buck's novel, "The Battle Cry," heads a notable program, which Pathe announces will be released the week beginning Sunday, September 7. It was produced by the Advance Motion Picture Corporation, and directed by Ralph W. Ince.

Who is the Phantom Rider in "Hands Up," the popular Pathe serial featuring Ruth Roland? This question, asked again and again, is repeated as the mystery deepens and the perils increase in the fourth episode, "The Phantom Trail," released September 8.

Toto, the versatile cinema clown-comedian, will be seen in one of the trickiest of these Rolin comedies, released by Pathe on September 8.

The Post Travel Series, released by Pathe on the same day, presents its thirteenth subject, "Georgetown, British Guinana."

"All for Liberty," the eleventh of the Official War Review, shows the great accomplishments of the Allies, and is a demonstration that the standard bearers of democracy are in it until a peace "with an irreducible minimum" has been gained. It is released on September 8.

"Hick Manhattan," a Rube Story.

It has often been said that New York City is the greatest rube town in America, and James Montgomery Flagg, in his first Paramount-Flagg comedy, "Hick Manhattan," released September 1, attempts to prove it. The story is about one Flo Donahoe, a pretty, but somewhat poverty-stricken, young dancer who, like thousands of others, has failed to make good in the great city.

The role of Flo is played by the noted Broadway beauty and Follies star, Peggy Hopkins, who will be remembered by film fans for her splendid work as the bride in the former Flagg series, "Girls You Know," while Olin Howland, well-known comedian of the stage and screen, plays the part of McGinty. Martin Justice directed the comedy.

Affiliated to Distribute "Lafayette, We Come"

THE Affiliated Distributors' Corporation announces that it has secured Leonce Perret's patriotic motion picture spectacle, "Lafayette, We Come!" for its initial production to be distributed by it under its co-operative booking plan. Although Adolphe Osso, business manager for the Perret productions, and C. C. Pettijohn, general counsel for Affiliated, commenced the deal several weeks ago it was not closed until a careful study and investigation of the Affiliated plan was made by the producing company. Last week, Mr. Osso, representing Leonce Perret, reported that the result of this investigation was favorable and indorsed by his principals.

Mr. Perret's offer of assistance in the staging of the production will undoubtedly add much to the presentation of the Broadway run, for which preparations are now under way and being rushed to completion. While the Broadway showing will be under the jurisdiction of the New York unit, Affiliated has put its entire organization at work to insure the success of its initial presentation. The date and theatre have not yet been decided.

A run of the production, similar to the Broadway run in New York, is planned by each of the Affiliated units in every big city.

In addition to the regular line of accessories and advertising material the Affiliated is preparing several exceptional and interest-compelling posters, also a special campaign book and exhibitors' advertising and publicity service department.

The War Exposition Committee of the American Defense Society, who had been negotiating with the producer for the past several weeks in an attempt to secure the production to aid in the celebration of the anniversary of Lafayette's birth on September 6, has accepted the Affiliated's offer to place it at the disposal of the committee on that day.

Select Reproduces Big Store.

A step from the usual paths in filming motion pictures was made necessary last week when Director Charles Maigne was forced to reproduce a section of the main floor of a big New York department store at the Paragon Studio in New Jersey, where one of Alice Brady's forthcoming Select Pictures is being filmed.

For the last several years department store interiors, railroad stations and other important interior work have been shot in the original, and it was not until the last minute that Mr. Maigne learned that it would be impossible to obtain the original interior he desired.

For two days the technical director busied himself taking measurements and learning the methods employed by the decorators and obtaining an identical list of the merchandise displayed in this section of the store. During this time, Mr. Maigne, himself, studied the characteristics displayed by the steady stream of shoppers and the girls behind the counters. It required several days to build the scene in the studio.

"The Hypocrites" Going Well.

Elizabeth Risdon's problem play, "The Hypocrites," is finding motion picture house managers fully alive to the importance of the star and the story, the latter being the screen version of Sir Henry Arthur Jones' well-known stage success. This much is evident from the business reported on this feature by General Film Company. The George Loane Tucker production of the film seems to be lending it additional interest.

Out of the more recent bookings, that of a six-day run at the Boston Theatre is recorded, as well as a similar run at Fay's, Providence. New England business on this picture is described as most gratifying. Similar popularity for it is chronicled in the New York City territory of General, with dates in Loew and Fox houses leading the list. The Chicago district shows up with important downtown and suburban dates, with an echo of the same condition in Cleveland and the surrounding country. General Film says "The Hypocrites" is one of the most satisfying releases it has handled in many months.

"His Wife's Friend" Is a Typical Sennett Comedy

"HIS WIFE'S FRIEND" is the title of the latest Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy scheduled for release September 8, with Charles Murray, Wayland Trask, Gonda Durand and Harry McCoy as the leading comedians. From start to finish this comedy is said to be filled with mirth-provoking action.

The story of "His Wife's Friend" deals with a hairdresser who has a pretty wife and a dishonest partner. They get into numerous mixups and their troubles lead them into a gymnasium where a strong man gets into action with direful results all around. There are several remarkable tricks of photography employed in the development of the story, notably where an automobile climbs up the side of a building and comes down again without mishap. One of the most laughable scenes of the comedy is that of an automobile chase which may safely be said to be prolific of results in trick camera work which are truly astonishing.

A bit of genuine comedy is furnished by a trained parrot which plays a rather important role in the development of the story. Charles Murray appears as the hairdresser and Wayland Trask as the athletic instructor, with Gonda Durand as the wife and Harry McCoy as the partner of the hairdresser. Phyllis Haver and Myrtle Lind are also cast in important roles. Walter Wright directed.

Rosemary Thebe with Triangle.

Rosemary Thebe is the latest star that has been added to Triangle's players. Her first picture will be "Out of the Western Seas," a story built around a French-Canadian fishing village. Miss Thebe will be seen as an impulsive, wildly ambitious girl who, in her mad thirst for the vanities of life, brings near-ruin and destruction to those who love her.

Select Pictures Announces Output for New Season

SELECT announces its second series of star pictures for the season of 1918-1919. The names of Norma Talmadge, Clara Kimball Young, Constance Talmadge, Alice Brady and Marion Davies appear as the stars contributing to this series during the coming year. The list is to comprise eight pictures from each of the first four of these stars, and six pictures from Marion Davies. This makes a total of thirty-eight productions. Exhibitors who have contracted for Select stars series will receive these pictures, on a rough average, at something less than ten-day intervals.

Norma Talmadge's first picture in her new series will be "A Tale of a Forbidden City," from the pen of George Scarborough. Miss Talmadge and her director, Sydney A. Franklin, have been at great pains and expense to provide authentic and adequate Chinese settings for the story. A new leading man will be seen opposite Miss Talmadge in this piece in Thomas Meighan.

The second production will be David Belasco's great stage success, "The Heart of Wetona," also by George Scarborough.

Clara Kimball Young will begin her second Star series with a war play. This will be a tense, emotional drama laid on both sides of the Western front, and depicting a situation arising through natural circumstances in the prosecution of the war. Miss Young will play the part of a French girl whose presence behind the German lines becomes a matter of international concern. "The Road Through the Dark" is from the pen of Maude Radford Warren. The production will be started very soon at Los Angeles under Marshall Neilan. Jack Holt will appear as leading man. Second in Clara Kimball Young's new series will come an ambitious production of "Cheating Cheaters," Max Marcin's stage success.

Constance Talmadge provides the first attraction to be released by Select during the new season, as the first of her second series, "Sauce for the Goose," being released during the present week. Following this, she will be seen in another screen presentation of a successful comedy, "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots." The play is by Augustus Thomas.

Alice Brady's first picture in her new series will be "The Better Half," and is taken from "Michael Thwaite's Wife," by Miriam Michelson. It is a story of twin sisters. Miss Brady, of course, plays both roles. John Stewart Robertson directed the picture. David Powell, Crawfurd Kent and W. D. Carleton are some of the supporting players.

Following "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," which is the first of Marion Davies' Select pictures, this star will be seen in "The Burden of Proof," which has just been finished under the supervision of Julius Steger. It is an international romance of today. The picture has a flavoring of war activities, but contains no actual scenes of the war. The supporting company contains L. Rogers Lytton, John Merkyle and Eloise Clement.

In addition to the productions in its second star series Select will release during the coming year a number of special features, announcement of which will be made through the usual channels.

The Select management desires to call attention to the fact that all of its announced productions are new pictures. There are no reprints or reissues included in the list.

Italian Consuls to Push "Italy's Flaming Front"

THE First National Exhibitors' Circuit, through an arrangement with Lieutenant M. M. Prechet, of the Italo-North American Commercial Union, has secured the co-operation of the Italian consuls in all the principal cities of the United States in the countrywide exhibition of "Italy's Flaming Front," the impressive six-reel war spectacle which was released August 26. The exhibitors who have booked this picture are therefore guaranteed splendid co-operation from a source that is ordinarily beyond their command.

"There are in the United States and its territories forty-eight official representatives of Italy," said Lieutenant Prechet, "and motion picture exhibitors who intend to show 'Italy's Flaming Front' in their theatres can be assured that they will be accorded every facility of courtesy possible by our consuls to make the presentment of the film a real success.

"The purpose behind the American exhibition of 'Italy's Flaming Front' is primarily to show the work that our army and navy is capable of in holding back the Hun and to arouse the interest of Americans generally in Italy's war aims.

"The mere knowledge that America is now actively engaged in the war has increased the morale of the Italian forces 25 per cent., and as American troops are added to our own lines this increase in fighting power is bound to advance by leaps and bounds. It will undoubtedly prove of wide interest to the Americans to see with their own eyes the work which Italy has accomplished in the field, on the sea and in the air, and will increase the mutual respect and admiration of the two countries for one another.

"While active participation in film forces may be somewhat out of the ordinary run of events in the offices of most of our consuls, exhibitors need have no hesitation in asking any assistance that may seem desirable to them in order that the subject may be viewed by the greatest number of people in the shortest space of time."

Telegram Cameraman Gets Air Views of Washington

WASHINGTON, the war capital, as seen from the sky, photographed from an aeroplane for the first time—and possibly for the only time—is presented in the Screen Telegram, Number 51, released by Mutual Film Corporation.

The pictures were made by J. Thomas Baltzell, Washington camera correspondent for the Telegram. Besides carrying decided thrills for the spectator they are a demonstration of the daring that so often characterizes the work of news reel photographers in war work.

The picture is clear, clean-cut and interesting. It shows Lieutenant Howard F. Tilson of the Aerial Corps thoroughly inspecting his aircraft, tuning up the engine and trying out controls previous to this flight. Splendid close-ups are given of parts of the machine, Lieutenant Tilson and mechanics at work.

Mr. Baltzell with his camera already set for action is photographed and the airplane leaves on its journey. At a speed of about 120 miles an hour it skims along, leaving the ground, and crosses the historic Potomac River. An exceptional view of the topography of Washington is given in which the government buildings are easily picked out. The airplane with its recording camera circles the historic Washington Monument and flies around and above the dome of the Capitol itself.

The Washington pictures are being given a special run for a week at the Strand Theatre in New York and at many other representative metropolitan houses.

"Love's Law" Release Date Changed.

Owing to a change in schedule of subjects "Love's Law," Gail Kane's first special production, will be released by Mutual September 15. The picture is finished and the prints are in Mutual exchanges together with paper, press matter and special advertising aids.

Miss Kane is at work on "The Daredevil," the release date of which has not yet been set.

"Love's Law" is a thorough Kanesque production in which Miss Kane plays the role of an American born Polish girl. Supporting her in the production are Courtenay Foote, Reed Hamilton, Frederick Jones, Augusta Perry, Walter Deming, Matilda Baring and Emil LaCroix.

Warner Draws Timely Moral from Vogue of "Crusaders"

"PERSHING'S CRUSADERS" has brought motion pictures into new environments, according to Albert Warner, supervisor of contracts for the Government's first official feature film. "Mining operators have brought this picture into remote regions and played it at their isolated mining camps where formerly motion pictures were unheard of," Mr. Warner said the other day. "Ministers in Los Angeles and elsewhere have used 'Pershing's Crusaders' as a topical theme for powerful sermons. And these sermons were 'for' and not 'against' motion pictures.

"Newspapers that formerly devoted merely a few lines to films have liberally donated many columns and pages to the Government feature, which has thus broken the ice for other cinema productions.

"Y. M. C. A. headquarters, churches, schools, universities, and town halls in small towns that motion pictures had never invaded before have been visited by 'Pershing's Crusaders,' which has registered heavily in every instance and convinced lukewarm patrons of the films that the silent drama fills a real need in life.

"Halls have been created and projection machines installed in munition factories, cantonments, etc., where 'Pershing's Crusaders' has made history on its own account.

"In the far distant posts of Northern Alaska, 'Pershing's Crusaders' has blazed a new trial for motion pictures across countless miles of snow and ice.

"In fact, a stanch new clientele has been won over for motion pictures, and these thousands of new friends, difficult to reach in any other way, will mean much to this industry."

"Man of Power" Is Big Farnum Story.

HAVING completed three big Western pictures in succession, William Farnum, the Fox star, is now working on a production which is considerably different from any he has ever done. The picture is named "The Man of Power," and some of the scenes are laid on board ship and on a desert island.

Written by Frank Lloyd, Mr. Farnum's director, "The Man of Power" has its locale in London, New York, aboard ship, and on the desert island upon which Mr. Farnum and other passengers of the ship are washed after the vessel has been wrecked in a storm.

Scenes of power are contained in the production. Three thrilling fights between Farnum and his enemy furnish exceptionally strong moments in "The Man of Power." One of these fights occur in London, the other on shipboard, and the third on the desert island. In filming the production, it is understood, Director Lloyd has achieved several remarkable scenic effects, one in particular being that which shows the ship wrecked in the storm at sea.

Arthur Werner Starts on Trip.

As special representative for the Producers' Distributing Corporation, launching twelve special productions for the coming year, beginning with Evelyn Nesbit in "Her Mistake," Arthur M. Werner has started on an extended tour which will keep him on the road for several weeks. With St. Louis as his first stop, his intinerary includes Kansas City, Omaha, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Salt Lake, Denver, Seattle and San Francisco, from which city he will return to the home office by way of the south, making stops at Los Angeles, New Orleans and Atlanta.

Producers' Distributing Corporation representatives in each of these cities will have an opportunity of going over the unusual phases of the new Frank Hall plan with Mr. Werner, with a view to adapting the $10, $20 and $30 per day policy to their particular territories in the most equitable manner. Mr. Werner still retains his interests in the firm of Abrams & Werner.

Caruso's Second Is of a Musical Italian Prince

CARUSO has started his second Artcraft picture at the Fifty-Sixth street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Edward Jose, who supervised the production of "My Cousin," the first Caruso picture, is again directing the famous operatic star. Margaret Turnbull, who wrote "My Cousin," is the author of the new vehicle which is being filmed under the working title "Prince Cosimo." It is the story of an Italian prince who loves music better than titles and a certain woman more than money. He renounces all his princely rights, titles and lands in order to marry this woman, but she turns out to be a mere adventuress who is marrying him only for his money and title and the position which she expects they will secure for her.

The story is said to abound in heart-interest, and the character which Caruso portrays is said to have been drawn with a fine appreciation of the temperamental attributes of the star, giving him an opportunity to reveal his histrionic talent in full measure. The cast has not yet been completed, but it is expected it will contain several of those who appeared in the first Caruso picture.

Allied Armies Co-operate in Making "Common Cause"

THROUGH the co-operation of the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission, under whose auspices J. Stuart Blackton is producing "The Common Cause," a super-feature to be distributed by the Vitagraph Company as a special in eight reels, thousands of feet of official Government film will be placed at Commodore Blackton's disposal for him to select the scenes which he wishes to incorporate in the action of the photoplay.

This footage, made at the front under supervision of officials of the Allied armies, will include various activities of the troops, preparations behind the lines, scenes of life in the trenches "over there," aeroplane activities and battle scenes introducing all the latest implements of modern warfare. The film turned over to Commodore Blackton will be of the very latest production possible, including activities up to the date necessary to ship it to him for last minute insertion in "The Common Cause."

These scenes will be in addition to the various war incidents in the story, which the producer has staged in the big French village setting in Brooklyn, constructed for this purpose. These incidents introduce 250 marines who were detailed for work on the "location" by officials of the Marine Corps; the Scottish-Canadian Piper Band, a detachment from the American Tank Corps stationed at Gettysburg, and prominent officers of the Allied armies, who figure in the recruiting scenes.

"The Common Cause," which is an elaborated adaptation of the play by J. Hartley Manners, Ian Hay (Major Beith) and Percival Knight, is Commodore Blackton's most ambitious production, and will doubtless surpass in popularity his previous war spectacles, "The Battle Cry of Peace" and "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation." It is scheduled for early fall release.

Canada Anticipates "Common Cause."

On his return to New York from Canada last week, a representative of the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission, under whose auspices J. Stuart Blackton is producing "The Common Cause," declared that all Canada is looking forward to the exhibition throughout the country, of this special war production.

"'The Common Cause' is being widely heralded in Canada," said Mr. Blackton, "and all the Canadian newspapers are directing attention to it. Its theme, which is the bringing together of all the allied nations, and its aim to aid recruiting in all branches of the service, have aroused the interest of editors, military associations and various public-spirited men and organizations in Canada who are anticipating the film as a potent force in stimulating the work of winning the war and crushing Hun propaganda, at the same time providing the entertainment so essential for a people at war."

Two Fox Pictures in Close Race.

AN interesting race is reported from the Fox offices. It is between "Les Miserables," the William Farnum picturization of Victor Hugo's novel, and "Cleopatra," the Theda Bara production of the life and loves of the siren of the Nile.

Both these pictures were shown by William Fox as special attractions and only recently were put on an open booking basis. The prestige which the pictures established during their showing by Mr. Fox gave them a great advantage when they were released.

At first "Cleopatra" seemed to have a slight lead in the contracts sheet which forms the daily thermometer in the Fox offices. But gradually "Les Miserables" crept up on its rival, and now the two pictures are running neck and neck.

Scene from "The Secret Code" (Triangle).

"The Secret Code" and "Mystic Faces" Lead Triangle

ADELA ROGERS ST. JOHNS wrote "The Secret Code," which is offered as the first release on Triaagle's program for September 8. J Barney Sherry will be co-starred with Gloria Swanson, under the direction of Albert Parker, in this production. "The Secret Code" is heralded as a psychological drama of married life, and presents Miss Swanson in the role of a neglected wife. Mr Sherry is the husband, a Senator, who marries this girl fifteen years his junior. They love each other greatly, but the differeace in their ages proves a factor in their misunderstandings. Catherine Carr wrote the scenario, aad Pliay Horn was the cameraman.

Those who eajoyed Jack Abbe, Triaagle's clever little Japanese star, when he appeared last spriag with Jack Livingston and Maud Wayae in "Who Is to Blame?" will welcome his return as a Triangle featured player in "Mystic Faces," the second release for the week. He was co-author of this production with E. Magnus Ingleton.

The story tells of a little Jap, Yana. Gifted with a fertile imagination aad filled with all the romantic mysticism of his mother country he suddenly becomes the centre of a thrilliag adveature brought about by the smokiag of a stroag cigar. E. Mason Hopper directed the production, with Clyde R. Cook at the camera. In the supporting cast are Clara Morris, Martha Taka, Larry Steers, Liu Chung, M. Seki aad many others, aot to forget Yamgi, a caaine prodigy.

"Love's Pilgrimage" is Next Brockwell.

Haviag completed "The Strange Woman," Gladys Brockwell, the Fox star, has begua photographiag a new play, "Love's Pilgrimage," at Hollywood. The story was writtea by J. Grubb Alexander and Beaaett Cole, and has a gypsy setting.

Miss Brockwell is workiag under the direction of Edward J. LeSaiat, this play being the eighth that Mr. LeSaint has done for William Fox.

Principals in the cast of "Love's Pilgrimage," besides Gladys Brockwell, are William Scott, Wedgewood Nowell and Edwin H. Wallock.

Good Cast for Hamilton Story.

A brilliant cast has been assembled by Director Ralph W. Ince to support Hale Hamilton in his initial Metro starring vehicle, "Five Thousand an Hour," the screen version by June Mathis, of George Randolph Chester's story. It is being directed by Ralph W. Ince, assisted by William W. Cohill.

Lucille Lee Stewart will be seen opposite Mr. Hamilton in the part of Constance Joy. The part of Loring, the lawyer, will be played by Robert Middlemass. Florence Short, a gifted young actress well kaown to Metro patrons, plays Polly Parson, the girl friend of Constance.

Robert Whittier has beea cast as Jim Collaton, a blackmailer. Warren Cook will be seen as Courtney, a real estate promoter. Charles Edwards plays Boise, a railroad president. The two important parts of Col Bouncer, a manufacturer, and Paul Gresham have been intrusted to William Fredericks and Gilbert Douglas.

Green Talks of Reissues and of the Reasons Why

A PICTURE you have aever seen is as new as a book you have never read." This catch-phrase, accordiag to Walter E. Greeae, Managiag Director of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporatioa, in Charge of Distribution, tells the story of the Success Series of photoplay masterpieces which have stood the test of time aad which will be released, one each week for oae year, beginaing September 1.

"In releasing these masterpieces of the screen a second time," said Mr. Greeae, "we believe, we are gratifyiag a public desire, just as producers of plays have been doiag, when they have beea putting out great stage successes of other years. A play is produced in New York one season, and it is so good that it ruas perhaps for a year. Later it tours the couatry. Suppose, when it reaches a certain towa, it is seen by ten per cent. of the people there. If it is especially good, that ten per cent. will waat to see it agaia, and the other ninety per ceat., having heard so many good things said about it, will wish they had seen it. So it is good for a return engagement, aad aaother and another. They doa't ask, 'Is this a aew play?' They want to see it, becase they know it is a good play—because, if they have not already seea it themselves, they know it must be good, because everybody else is talkiag about it."

Love and Elvidge in "Quickening Flame."

Montagu Love and June Elvidge are to be co-starred by World Pictures in "The Quickening Flame," an origiaal story by Elizabeth R. Carpenter, and made into scenario form by Giles R. Warren. Travers Vale will direct the picture. The filming of this story began on Monday last at the World studio at Fort Lee. This will be the first picture in which Mr. Love and Miss Elvidge have co-starred in over a year.

Flora Zabelle Supports Friend Mabel Normand

UNUSUAL interest is attached to the announcement of the cast supporting Mabel Normand in her newest Goldwyn picture, "A Perfect 36," by Tex Charwate, now in the course of production. Not only have the best players obtainable been requisitioned to add their funmaking to the inimitable talents of the star, but the presence of one of them bears a relation to the affectioas of Mabel Normaad never before found in her associate players.

The artiste in question is Flora Zabelle, who, as almost everyone know, is Mrs. Raymond Hitchcock in private life. Although she has appeared but little in the silent drama, she has been much a friend to Mabel Normand for a number of years. Miss Zabelle and her husband have been the guardiaas of Mabel Normand, so to speak, and have advised her in regard to all her business affairs since they met on the Coast.

For a long time the Goldwyn star has wished to be aided in her productions by the beauty and ability of Flora Zabelle, but not once has there been a role which seemed quite suited to the talents of her friend. Once she read the scenario of "A Perfect 36," Mabel Normand exclaimed, "Why this is just the part for her if I can only persuade her to do it!" Whereupon she brought her well-known powers of coaxiag to bear, and before long had the piquant Zabelle's consent. Now Mabel Normand is happy beyond words.

As her leadiag man the star again has Rod LaRocque, whose excellent work in "The Venus Model" created favorable comment when he made his debut in Goldwyn Pictures.

Others are Leila Roner and the comic, Nathaniel Sack, whose pronounced type guarantees many laughs, and who also appears for the first time in Goldwyn productions.

Director Works Nutty Idea.

Anaa Q. Nilsson is foad of almoads, and thereby hangs the story of a shell game. When Miss Nilsson decided that the dressing room assigned to her in the Metro studio lot wasn't quite large enough, she rented a buagalow across the street, primarily to have more elbow room and secondarily so that she could have the eajoyment of "doiliag up" the tiny abode with all the feminine touches she loves to impart with her own dainty hands.

The result was that she soon had the cute little place so nifty that she just coulda't keep away from it. In coasequence, while she was needed on the studio stage to work in scenes, half the time she couldn't be found.

Somebody told Assistant Director, Dorris about Miss Nilsson's penchant for almoads. He bought a lot of them and filled his pockets.

The next time he saw Miss Nilsson covertly starting for her bungalow, he stopped her aad asked if she woulda't have a handful of almonds. Of course she would, aad by the time she had finished eatiag them she was still on hand for her scene.

Theda Bara Begins "The Siren's Song."

Theda Bara has begun work at Hollywood on "The Siren's Song," a drama which, it is said, gives Miss Bara opportunities for work considerably different from that which she has beea doing.

The picture is being directed by J. Gordon Edwards. The story and scenario were written by Charles Kenyon, author of "Kindling" and other well known stage successes. A large and notable cast has been chosen. "The Siren's Song" is the thirty-fifth picture which Miss Bara has produced under the Fox banner.

Gerard's "My Four Years in Germaay" was shown to a thousaad or so mea at Camp Meade in the Young Men's Christian Association Hall on Friday, July 26.

"Over the Top's" Hero, Arthur Guy Empey, in Khaki

ARTHUR GUY EMPEY, star of Vitagraph's "Over the Top," and one of the best known soldiers the war has produced, has enlisted as a private in the Tank Corps of the army and is now in training at Fort Slocum. Later he will be sent to Camp Colt, Gettysburg.

Empey recently was awarded a captain's commission in the army for special recruiting service, but before he could get to work it had been determined by the War Department to abolish volunteer enlistments and make the draft ages from 18 to 45 years. Empey's value was thus automatically curtailed and he was given an honorable discharge from the army. Within a few days he received a letter from the White House signed by Joseph P. Tumulty, secretary to the President, stating the reason for his discharge, and informing him that the Secretary of War saw no reason why he should not enter the army in the ordinary way and win a commission for himself by merit.

Mr. Tumulty also stated that there was a sound rule now in force in the army which prohibits granting of commissions except where earned by service.

Empey immediately applied for permission to enlist in the Tank Corps and this was granted by the War Department. He arranged his affairs at once, enlisted in the service on Friday, August 24, at New York, and on Monday entered the camp at Fort Slocum.

Empey's enlistment in the army as a private is another instance of the little fighter's grit and determination, and another chapter in a brilliant military record. Empey enlisted in the United States Cavalry and served six years, leaving with the rank of sergeant major. Later he served in the National Guard ranks of New Jersey and New York and then enlisted as a private in the Royal Fusiliers of London. He was wounded seven times in action and was promoted to a sergeantcy, being invalided home with the rank.

Empey's work for the Liberty Loans, the Red Cross and various war funds is well known in this country. The total amount of money raised by him in his various campaigns is in excess of $14,211,000.

The enlistment of Empey calls attention to the fact that the two leading characters of "Over the Top" are now wearing the uniform of Uncle Sam, James Morrison having gone into service immediately after the Vitagraph special was completed. Morrison shared honors with Empey as the coward in "Over the Top," and his performance is one of the outstanding features of the big production. He is believed to be in France now, and Empey probably will be with him there in the near future.

Some Cut-Up Is "Peck's Bad Girl."

Mabel Normand is called upon to do a lot of underground work in "Peck's Bad Girl," her newest Goldwyn pictures, by Tex Charwate, for many of the picture's thrilling scenes are laid in a cellar. But that doesn't keep a seasoned star like Mabel Normand from doing the best work of a long career.

"Peck's Bad Girl," while bubbling with situations to which only Miss Normand's style of comedy could do full justice, is not without its tense moments, and they confront the Goldwyn star underneath the shop, where, as Mabel Penelope Peck, she is employed as milliner's assistant. In the early scenes of the play all Yaptank is stirred by Mabel Peck's pranks. When she wasn't breaking store windows and running off with the delicacies she extracted from them she was causing fat men to flop ungracefully on the sidewalks or filling women's sunbonnets with crackers, or anything else she could lay her hands on.

Pathe to Release Western Photoplay's Baird Serial

PATHE will release "Wolves of Kultur," the fifteen-episode serial produced by the Western Photoplays, Inc., with Leah Baird as the star and Sheldon Lewis as a featured player. This fact was established by an announcement just sent out by Paul Brunet, vice president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc. It will be remembered that several weeks ago the Western made the statement that they had arranged for the distribution of the serial, but the name of the distributing organization was kept secret until now. The first episode will be released October 13.

"Wolves of Kultur" not only possesses a strong title, one that in itself is a box office attraction, but has a story that is timely, powerful and strongly dramatic. It deals with the activities of a body of German propagandists and spies domiciled in the United States, and stopping at nothing to further their ends. Miss Baird plays the part of a girl whose uncle falls victim to their murderous methods and who then devotes her whole time to running them down. Sheldon Lewis is a private investigator whose personal investigations cause him t be continually involved in the same trails which Miss Baird is following. Charles Hutchison is the young man who escapes from the band of spies through the assistance of Miss Baird, and from then on is her devoted follower and aid. Mr. Hutchison, by the way, shows himself in this serial to be a stunt man extraordinary. He shows himself to be not only a most likeable hero, but an athlete of surprising ability. He is considered a "find" by those who have seen the serial.

With the exception of a few scenes only, "Wolves of Kultur" has been completed. Thus a very great advantage has been gained at the start. It is expected finished prints of at least the first five episodes will be delivered to the various Pathe exchanges before release date. Thus exhibitors will be enabled to get an excellent idea of the character of the story and quality of the production before the public exhibition of the first episode.

An extensive line of advertising and publicity helps has been prepared for exhibitors' use. There will be one, three and six-sheet posters for each episode, and a striking twenty-four sheet. The Pathe twenty-four on "Hands Up" has been very much admired and is on exhibition in the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York. It is promised the twenty-four sheet on "Wolves of Kultur" will be equally striking and original.

Not only has great care been used in the editing and titling of the serial, but, in addition, the titles of the various episodes have been chosen with a regard for their appeal and fitness. The first is called "The Torture Trap"; the others are: "The Iron Chair," "Trapping Traitors," "The Ride to Death," "Through the Flames," "Trails of Treachery," "The Leap of Despair," "In the Hands of the Hun," "The Precipice of Death," "Within the Web," "When Woman Wars," "Betwixt Heaven and Earth," "The Old Glory Girl," "The Tower of Tears" and 'The Reward of Patriotism."

The keynote of the serial is "thrills." Director J. A. Golden is said to have spared no effort or expense to fill each episode with them.

Louise Huff in "The Crook of Dreams."

Louise Huff begins her fourth picture for the World Company next Monday at the studio at Fort Lee, when "The Crook of Dreams" will be put in work. Miss Huff will be directed by Oscar Apfel, and Frank Mayo has been selected as her leading man.

Painter Tauszky Will Enhance Art in Metro Subjects

MAXWELL KARGER, Metro's studio supervisor, has engaged the well known portrait painter, D. Anthony Tauszky, whose art, it is expected, will add further to the beauty and effectiveness of Metro pictures. D. Anthony Tauszky will provide, by means of interpretative paintings, a further stimulus to the imagination of the spectators, giving a scope and breadth that can be happily combined with the more detailed action photographed by the camera.

A definite instance of this will shortly be seen in "The Silent Woman," a Metro feature starring Edith Storey. The scene is laid for the most part in the North woods. Vivid action scenes, directed by Herbert Blache, carry the story along. In addition, the spectator is given the impression of the greatness and dignity of the North country, the timberlands, the logging and the lumber industry, by means of the artist's introductory title-sheets. Mr. Tauszky has also used his genius in portraiture by painting a picture of one of the leading players in "The Silent Woman," the portrait being closely connected with the plot of the photodrama. Lille Leslie is the player in question, in the role of Mary Lowery, the wife whose memory is enshrined in the heart of her husband after her death.

D. Anthony Tauszky has exhibited frequently in the Paris Salon and in the New York Academy. He has painted people prominent socially and in political life, both in America and Europe.

While Mr. Tauszky has achieved some of his greatest successes abroad, where he painted portraits of Countess Tolstoy and other prominent persons, he is American born, and received his first art-training at the old Metropolitan Museum art school in New York.

Mr. Tauszky will also contribute special art-titles to Mme. Nazimova's forthcoming Screen Classics, Inc., feature, "Eye for Eye," and is now making a study of the Henri Kistemaecker's play, "L'Occident," from which it has been adapted, for that purpose.

Thirteen Means Much in Pershing's Life.

General Pershing just doesn't care a continental Potsdam about superstition. Here's the proof: There are thirteen letters in the name of John J. Pershing. Moreover, the American leader's birthday this year falls on Friday, September 13. General Pershing, on that fateful day, will be 58 years old—and five plus eight is 13!

But worse, and more of it! September 13, his birthday, has fallen on Friday eight times in the General's life. In 1861, his first birthday was on a Friday. Friday, the 13th, butted in again when Pershing was seven years old, when he was eighteen, when he was twenty-nine, thirty-five, forty-one, forty-seven, and now, when he is fifty-eight.

Now in the face of all these things, you'd naturally suppose that a motion picture producer would hesitate about issuing a film on General Pershing. Not William Fox! That producer has made a big picture, called "Why America Will Win," based on the life of General Pershing. As a compliment to the American leader, Mr. Fox has arranged that the picture will be shown by a number of theatres throughout the country on General Pershing's birthday.

On the same day, the 32,000-word serial story of General Pershing's life, which was prepared by the Fox corporation after months of investigation, will begin publication in more than 100 of the leading newspapers of the country.

"Treason" Has Patriotic Theme.

A strong patriotic theme runs through the story of "Treason," the Edna Goodrich special production which will be released by Mutual in early autumn. It handles in a rather unusual manner a story in which is worked out a love problem, as well as a timely patriotic strain, the combination of which gives the production an out of the ordinary turn.

The story was written by Harry R. Durant. The scenarioizing is the work of J. Clarkson Miller. Burton King directed and has achieved an artistic as well as a graphic piece of screencraft.

Assisting Miss Goodrich in the interpretation of "Treason" are Howard Hall as the husband, Mildred Clair in the part of the child, Clarence Heritage who plays the part of the government agent, and Stuart Holmes in the role of Herr Graff von Aachen, the German spy.

Ethel Clayton in World Drama.

Ethel Clayton makes her last appearance in World Pictures in "A Soul Without Windows." This five reel feature will have its first public presentation on September 30, on which day it will be released. The story was written by Julia Burnham and directed by Travers Vale. Supparting Miss Clayton are such prominent actors as Frank Mayo, Eugenie Woodward, David Davies, Gus Pixley, Pinna Nesbit and Jack Drumier.

Storm Scene in Bluebird.

What is believed to be one of the greatest storm scenes ever filmed is one of the spectacles in "The Brazen Beauty," Bluebird's release for September 9. Priscilla Dean is the star.

Will Rogers Just Fits "Laughing Bill Hyde"

REX BEACH'S description of Alaska in his famous story, "Laughing Bill Hyde," is true-to-life and unparalleled, according to hundreds of prospectors who were up there in the days when gold strikes came fastest. And the author was in the Klondike, too, in seach of adventure, wealth and inspiration, so there is no one who knows that remarkable country better. He told only facts in describing it.

When Goldwyn broached the subject of picturizing "Laughing Bill Hyde" the author readily consented, but stipulated that the Alaska of his production be the one he knows and not one patterned after motion picture productions of the gold land that have led many to believe that the Klondike was the mecca for thieves and murderers; that diggers for gold worked during the day and lost their possessions in barroom brawls at night; that a good woman was unknown in the territory. All of which is disproved in the Rex Beach-Goldwyn version of Alaska.

The famous author collaborated on the scenario and supervised every detail of the "Laughing Bill Hyde" picturization just as he did in the production of his two previous motion picture successes, "The Auction Block" and "Heart of the Sunset."

It was when selecting a cast for the picture that Rex Beach exercised unusual care and good judgment. For the leading masculine player he sought a man like those who inhabited the rich spots of Alaska in its heyday. Always an admirer of Will Rogers, the famous whip and lariat thrower, featured in Ziegfeld's "Follies," Mr. Beach saw in the husky product of Oklahoma the man who typified the Alaska gold hunter of '98. The author sought out Rogers, and, after a day of coaxing, the actor consented to take the part.

"I know I won't be a bit o' good as a movin' picture actor, but I'll take a chance if you want me," Rogers said.

Novels and Plays Continue to Grow in Public Favor

PROBABLY there will be more stage successes and dramatized novels made into film during the 1918-19 season than have been shown in all of the previous history of the motion picture industry. William Fox, as an illustration, has announced a list of such productions that is considerably more than equivalent to his whole previous output of this class of plays. He has committed himself definitely in public statements to the continuation of such a policy throughout the year, and other producers, in greater or lesser degree, have done likewise.

According to his publicity department, Mr. Fox intends not to confine this type of production to any one brand of pictures, but to make it a definite and fixed general policy. In furtherance of this idea, he announces that Virginia Pearson, one of the stars in his Excel Pictures series, has commenced the filming of a dramatization of "Buchanan's Wife," a novel written by the late Justus Miles Forman. This author, it will be remembered, was one of the victims of the Lusitania, on May 7, 1915, and at the time of his death, held high rank among America's successful writers.

A long list of other important novels and plays has recently been acquired by Mr. Fox for film presentation, and it is reported that negotiations are pending for several more. Four of Zane Grey's Western stories are on the list, two of Charles Alden Seltzer's novels, and several others. The Grey stories probably will be released in the Standard Pictures classification, the Seltzer novels as Victory Pictures and "Buchanan's Wife" as an Excel. The latter series also will start with a Peggy Hyland production that is a dramatization based on the theme of a world-famous song, "Bonnie Annie Laurie."

Goldwyn Offers Five Productions for September

FATES and the calendar give Goldwyn Pictures five releases in the month of September, as the company's first contribution to its schedule of in excess of fifty productions annually. Following the successful first Geraldine Farrar production, "The Turn Of the Wheel," which soored an instantaneous success in the sixty larger cities of the country last week, comes the second Goldwyn production with Mabel Normand as the star. The story is "Peck's Bad Girl"—just the kind of story that millions of Miss Normand's admirers have been hoping Goldwyn would make with the rollicking little star.

"Peck's Bad Girl" is unquestionably the most successful picture Miss Normand has ever made, and in it she returns to the field of broad comedy, in which delightful work she has no screen rival. So many persons wrote asking Miss Normand why, for a change, she did not return to the kind of stories in which she gained world-wide fame, that their desires were not to be denied. Charles Giblyn has directed with her in a way that will bring cries of delight from top balcony to orchestra pit in every theatre in which Mabel Normand as the incorrigible Minnie Peck is seen.

Tom Moore could not have asked or wished for a more successful picture than Goldwyn has given him as the mark of elevation from leading man to stardom. His first production is "Just For To-Night," a speedy, full-of-action-and-zest romantic drama with a lively mystery, a beautiful young leading woman, Lucy Fox, and a cast that has caught the spirit of the story completely. This production, also directed by Mr. Giblyn, will be released September 16.

When picture audiences see Madge Kennedy in the week of the twenty-third in "The Kingdom of Youth," there will be many to exclaim that Miss Kennedy is becoming more delightful and pleasing with each picture. This is true, but it can also be said in behalf of her story that "The Kingdom of Youth" is by all odds the best story that this lovely star has had since she deserted the stage for the screen. This production was directed by Clarence G. Badger and for months to come it will be hailed with approval throughout the country.

The fifth and last production sponsored by Goldwyn in September is the first of the Rex Beach productions of the new season, "Laughing Bill Hyde," aptly announced as a drama of redemption, and bringing to the screen one of the best known of this popular author's characters portrayed by the famous wit and lariat thrower, Will Rogers, known in every part of America. Rogers is the liveliest and most famous Texan who has ever won nation-wide fame in the theatre, and he is beyond question one of the great discoveries of the screen in the past five years. This production was scenarioized jointly by Mr. Beach and Willard Mack, and Mr. Beach says without reservation that Mr. Mack has made the most powerful scenario ever written for a Rex Beach story. Hobart Henley is the director of "Laughing Bill Hyde."

Goldwyn's first October release gives Mae Marsh her first screen story of the new season, "Hidden Fires," likewise directed by Mr. Henley. Here once more is the star at her wistful best in a romantic drama of tremendous heart appeal—a picture to delight her followers who rated "The Cinderella Man" and "Polly of the Circus" as marking new steps forward in the growth of this beloved girl.

Vitagraph Starts Shipping First "Big V Special"

SHIPMENT of prints have been started on the first of Vitagraph's "Big V Special" comedies, the new two-reel feature comedy unit which the company will add to its service September 16.

"Misfits and Matrimony," featuring Earle Montgomery and Joe Rock, will inaugurate the releases, and it is declared by Vitagraph to be the fastest and cleverest comedy this popular team has produced for the company.

Vitagraph reiterates its statement that these new two-reel humorous subjects will live up to their name, "Special," in every respect. The comedians who appear in them are enthusiastic over the lengthening of their subjects, and this enthusiasm is reflected by exhibitors, for it was in response to requests for "real feature comedies in two reels" that Vitagraph changed from one to two reels.

The regular Big V releases in one reel will continue until the last week in September. Last week the Rialto Theatre, New York, and Graumann's new million-dollar theatre in Los Angeles were among the big houses using these pictures.

"Road To France" Breaks Print Records.

The demand for pre-releases on the forthcoming World Picture, "The Road to France," have assumed such proportions that it has been found necessary to order from the laboratory sixteen more prints, than this company has ever issued before. The subject matter of this picture is unusually timely, dealing, as it does, with the gigantic efforts of this country to provide sufficient shipping to meet the demands of General Pershing, both as regards men and food together, with adequate munitions to make the drive to Berlin.

Matching Fact with Fiction.

Press dispatches recently told of the killing of a number of Germans by Canadian troops on the Western Front through the use of a clever ruse. The Canadians, finding a stray pig, tied a rope to one of his legs and let him wander about in No Man's Land in full sight of the Germans. The Germans, hungry for some real food, forgot their usual caution, and raised their heads above the trench. They were greeted with a hail of rifle bullets from the Canadians, many being killed.

This incident in real life has been used as the basis of the plot of the latest Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoon, "At the Front." Mutt conceived the idea of using a live pig for bait, but he differed from the Canadians in that he put his little pal, Jeff, inside the pig skin.

While Mutt was waiting for action he fell asleep only to be rudely awakened shortly afterward by a commotion near where he was taking his snooze. He looked up and found little Jeff marching in a big bag of prisoners at the point of the bayonet.

Vitagraph Names First New Blue Ribbon Features

VITAGRAPH last week announced the first six Blue Ribbon Features to be released under its new booking plan, recently announced to the trade and incidentally gives out its list of releases for the month of October and the first week in November.

Vitagraph continues to receive letters of congratulation from exhibitors who have grasped the opportunity to book under the new plan, and it is reported from the home office of the Vitagraph Distributing Organization that approximately 60 per cent of all the exhibitors now on its books have signed contracts for the new system.

In its special announcement a few weeks ago, the company, setting an example for the rest of the industry, gave out the dates for a year of each star's releases. It stated that exhibitors could book on the fifty-two week basis, on a star series basis, a combination of stars or, in an emergency, a single feature. Here are the first six features to be listed under this new plan:

September 30—Earle William, in "A Diplomatic Mission." Written by Don Bartlett. Directed by Jack Conway.

October 7—Gladys Leslie, in "The Mating." Written by Millicent Evison. Directed by Frederic Thomson.

October 14—Harry T. Morey, in "The King of Diamonds." Written by Edward Ballou. Directed by Paul Scardon.

October 21—Alice Joyce, in "Everybody's Girl." Adapted from "Brick Dust Row," a story by O. Henry. Directed by Tom Terriss.

October 28—Corinne Griffith, in "Miss Ambition." Written by Rex Taylor. Directed by Henry Houry.

November 5—Bessie Love in "The Dawn of Understanding," a story by Bret Harte. Directed by David Smith.

Under the announced production and releasing plan of Vitagraph for the next year, Earle Williams and Alice Joyce will be presented in eight productions each, while Bessie Love, Harry T. Morey, Corinne Griffith and Gladys Leslie will be presented in nine each. The stars will appear on the Blue Ribbon program at intervals of six weeks each, so that an exhibitor booking a specific series of combination of star series, or the entire list of fifty-two productions containing the six stars, knows now the exact date on which a given star will appear, during any month in the year.

In its statement, giving the first six pictures to be offered under the new plan, Vitagraph states that it has chosen subjects having the greatest appeal and being best suited to the personalities of the stars. Earle Williams, for instance, is presented in "A Diplomatic Mission" as a brilliant, care-free American who gets entangled in international problems and has to fight his way out with gun and fists on several occasions. The picture is of the type in which Williams is at his best—the adventure picture wherein the star has opportunity for strong action and a display of his dramatic abilities.

"The Mating" is a light drama with a strong line of comedy in it, and one admirably suited to Gladys Leslie.

Harry Morey is at his best in "The King of Diamonds," according to Vitagraph. It is a play filled with powerful situations and high melodramatic lights, in which this stalwart star always shines to advantage.

Alice Joyce, in "Everybody's Girl," has a beautifully blended role, it is said. The play contains plenty of O. Henry's inimitable humor, and at the same time, a goodly supply of pathos and drama, with a big ship panic scene as its melodramatic center.

"Miss Ambition" presents Miss Griffith in an intensely dramatic role and one which permits her to wear many beautiful gowns.

"The Dawn of Understanding," Bessie Love's first Vitagraph production, is Bret Harte's story, "The Judgment of Bolinas Plaines." It was presented on the legitimate stage two decades ago as a starring vehicle for Annie Russell, under the title of "Sue," and is declared to be an ideal subject for the little California star so aptly named.

Kentucky Story for May Allison.

May Allison is to play the part of a southern mountain girl in Metro's "Kate of Kentucky." Work on the picture has just been started at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood, where Miss Allison a few days ago finished her second picture-made on the west coast, "The Testing of Mildred Vane."

"Kate of Kentucky" is by George D. Baker and Tom J. Geraghty. The new play is a melodramatic farce.

Warm Welcome Awaits the First Barrymore Comedy

John Barrymore, who is to be seen in a series of four Paramount pictures during the coming season, makes his first appearance in "On the Quiet," Augustus Thomas' famous comedy. This is Barrymore's second plunge into motion pictures, he having been a noted Paramount star several years ago, appearing in "The Man from Mexico," "Are You a Mason?" and other notable successes. A son of Maurice Barrymore and Georgie Drew, of the famous Drew family of actors, and a brother of Ethel and Lionel Barrymore, it is not surprising that he should have histrionic talent. His success in "Peter Ibbetson," which served him as a starring vehicle on the stage for two seasons, was phenomenal, and he comes back to the screen in Paramount pictures more popular than ever.

Lois Meredith, well-known star of the stage and screen, plays the leading feminine role opposite Mr. Barrymore in "On the Quiet." Miss Meredith was formerly a Paramount star, having appeared in "The Woman," and "Help Wanted," released several years ago. After a long absence from the screen she came back a few months ago to play opposite Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey in "Over the Top." It is more than likely that her appearance in "On the Quiet" will be her last for a long time, as she has announced her intention of going to France with a number of other actors and actresses to devote her time to the entertainment of American soldiers.

Frank Losee, one of the finest character actors in pictures, has another role which fits him perfectly, and J. W. Johnston, Al Hickman, Helen Greene and Frank Belcher are also prominent in the support. A fine piece of character acting is contributed by Cyril Chadwick as an English Duke. With this cast of principals it remained for such artists as Nan Christy, Dell Boone, Dan Mason, Frank Hilton, Otto Okuga and Louise Lee to be content with "bits."

Lockwood Plays Courtenay Role.

The role of Danny Rowland, originated by William Courtenay in the stage production of "Pals First," is enacted by Harold Lockwood in the screen version of the same story, scheduled for release by Metro this month under the banner of Screen Classics, Inc. James Lackaye is playing Dominie, the character enacted on the spoken stage by Thomas A. Wise, while Richard R. Neill is playing Dr. Chilton, the heavy, impersonated on the stage by Lyster Chambers. The part of the Squirrel, created by Francis X. Colon, is in the hands of Rollo Lloyd.

Other members of the cast are Ruby de Remer, who is playing the leading feminine role. Frank de Vernon appears as Judge Logan, Walter P. Lewis as the Sheriff, Anthony Byrd as Uncle Alex and Pauline Dempsey as Aunt Caroline. Edwin Carewe directed.

Pep in Russell's Latest.

William Russell's latest picture, "Hobbs in a Hurray," is an avalanche of pep and applied humor, and is being booked by representatives of the American Film Company, Inc., with success throughout the thirty-odd selling territories of the corporation. The picture is the first one of a series of eight made by William Russell Productions and handled by the American and through Pathe exchanges.

Because it bristles with surprising athletics and much wholesome comedy the picture is exceptionally well received. Hobbs is always in a hurry, and sweeps the rest of the action and cast with him into laughter. It is a veritable cataract of surprises. Russell's work on top of a fast train and on horseback should cause the beholder to sit up and take notice.

Betzwood Oriental Feature Has Patriotic Flavor

TIMED as if on a split-second watch the first great motion picture production showing how Germany was foiled in the Orient and how the Yankee, Japanese and Chinese troops have rescued all of Northern Asia from the grip of Berlin is now ready for nation-wide distribution. Goldwyn announces itself as the distributor.

The Betzwood Film Corporation, owned by a group of Philadelphians known throughout the industry, is the producer of this new patriotic thriller, "For the Freedom of the East," offering on the screen for the first time a Chinese star, Lady Tsen Mei, supported by a cast of well known American players.

For months great secrecy has been observed at the Betzwood plant while Ira M. Lowry was making this big, new picture, and with his associates anticipating the day when one of the focal and vital fronts of the war would be maintained in Northern Asia, where American, Chinese and Japanese troops would close Russia's back door to the Hun.

Announcement is now made by the Betzwood Company of the completion of its big patriotic picture, and in a few days prints will be shipped to all Goldwyn branches for immediate booking. It is anticipated by its owners that "For the Freedom of the East" will eclipse the box office records made during the last year by the company's other Lowry production, "For the Freedom of the World."

The picture is really a melodramatic love story of power and vitality, possessing the added advantage of being linked at this very moment and for months to come with history as it is being recorded in the newspapers of the nation.

Incidentally, this is the first time in the history of American films that a Chinese girl has been starred, and likewise it is the first time that China has been depicted in a fictional production with its people in roles other than those of criminals or menials.

A publicity campaign and advertising of great power and novelty will be inaugurated at once and maintained for months to add to the drawing power of this production for exhibitors.

Evelyn Nesbit Story Is "The Woman Who Gave!"

THE Woman Who Gave!" is the name of the first of the series of five pictures that Evelyn Nesbit will make for William Fox. The subject will probably be released in October, and will be a Fox Standard picture. The four other pictures will probably be released at ten-week intervals.

"The Woman Who Gave" is described as a powerful drama of a woman who hated her own beauty. The heroine is a Parisian artist's model. Written by Izola Forrester, the story has for its locale Paris, Bulgaria, New York City and the Adirondacks. In the earlier scenes Miss Nesbit appears as Collette, most beautiful of all Paris art models. Later, she is shown as the unwilling bride of a wealthy and unscrupulous Bulgarian, in his home in the mountains of Bulgaria. The story reaches its climax in the Adirondacks, where the Prince, seeking to do injury to his wife, is shot by her admirer and plunges over a cliff to his death.

A large and especially capable cast has been chosen to support Miss Nesbit.

Duncan Is Off on Another Fifteen-Episode Thriller

AFTER a brief rest-up, William Duncan and his Vitagraph serial company have begun work on another fifteen-episode thriller which will carry the title of "The Man of Might." In this, as in "A Fight for Millions," which is now showing, Mr. Duncan will be supported by an all-star cast, including Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan. The story is by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady.

During the "vacation" of the company between pictures the director-star "rested" by making a propaganda picture for the government to use in the forthcoming Liberty Loan drive.

"The Man of Might" will have an entirely different theme and atmosphere from those of any of the other serials in which Mr. Duncan has been starred. Like its predecessors it will be a typical American melodrama, with the mountain of the west, the desert and wilds for a background. There will be plenty of riding of the sort for which the Vitagraph cowboys are famous and the authors have put in enough risks to challenge the courage and skill even of Duncan. The subject is scheduled for release on January 27 next, following the release of "The Iron Test," the Moreno-Holloway serials, and will be the third serial in the announced four-a-year policy of Vitagraph, Mr. Duncan and the Moreno-Holloway combination alternating continuously on the program.

A Quintet of Select Stars.

Schomer's "Ruling Passions" Arouses Exhibitor Interest

"Ruling Passions," the new six-act special feature photodrama, written and directed by Abraham S. Schomer, is, in Mr Schomer's belief, one of the most sought-for pictures of the day From all sections of this country and Canada inquiries regarding American and foreign rights to it have flowed into the office of the Schomer Photo-Play Producing Co., Inc., at 1440 Broadway Mr Schomer believes that the interest in "Ruling Passions" indicated by distributors "is prompted by the high position in theatricals and filmdom attained by Mr Schomer through his authorship of 'Today,' 'The Yellow Passport,' 'The Inner Man,' etc., and his virility and power as a director" Equally potent as a reason for this interest is the unexceptional cast of star players gathered by him for "Ruling Passions'" portrayal Included in that cast are Julia Dean, Edwin Arden, Claire Whitney and Earl Schenck, all of whom have consistently maintained the high rank in photoplaydom reached by them through their artistry and conscientious endeavors In Mr Schomer's new play they give the very best of their ability, due, as all of them have declared, to the fact of the play's naturalness and probability, of the artistic manner in which fact and fancy, truth and realism and drama have been woven together.

The invitations for the trade showing of "Ruling Passions," arrangements for which are now being rapidly completed, will be limited Preference will be given to those who have already communicated with the Schomer Photo-Play Producing Co., Inc., and to those who, in the near future, indicate their interest in the play

Heyes Plays Opposite to May Allison.

Hebert H Heyes will play opposite May Allison in "Kate of Kentucky," upon which work has just been started at Metro's west coast studios Heyes, who stands six feet one inch and weighs close to 200 pounds, will be remembered for his work in the Metro productions, "Rose of the Alley," 'Nobody' and "The Outsider" A successful career on the stage preceded his advent in motion pictures He was with James K Hackett in 'Don Caesar de Bazan" "The Prisoner of Zenda" and other productions was featured in "The Man on the Box" and "The Girl of the Golden West," and played leads in stock at Hartford and Seattle. For the screen he has done leading business for Essanay, George Kleine and Fox, besides his work with Metro

Gibson and Mann Paintings in Picture.

An unusual feature connected with "The Woman Who Gave," the first picture which Evelyn Nesbit is making for William Fox, is that five original paintings of Miss Nesbit done by two of the foremost American artists are used in one of the sets in the play The pictures were painted by Charles Dana Gibson and Harrington Mann, who are the two leading painters in this country.

The set in which the paintings are used represents the studio of a Parisian artist for whom Miss Nesbit, in the role of Collette, is posing When Miss Nesbit read the script and saw that it called for a studio scene she immediately thought of the paintings on the walls of her home in New York

Strong Cast in "What Love Forgives."

The casting director of World Pictures has surrounded Barbara Castleton with an unusual number of well known actors for her forthcoming production of "What Love Forgives" Among the more prominent are John Bowers, Johnny Hines and Mariel Ostriche. Drury Lane Melodrama Promised for Early Release

UNUSUAL interest centers in the early release of Maurice Tourneur's production of the famous Drury Lane melodrama, "Sporting Life," which will be one of the notable independent offerings of the fall. It will be Director Tourneur's initial independent release, his first screen production since he left the Famous Players-Lasky forces, where he created many noteworthy screen offerings.

"Sporting Life" will, in a way, be a successor to "The Whip." Mr. Tourneur produced "The Whip," which proved to be one of filmland's most popular melodramas. Cecil Raleigh, the author of "The Whip," is one of the authors of "Sporting Life." Both are thrilling stories of the British turf and both revolve around a famous racehorse. Yet the stories are entirely different.

The fact that "Sporting Life" will be a companion piece to "The Whip" has been arousing wide interest among exhibitors, not only in this country, but across the seas. Hiller & Wilk, Inc., the selling agents for Maurice Tourneur's Productions, have received inquiries from exhibitors in far away Australia as well as from every section in this country.

"This is distinct proof of the wide popularity of 'Sporting Life' as a stage attraction," says Mr. Tourneur, in discussing the production. "'Sporting Life' was a London hit, in fact one of the biggest successes ever presented at that famous home of melodrama—Drury Lane. It scored again in New York and was widely popular in practically every English-speaking country. Hence the unusual interest in its screen version."

Mr. Tourneur, it is announced, has done everything possible to make his first independent release the best production of his career. "Sporting Life" will be marked by all the beauty of setting and photography, the subtlety of characterization and the finesse of direction which film fans have come to expect in a Tourneur photoplay, and Maurice Tourneur has established himself firmly as a producer in whom exhibitors have great faith.

The big punch of "Sporting Life" is its sensational presentation of the famous classic of the English turf, the Derby. This graphic reproduction of the world famous racing annual at Epsom, England, promises to put "Sporting Life" over to a whirlwind thrill. Another big scene is a reproduction of an international prize fight before the National Sporting Club of London. There are any number of other novel scenes, such as a fascinating reproduction of London streets shrouded in dense fog. This fog plays a vital part in the story, since it aids a gang of thugs in their efforts to steal the Derby favorite.

"Sporting Life" has an excellent cast, including such players as Constance Binney, recently seen in "Oh, Lady, Lady!"; her sister, Fair Binney; Willette Kershaw, Ralph Graves, Warner Richmond, Charles Eldridge, Charles Craig and Henry West.

Frank Hall Completing Large Sales Organization

WITH general manager, Lynn S. Card, of the Producers' Distributing Corporation visiting the important film centres, east of the Mississippi, the roster of Frank Hall's large organization is being increased by the addition of new names daily. Prominent among the well known film men recently added to the roster are, Philip Meyer, manager of the Liberty Exchange, New York; M. F. Tobias, formerly exchange manager for the Mutual; A. L. Erghott, of Boston; Frank J. Flahearty, of Chicago; Sam Farber, Jerry Herzog, Frank G. Gillman, and more to be announced in the near future.

Frank Hall's system of distribution calls for experienced film men in every section of the country. Arrangements for distribution of the twelve special productions scheduled for the coming year under the Producers' Distributing Corporation franchise are now nearing completion and will be announced shortly. Meanwhile, representatives of the company are busily engaged closing contracts for Evelyn Nesbit in "Her Mistake," and the balance of the year's output.

While the fixed-price policy of the new corporation, which limits charges for rentals to $10, $20 and $30 a day, simplifies the work of the salesmen by assuring the exhibitors an equitable contract, the exceptionally large number of first run bookings in each city, not only demands the attention of experienced representatives with considerable executive ability, but also calls for men intimately acquainted with the booking conditions in their several localities. The problem of selecting the right man for the place is therefore a difficult one, but a glimpse at the list now completed promises well for a particularly efficient organization.

Grace Valentine to Star in Another Morosco Play

GRACE VALENTINE, who has won general praise for her work in the title role of the Rialto De Luxe Productions' screen adaptation of Oliver Morosco's "The Unchastened Woman," will shortly be seen in a film version of another Morosco success, "Upstairs and Down," written by the Hattons, Frederic and Fanny, known as authors of "successes only."

During its long run at the Morosco Theatre, New York, "Upstairs and Down" was one of three Hatton plays simultaneously delighting metropolitan audiences, the two others being "The Squab Farm" and "Lombardi, Ltd." As one of the stars of the Morosco forces, Miss Valentine was the featured player in the latter drama, so that in a single season this popular star will have had the distinction of having starred in three of Broadway's greatest stage and picture triumphs.

The policy of Rialto De Luxe Productions is based upon the universal recognition of and the increasing demand from moving picture theatre managers for qualities in pictures that bid for popular patronage. This policy has borne good fruit in "The Unchastened Woman," and "Upstairs and Down" promises even greater results.

Anti-Vice Picture in Cleveland.

Although a contract was entered into four weeks ago between the Arrow Film Corporation, representing the producers of "The Finger of Justice," and I. E. Chadwick, representing the Ohio-Ivan Film Service, whereby the later company procured the Ohio rights to that production, no announcement of the facts has been forthcoming until this time. Preparations have, however, been actively forwarded during that period preliminary to the opening of the attraction at the Standard Theatre in Cleveland for a run.

"The Finger of Justice," it will be recalled, was made under the supervision of the Rev. Dr. Paul Smith, of San Francisco, and is a visualization of the dramatic incidents connected with Dr. Smith's exposé of political and social "graft" and of the iniquities of the Barbary Coast.

The exploitation of "The Finger of Justice" in Ohio is under the personal direction of George L. Stockton, who has enlisted the active support and cooperation of the mayor and chief of police of Cleveland, as well as the Anti-Saloon League, the ladies' social service organization, and various ministers' associations.

Perret Making Second Picture.

Leonce Perret announces the commencement of the filming of the second of his series of patriotic motion picture spectacles. The title has not yet been decided upon. The company has taken over the estate of Captain Frederick Russell at Russell Harbor, Great Neck, Long Island. The grounds cover over two hundred acres, and include the Russell Harbor mansion, which will house Mr. Perret and his staff during the filming of the production.

Officials at Camp Upton have promised Mr. Perret every co-operation, in so far as furnishing him with gas masks and other war equipment. While these preparations are being made, Mr. Perret is losing no time. He and his entire staff, including E. K. Lincoln and Dolores Cassinelli, who will be the featured players, are now at Lake Hopatcong, where the first scenes are being taken.

Although it will be termed a war film, this phase of the production and story is merely incidental to the production in order to more vividly portray the bright side of war.

More Drama Than Propaganda.

Sales Director J. L. Kempner, of the Manx-Man Company, is anxious to have recorded the fact that the Hall Caine film is not a propaganda subject, although having official sanction and calling for strong publicity along propaganda lines.

General Representative Leon Schlessinger, of the Manx-Man Company, is touring Indiana in behalf of the production, and reports bookings from Peru, Rochester, North Manchester and Warsaw.

Three States Sold on Ford Weeklies.

The Greiver Distributing Corp., national distributors of the Ford Educational Weekly, report the closing of Michigan, Ohio and Kentucky to the Standard Film Service Company, Cleveland.

State Right Director Stage-Manages Soldiers

RICHARD FIELD CARROLL will sever his connections with the Harry McRae Webster Productions, Inc., to take up work as dramatic director at Camp Sevier, S. C., having been appointed to this position by Franklin H. Sargent, chairman of the soldiers. Mr. Carroll reported at the War Department, Washington, Labor Day.

"Dick" Carroll, as his friends call him, and they are many, who has had a widely various career as actor-author-producer and moving picture scenarioist and director, is elated over his appointment and is eager to "do his bitterest." He claims to be the original "Pooh-Bah" of the Harry McRae Webster Productions, of which he has been a valued member since its inception.

Besides having supplied the story of "Reclaimed," he wrote the continuity and sub-titled, cast the play in every character to the very "atmosphere," directed all the exterior scenes of the same, assisted in the assembling and cutting of the film, acted as office manager and took charge of the entire Press Department. In his off hours, he also wrote several new stories for the company which he will now otherwise dispose of. The next production of this author will be staged by Uncle Samuel's boys at Camp Sevier.

Making San Antonio Producing Point.

Benjamin B. Hampton, director in the Vitagraph and Paralta companies, and closely associated with the W. W. Hodkinson corporation, has signed a five year contract with the Sunset Pictures Corporation of San Antonio for all pictures released by that concern. The move will make the South Texas city prominent on the motion picture map.

The Sunset Corporation plans to make many pictures in the near future for release through the Hodkinson organization. "The Forfeit" is now being timed for release in late September. Following this the company under direction of Frank Powell will produce "The Good Indian." Director Powell declares that San Antonio and the adjacent territory are rich in "locations" and ideal for making feature films.

Gaumont Weekly Bristles With Timely Topics

THOUGH the newspapers have been full of statements that our airplane program is not up to expectations, the current Gaumont News, No. 23, has a subject which will lead Kaiser Bill to think ous press has been what our British allies call "spooning", for it contains a number of scenes photographed on a Western flying field under the supervision of Major General Kenly, Chief of the Department of Military Aeronautics, which will, indeed, be bad news for Bill.

As far as the eye can see are airplanes and aviators to handle them. When it is considered that this is only one of the many fields now in operation, it will be realized that we intend to succeed in the air as well as on the land and sea.

The cordial entente existing between the United States and our sister republics, Argentina and Brazil, is shown in the reception which the Council of National Defense tendered the officers of the visiting battleships from these countries, and the reception by the Secretary of State of Dr Baithaser Brun, Uruguayan Minister of Foreign Affairs, who has come to the United States on a special mission. Both of these receptions, which are of international interest, are photographed in this number.

Field Day of New York's "Finest" at Sheepshead Bay, at which all attendance records were broken, the unveiling of the "Angelus Siren," which has been installed on the top of the highest building in Washington to remind the residents of the Capital to pray at noon of each day for the continued success of the Allied armies, the manner in which organized labor is proving its loyalty, and the way in which we are insuring the bread supply of our Allies and ourselves are included among the other subjects in this number of the News.

Official war pictures from France make up a goodly portion of Gaumont Graphic No. 23. The military funeral of Major Raoul Lufbery, the famous American "ace" and aviator who finally met his death after vanquishing more than two score German flyers;—splendid views of the 94th Aera Squadron, Co. D of the 101st Infantry, Co. E of the 167th Infantry; the Pigeon Carrier Service of the 26th Division, showing "Gunpowder 2nd" and "Buckshot 2nd," the first American trained pigeons to fly through barrage fire; and the decoration of American aviators for distinguished service, are some of the scenes shown in this war subject.

Other subjects in this issue include the fifty-second annual encampment of the G. A. R. in Portland, Ore.; the destructive fire which destroyed a great portion of Revere Beach, Boston's famous summer resort; the launching of Miss Detroit III, said to be the fastest motor-boat ever built; the reviving of century-idle shipyards in New England; beautiful bathing girls selling $60,000 worth of W. S. S., and the biggest naval regatta ever held in the United States, which was participated in by teams from naval training stations; visiting battleships, and American warships in port.

"Huns Within Our Gates" New Propaganda Feature

THE Arrow Film Corporation is about to offer on the state right market the six-part sensational photodrama "Huns Within Our Gates," in which Derwent Hall Caine, son of the English author, and Valla Valkyrien are starred. The production has been completed and is now being edited and titled at the Thanhouser Laboratories by Madame Marie Genores and Jesse J. Goldberg. The production deals with the operations of enemy aliens in America who seek to control the invention of an American citizen, which provides a powerful chemical to take the place of bulky gasoline in propelling aeroplanes.

The production was completed in July and the delay in releasing was occasioned by the holding up of official sanction for making certain scenes which have now been completed. Madame Genores, employed to assist in the editing of the production, was formerly chief editor for Pathe, and lately resigned as editor of film attractions for the Committee on Public Information, Division of Films. Madame Genores' last work for the government was the editing of "America's Answer," the second official government war review.

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, is authority for the statement that the distribution of "Huns Within Our Gates" is being made upon the basis of a minimum profit, with a view to essentially assist in spreading information to the American public concerning the insidious workings of the enemy alien residing in the United States. "Huns Within Our Gates" will be released about September 15.

"Panther Woman's" Settings Feature Nature Scenes

COMBINED with the various "punch" scenes and dramatic tensity of "The Panther Woman," Madame Petrova's forthcoming feature, Ralph Ince, director of the picture, has invested the production, according to publicity statements, with a scenic beauty seldom viewed in a screen play of this character. The story is a picturization of the novel, "Patience Sparhawk and Her Times," by Gertrude Atherton. With the cameraman, Harry B. Harris, Director Ince made a special trip to the old Mission section of Arizona, where the locale of Gertrude Atherton's novel is laid during the first half of the story. It was found possible to duplicate in almost every instance the exact scenes mentioned in "Patience Sparhawk and Her Times."

For her fifth special starring vehicle in which Petrova will shortly appear views of one of the oldest Missions in Arizona, together with many shots of spots in the mountains, will appear in the first three reels of "The Panther Woman." The cameraman managed to secure the much sought after stereoscopic effect in practically all of these scenes, and spectators will be afforded panoramic vistas seldom witnessed outside of strictly educational reels.

In the cast headed by the name of Olga Petrova will be found Rockcliffe Fellowes, well known to movie fans, and Tefft Johnson, one of the best known film players. Johnson was one of the mainstays of the Vitagraph Company of America for many years, and is also a director of note, now being employed by the World Film Corporation.

Cannibal Pictures Going Into Regular Theatres

ARRANGEMENTS have just been completed whereby the Robertson-Cole Company have taken over the world rights, including, of course, the United States and Canada, for Martin Johnson's series of pictorial adventures "Among the Cannibal Isles of the South Pacific." In all over fifty thousand feet of film is involved in the transaction.

It is the intention to put this feature out as an entire evening's entertainment in the legitimate houses of the country at $2 top prices. Other parts will be cut into different lengths for educational and scientific purposes, and several reels will shortly be released as one-reel scenics. After the feature has played a season in the big houses it will be available for the smaller picture houses of the country.

Mr. Johnson is already planning another trip to the South Sea Islands.

Washington News Letter

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

S. B. Lust Hears from His Brother.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—"We are giving the Huns ———," writes Ben Lust, who was formerly connected with the exchange operated by his brother, Sidney B. Lust, at 1209 E street, northwest. "I am stationed 'somewhere in the southern part of France,' and doing my bit. I suppose you know by this time that we have been in action. I would like to tell you all about it, but it is forbidden by the censor. * * * I'm in the best of health, and am going to a show which the Y. M. C. A. is staging tonight."

The writer of this interesting bit of news is now a corporal in Company E, 308th Infantry. When in the film game he occupied various positions in the employment of his brother, and by reason of his work with shows on the road was quite well known to the exhibitors throughout Virginia, Maryland and North Carolina.

Father of Lawrence Beatus Dies.

The sympathy of the moving picture men of Washington, D. C., is with Lawrence Beatus, manager of the Columbia Theatre, who met with the loss of his father, Max Beatus, aged 68 years. Manager Beatus had hardly returned to Washington from his father's home in Memphis, Tenn., where he had been spending his vacation, when he was called back on this sad errand.

Crandall Made Film Fuel Representative.

Harry M. Crandall, operator of a string of motion picture theatres in the District of Columbia, has been named as national representative of the film industry in all matters pertaining to fuel. His appointment to this work followed the visit to Washington of the New York members of the National Association.

With Mr. Crandall in this work will be associated an official of the Fuel Administration and a representative of the national association of the electric light men. All questions pertaining to the use of fuel in the theatres will be referred to this committee, and it will also present to the Fuel Administration such recommendations as may come from the film folks.

Arrangements are to be made for the running of slides and the hanging of posters in the theatres to help out the Fuel Administration in its conservation campaign. It looks very much as though Mr. Crandall has a big job ahead of him, but being right here in Washington and "in right," so to speak, he is conceded to be the right man for the job.

Washington Briefs.

Sidney B. Lust, of the Super Film Attractions, Inc., has just completed arrangements with the Washington Times whereby the serial story "The Hand of Vengeance" will be published incident to the appearance weekly of a half page advertisement boosting the show. This advertisement will be put out on a cooperative basis, Mr. Lust paying one half of the expense, the fifteen exhibitors who have booked the show splitting up the balance between them.

The Siamese twins, Joseph P. Morgan, of the Savoy theatre, and Maurice Davis, of the M Street theatre, are away on their vacation, touring "somewhere in the wilds of New Jersey." Mr. Morgan declares he is going to have one good vacation before being inducted into the Army. He feels sure this will happen when Congress passes the new law.

PROGRAMS AT FAMILY AND STRAND ALIKE

Rochester Theatre Concern Tries Out Policy of Featuring Same Bills at Two of Its Houses on Sundays

By L. B. Skeffington, 61 Main Street, East, Rochester, N. Y.

THE Theatres Operating Company, Albert A. Fennyvessey, president and general manager, has adopted a new Sunday policy for two of its Rochester houses. Double-feature film programs will be shown at the Family and the Strand, the same films at both houses. Both are large theatres, centrally located downtown and only a block apart on the same street. The slogan under which the new schedule is being advertised is: "If one house is filled try to get into the other." The double system goes into effect on Sunday, September 1, and for the first three Sundays in the month the same stars will shine. They are Theda Bara and William Farnum. The films in which these two stars will be seen are not new, but they are being advertised right and will undoubtedly go over big in this town. A Chaplin comedy and the Screen Telegram will be shown in addition to the two features.

Seven Stars in Lyndhurst's Service Flag.

There are seven stars on the service flag of the Lyndhurst Theatre, Rochester. Manager Irving N. Salyerds is proud of his "boys" who are away with the colors, fighting for Uncle Sam. Following is the list of former Lyndhurst employes who are now in the service: Chief Yeoman Fred Koch, Newport, R. I.; Sergeant William Schwalb, Company H, 108th Infantry, France; Milton Cushman, United States Marines; Clarence Toeuy, navy; William Charlesworth, in France; Clarence Lutz, Engineer Corps, in Virginia; Walter McTurk, Quartermaster's Corps.

Two Griffith Features in Rochester.

There are two Griffith productions being shown in Rochester this week. "Hearts of the World" is playing to top prices at the Lyceum, a "legitimate" house. "The Great Love" is running all week at the Regent. It seems that these two films are being booked in tandem in this section and with considerable. When "Hearts of the World" opened for a three weeks' run at the Majestic in Buffalo, "The Great Love" opened for a week at Shea's.

Will Get Jobs Back After the War.

J. H. Moore, of the Temple Theatre, announces that the seven employes of that house who are now serving with our fighting forces will all find their old jobs or better ones waiting for them when they return from the big adventure on the other side of the pond.

Shea, international president of the Theatrical Stage Employes and Motion Picture Operators' Union. It is said that the Governor and Mr. Shea are old friends and that their meeting was merely of personal interest.

PATHE'S SEATTLE OFFICE IS MOST MODERN

New Home of Exchange Equipped with Every Facility for Efficient and Quick Handling of Film

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

THE Seattle Pathe force is getting settled in the new building at 2113 Third avenue, which has been all dressed up with a flagpole and a big, brand new flag. On being escorted through the various rooms of the building we saw a thoroughly equipped, modern exchange, with every possible aid to the orderly, efficient handling of film. There were rows and rows of stacks for different sized paper. There were two large storage vaults with big air vents and a can of eucalyptus oil sitting on the floor to keep the film pliable. In one vault were several racks of junk film just in from a year's sojourn in Alaska. This was to be returned to the head office, where it would be turned over to the Government for burning and extracting the valuable amount of silver used in developing them.

The projection room is the only one in the city which boasts two machines. The business offices in the front of the building are separated from one another by glass partitions.

The exchange would have settled down to regular routine earlier if there had not been so many changes due to enlistments in various branches of the service. L. A. Samuelson, the booker, joined the merchant marine, and left last week for the Philippines. On the same boat that he embarked on was W. W. Kofeldt, who preceded L. O. Lukan as manager of the Seattle office. Ed Hudson, the shipper, also left last week for service, entering the naval training school at the University of Washington.

Ashley McRae, booker and assistant manager of the Vitagraph office, has taken Mr. Samuelson's place. William Fletcher has taken over the shipping work, and Delbert Milne has charge of the poster department. A change has also been made in the sales force, Edward Barnhart, Jr., of Kansas City, having been engaged to take the place of E. V. Fauser as salesman in Washington State. Mr. Barnhart has had two years service in France with the Canadian Aviation Corps.

Hurn Enters the Service.

H. H. Hurn, Seattle Triangle manager, resigned this week to enter the non-commissioned officers' training school at the University of Washington. R. W. Lyneh, vice-president of the corporation, arrived a few days before Mr. Hurn's departure and will see a new manager established before going on.

Ackerman Visits Seattle.

Irving Ackerman, of the firm of Ackerman and Harris, of San Francisco, which operates a circuit of Hippodrome theatres on the Coast, spent a few days in Seattle this week. While here he also signed a contract for the appearance of his vaudeville and pictures at the Orpheus Theatre at Camp Lewis. Ackerman and Harris show Metro, Triangle and World pictures at their houses, as well as six acts of vaudeville.

Manager W. A. Sheetz, of the Vendome Theatre, will intersperse musical comedy, Shakespeare and drama this season with high-class movies, his first booking being the second Government war film, "America's Answer," which is billed for the third week in September. LIBSON SIGNS CONTRACT FOR FIRST-RUNS

Cincinnati Manager to Have Initial Showings of Artcraft, Paramount and Select Pictures

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati.

MANAGER J. LIBSON, of the Walnut, Strand and Family theatres, Cincinnati, has just completed negotiations under which his theatres will handle the first run in this city of all Artcraft-Paramount pictures for another year, as well as those of the Select Pictures Corporation. The Libson houses have been handling Artcraft-Paramount pictures for several years, which means before the consolidation of the two companies as well as since. Mr. Libson also announces a new policy at the Strand, by which a single attraction will be run an entire week instead of with a mid-week change of program as at present. The business handled has been of sufficient volume to justify the change, as it has been clearly indicated that there is a steady patronage for a picture for at least a full week if not more.

"America's Answer" at the Opera House.

Arrangements were made during a recent visit to Cincinnati by T. W. Bonneville for the exhibition at the Grand Opera House during the week of September 1 of "America's Answer," the second official Government film. Mr. Bonneville represented the Committee on Public Information, which is handling the film. It is composed of eight reels built up of more than 30,000 feet of moving pictures taken in France of the forces under General Pershing, comprising the first half million men landed on the other side, and, in view of the splendid accomplishments of this initial force in battle the film is bound to attract widespread attention.

Covingtonites See Griffith Film.

For perhaps the first time in local moving picture history a film of unusual interest has been shown on the Kentucky side of the river immediately opposite Cincinnati before appearing in the city proper. This occurred in the case of the new Griffith film, "Hearts of the World," which, through a state rights arrangement, was released for exhibition in Covington at the Rialto before arriving for the use of any Cincinnati house. The result was that not a few people took the green cars and went over to Covington to see the picture, reversing the usual process in these parts. The space which the newspapers gave to reviews of the picture is a striking commentary on the advance which has been made by moving pictures during the past few years, as the reviewers treated it with all of the care and seriousness of an important dramatic production, as it is.

Cincinnati in Government Film.

Cincinnati will figure prominently in a series of films which the Government is preparing for world-wide distribution for educational purposes dealing with American cities and industries. The Cincinnati films will comprise a total of thirty reels, and will be prepared, in so far as they are not already available, by Clarence Runey, of the Cincinnati Motion Picture Company, who has made thousands of feet of Cincinnati film of all sorts. Captions in various foreign languages will be used in order to give the films the highest usefulness in the countries where they are shown.

Lyric Reverts to the "Legitimate."

The summer lease on the Lyric Theatre, Cincinnati, during which it has been successfully operated with moving pictures under the management of Milton Pillman, expired on August 24, and the house reverted to the usual winter "regular" season management of C. Hubert Heuck. As already reported the two seasons were appropriately bridged, as the custom has been for several years, by an engagement of the Lyman J. Howe travel pictures.

Hurley Gives Soldier's Comfort Matinee.

TWO original ideas were worked out recently by S. C. Hurley, manager of the Hayden-Gibson Theatres, Woodstock. The first was called a Soldier's Comfort Matinee, and each child attending was asked to bring a gift suitable to be sent to a man overseas. Each child who brought a present was given a ticket for a matinee later in the week. The result was that 115 comforts were brought to the theatre, including eighty packages of cigarettes. The other matinee was called a cinematograph tribute to Woodstock's Heroes. Photographs of the men from Woodstock who have fallen in battle were procured by the manager, together with a short history of each. These pictures were shown on the screen and the facts of the man's career told. A recitation of the famous poem, "In Flanders Field," was also made at an appropriate moment.

By Indiana Trade News Service, 69 Layman Avenue, Indianapolis, Ind.

EVANSVILLE.—The opening of the American Theatre, this city, on Wednesday, August 21, marked the establishment of one of the most modern and up-to-date moving picture theatres in the city. No care nor expense was spared by the management, the Strand Amusement Company, which also operates the Strand Theatre here, in making the new theatre attractive and comfortable for the patrons.

In addition to the highest class of films that will be exhibited special attention has been given to the musical entertainment, and a Photoplayer organ, identical in design with the one used in the Strand Theatre, has been installed in the new house. Another matter which has received special attention is the ventilation, which is cared for by a system of typhoon fans, which change the air in the theatre every two minutes.

The interior decorations are a replica of Italian scenery, authentic in their reproduction and something new in the art of interior decoration.

C. A. WAGNER, who for a number of years has operated the Paramount Theatre at Connellsville, Pa., has taken over the Soisson Theatre at Connellsville, which was recently closed by Mrs. Robbins, who operated the theatre since the death of her husband. Wagner will remodel the theatre and open it to pictures exclusively. This is the third house to come under Mr. Wagner's management in a short time, he having purchased an interest in the Rex Theatre at Uniontown recently as well. Wagner at one time ran the old Globe Theatre in Connellsville, and his success with it determined his course in enlarging his interests by erecting the Paramount. He now controls two out of three picture houses in this thriving coke town, and business is always good.

APPLAUD "ITALY'S FLAMING FRONT"

Hundreds of Members of Dallas' "Little Italy" See War Feature at Hulsey's Hippodrome—It Stirs Them

TO THE martial strains of the Garibaldi Battle Hymn hundreds of members of the Dallas Italian colony filed into Hulsey's Hippodrome Theatre, to be stirred to the depths of their patriotism by the presentation of "Italy's Flaming Front," the feature for the last week in August.

Special pains had been taken by Manager Herschel Stewart, of the Hulsey interests, to call attention of North Texas Italians to this presentation of a battle picture featuring the heroes of their native land. It was advertised in all Italian papers. Italians came from many outside towns and demonstrated their enthusiasm by tumultuous applause.

The theatre was decorated with Italian battle flags, and a special tribute to Italy's part in the war was made at the conclusion of the film. This war feature is going big in Dallas and has been widely booked in all parts of the Southwest.

It's an ill wind which blows nobody good. One of those who made hay while the sun shone was W. J. Lytle, of San Antonio. He says that his airdome at Del Rio in the border country has broken all records for a summer season. It is largely patronized by troops of the border patrol.

A. logging huts at Crossett, each of which will have a free motion picture show daily for the benefit of the men working in the woods. DROUGHT CAUSES POWER SAVING ORDER

Steps Taken to Conserve California's Hydro-Electric Energy, Reduced by Lack of Rains

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO.—The scarcity of electric energy, brought about by two seasons of unparalleled drought, which has greatly reduced the supply of hydro-electric power, has resulted in the promulgation of a drastic order by State Power Administrator H. G. Butler, whereby an end has been made to all unnecessary lighting in northern and central California. This order, which is effective until the first of October, and which may be extended past that date, specifies that no electrical energy shall be used for advertisements, notices, announcements, or signs, designating the location of an office or place of business, or the nature of any business, except on Saturdays, Sundays and legal holidays. The external illumination of buildings for ornamentation is forbidden, and stores may not be lighted, except when open for business.

This order is being strictly enforced, and San Francisco, formerly known as the best-lighted city in the world, with its famous "Path of Gold" and galaxy of brightly lighted moving picture houses, is now sadly dimmed. The amusement business has not been affected to any marked extent by the plan of power conservation, possibly because of the daylight saving system in vogue and the exceptional attractions that have been offered since the order became effective. Should early rains occur, the power situation may be relieved by the first of October, but in case the drought continues, the present restrictions are expected to be extended for an indefinite period.

Film Stars Appear at Theatres.

Several prominent film stars have been here of late working on productions requiring a change from the stereotyped scenes of Southern California, and some of these have appeared in person at local theatres. Colleen Moore, the young star of the picturization of "A Hoosier Romance," has also been here, and appeared in person at the Strand Theatre, where she viewed this production for the first time in its finished form.

Rialto Adds to Its Staff.

The management of the Rialto Theatre has secured the services of J. H. Walraven, formerly of New York, and in the future the presentation of shows will be under his direction. Mr. Walraven brings a fund of experience along this line, having been connected with some of the finest theatres in the East.

New Officers for Operators' Union.

Owing to the fact that the former secretary of Moving Picture Operators' Union Local No. 162 has resigned to accept a commission in the army a change has been made in the personnel of the officers. Former president Arthur F. Howell has been made secretary and Meyer Goodman has been chosen president. The post of business agent is now being filled by P. Boyle. Former Business Agent L. G. Dolliver, who is now connected with the office of the International organization, was here a short time ago and appointed Mr. Boyle special delegate for the association in this district. The new wage agreement with exhibitors is working out to the satisfaction of all. Several members of the local union have been released from military duty, and, since several theatres have been closed, the threatened shortage of operators has been averted. Extensive preparations have been made for the sixth annual ball to be featured shortly for the sick and death benefit fund of the organization, and prominent film stars and city officials will take part in this.

Made Major in Junior Marine Scouts.

Becomes American Film Representative.

Bowles, for years proprietor of the Bell Theatre at Livermore, Cal., and which he sold in order to enter the distributing end of the film industry, has become the representative of the American Film Company in the San Francisco territory. INSTRUCTS SALESMEN IN TALKING POINTS

Official of Canadian Universal at Toronto Shows Company's Roadmen Selling Arguments of Releases

By W M Gladish, 33 Wineva Ave., Toronto.

ONE of the first moves made by J. R. McKenny, the new assistant general manager of the Canadian Universal Film Company, Toronto, was to provide for the holding of meetings of salesmen in the office each Saturday morning. He has adopted this plan because he believes that many salesmen in the past have alway been ignorant of the big talking points in various releases. In addition, he is educating the salesmen to do more than sell films to an exhibitor. He declares that he wants the road men to be in a position to make valuable suggestions to the exhibitors so that they will always be willing and able to make good money with pictures booked. He believes that this course will result in more business for both the exhibitors and the Universal Company.

Developments at the Toronto Universal office were somewhat held up because of an embargo on express shipments from New York to Toronto during a part of August, and Manager McKenny announced that if the restriction continued the company would arrange to ship films and paper from Buffalo to Toronto, a distance of 125 miles, by motor trucks.

Announcement has been made that Loew's Theatre, Toronto, will show "The Geezer of Berlin" during the week of September 16. Winsor McCay's pen picture, "The Sinking of the Lusitania," will be released simultaneously in two Toronto theatres, according to Mr. McKenny. "Crashing Through to Berlin" will be given a special presentation in Toronto shortly also.

Mr. McKenny pointed out that the embargo on express shipments affected only those parcels addressed to Toronto, and that packages addressed from New York to Montreal were going through without delay or difficulty.

Griffith Pictures Go Big in Alaska.

"The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance" are both meeting with fine success in Alaska, where these Griffith productions are being presented for the first time. The Alaska territory was included in the Canadian rights for the features, and Toronto and Calgary men are in charge of the tour. The manager and operator is Thomas Amberson, of Toronto, while the advance man is Dr. Roy Barnum, of Calgary, Alberta, formerly of the United Producing Company. Although the features lacked the orchestral and mechanical effects of a Broadway presentation the natives were impressed with the pictures. Amberson will start for home before he finds himself frozen in for the winter, which means that he plans to return before the end of September.

Regal Releases Gaumont Serial in Canada.

Regal Films, Toronto and other cities, has arranged for the release in Canada of the Gaumont serial, "The Hand of Vengeance." Bookings will be taken immediately, it was announced.

Film Exchange Changes Its Name.

The new Canadian exchange company organized by three prominent film men of Toronto is officially to be known as the Exhibitors' Distributing Corporation, Limited, instead of the National Film Corporaton, Limited. Announcement is also made that the company has taken over all the releases formerly controlled by Superfeatures, Limited, and that the latter concern has become a holding company in the new organization.

It is also interesting to note that Charles Stevens is no more. He is now Charles Stephenson. The former was the stage name of the latter, and now that he is far removed from the thought of returning to the footlights he has forgotten the abbreviated form of cognomen. He was formerly general manager of Superfeatures, Limited, and he has been appointed general manager of the Exhibitors' Distributing Corporation.

Arranged Special Music for Metro Feature.

For the presentation of "Toys of Fate," a Screen Classic feature released through Metro starring Nazimova, at the Dominion Theatre, Victoria, B. C., during the week of August 19, a special musical program was given by the Dominion Theatre Orchestra. The numbers included Tschaikowsky's "One Who Has Yearned Alone," Massenet's "Elegie," Huerter's "Told at Twilight," and Schubert's overture from "Rosmunde." This high class program made a distinct hit.

Plays to Big Business with Serials.

The Monarch Theatre, Toronto, is making quite a drive with serial pictures. At the present time it is booked solid with three serials, one for each of three changes of program during the week. "The Eagle's Eye" is shown on Mondays and Tuesdays, "A Fight for Millions" on Wednesdays and Thursdays, and "The House of Hate" on Fridays and Saturdays.

Made-in-Toronto Picture Shown.

An event of unique importance in moving picture developments in Canada was the presentation for the first time of a made-in-Toronto photoplay at the Oakwood Theatre before a distinguished audience. The picture was the "handiwork" of W. J. Craft, of Toronto, formerly a cameraman of note with the Kalem and other companies, who is now associated with the Adanac Film Company, Limited, of Toronto. The new picture, which was unnamed at the time of presentation, was taken and finished within one week.

The subject was presented at the Oakwood during the whole week, during which time suggestions were received from patrons for the title. It was announced that the person suggesting the winning title would be given a camera test, which would be screened at the theatre at a later date.

The Adanac Company proposes to take pictures for various theatres in Canada under similar conditions. It is backed by a number of prominent local exchange men, and the Canadian film industry was well represented at the premier presentation. The Oakwood Theatre issued a sixteen-page souvenir program for the occasion.

Roberts Resigns as Manager of the Regent

Roland Roberts, of Toronto, announced his resignation as manager of the Regent Theatre, Toronto, on Monday, August 26, to take effect on September 7. Mr. Roberts declared that he had made no arrangements for the future. He has managed the Regent, Toronto, and the St. Denis Theatre, Montreal, for the Regal interests in Canada.

Simultaneously with his announcement came William Griffith Mitchell, manager of the Strand Theatre, White Plains, N. Y., for a visit among old friends in Toronto. Mr. Mitchell was formerly the manager of the Regent, Toronto, and assistant manager of the Strand, Toronto. He declared that there was no significance in his return to Toronto, and that he would return to White Plains at the end of the week.

Plays Up Birthplace of Vitagraph Star.

Manager Murdoch, of the Variety Theatre, Victoria, B. C., made a special attraction of "God's Country and the Woman," a Vitagraph feature, by playing up the fact that Nell Shipman, star of the picture, was born in Victoria. She is the daughter of G. H. Barham, who was formerly associated with the B. C. Pottery Company, and who is now prominently connected with the shipbuilding industry of British Columbia.

"God's Country and the Woman" played to big business at the Variety during its week's engagement, after which it went back to Vancouver where it had previously made a hit.

Gives "Review" of Comedians' Pictures.

The Grand Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, conducted a "review" of successes of Douglas Fairbanks and Charles Chaplin during the three days of August 22, 23 and 24 that proved to be a notable stunt. There was a complete change of program each day, and the Grand Concert Orchestra gave special musical numbers at each show. The afternoon admission price was twenty cents, and the price for evening performances was twenty-five cents, with children ten cents.

Stonge Improves the Coliseum.

Manager Fred Stonge has made a decided improvement at the Coliseum Theatre, Toronto, by the installation of a new screen and the reducing of several ports in the projection room to arrest considerable vagrant light from the machines.

First Showing of "Triple Trouble" in Canada.

The very first release in Canada of "Triple Trouble," the Chaplin comedy, was at the Imperial Theatre, Montreal, during the three days of August 25, 26 and 27. This is the largest exclusive photoplay house now open in Montreal. On the same bill was "The Claws of the Hun," featuring Charles Ray.

Reduces Admission Price for Children.

One reason why the management of the Bijou Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, reduced the admission price to children to nine cents from the straight "dime" was that the provincial war tax does not affect admissions of less than ten cents. The Calgary kids can now see a show at the Bijou for two cents less than formerly, although the theatre gave a reduction of only one cent. The war tax act provides a tax of one cent on all admissions from ten to twenty cents and a 2½-cent tax on admissions from twenty cents to 75 cents.

Canadian Short Items.

The Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ontario, has concluded its summer stock season, and has reverted to the policy of featuring moving pictures for the fall and winter. The Savoy Theatre, Hamilton, is also presenting moving pictures exclusively, although it was primarily a burlesque house.

The new manager of the Regent Theatre, Guelph, Ontario, is James Davidson, formerly a salesman of the Regal Films, Limited, Toronto. This theatre was recently acquired by the Paramount Theatres, Limited. Mr. Davidson may be in charge only temporarily, it is declared.

"Hands Up," the new Pathe serial, had its first Toronto run at the Globe Theatre, Toronto, which is managed by Mr. Piton.

Irving Unger, formerly of the Metro and Regal offices in Toronto, has joined the United States Army, and is now stationed at Camp Gordon in Georgia. Before leaving Toronto, Mr. Unger was presented with a cigarette case by friends and associates.

Al. J. Miville is no longer the assistant manager of the Allen Theatre, Toronto. Mr. Miville announced his resignation, after which he left for Montreal for a vacation. Mr. Miville, who is a discharged Canadian soldier, was formerly with Chicago and Milwaukee exchanges.

FIRST-RUN HOUSES DOING BIG BUSINESS

Detroit's Six Initial-Showing Theatres Now Operating Full Blast—Programs at the Different Houses

By Jacob Smith, 719 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

ALL of Detroit's full week first-run theatres are now operating full blast, and from the business they are doing, it is certainly evident that Detroit can operate six such houses.

The Majestic, Woodward and Willis reopened Sunday, August 25, and Managing Director M. W. McGee has been the recipient of many congratulations for the way he has fixed over the theatre—redecorating throughout, adding new draperies and furnishings, and making a big change on the stage, so that he can put on big musical numbers and give each picture a special stage set if he wants to. Prices the current season will be twenty-five cents at all evening, Sunday matinee and holiday shows—this means that not a seat will be less than twenty-five cents and yet no seat will cost more. This is a change from last season, when about 500 seats were priced at fifty cents. Manager McGee will cling to the policy of open booking, and his first seven weeks consist of "More Trouble," "Friend Husband," "Today," "His Birthright," "A Hoosier Romance," and two Jewel productions.

The Broadway-Strand, the coming season, will have as stars Clara Kimball Young, Charles Ray, Caruso, Lila Lee, and others.

The Adams, Washington and Madison Theatres, will use about 100 pictures through the Artcraft-Paramount exchanges, besides three stars out of the Select exchange.

The Regent Theatre will have four Goldwyn stars—Pauline Frederick, Geraldine Farrar, Madge Kennedy and Mabel Normand, and besides, a number of Paramount stars. However, the Regent will have open time for the big specials that are released from time to time. C. A. Meade is announced as manager of the Regent. He was formerly with Pathe and Vitagraph as special representative and division manager. The reopening of the Regent as a first-run house took place Sunday, September 1, with "The Hun Within" as the premier attraction.

Hyman Leases the Detroit Opera House.

Arthur S. Hyman, of the Dawn Masterplay Company, has personally leased the Detroit Opera House, which he has renamed the Campus Theatre. He plans to play big specials only following "The Hearts of the World," which will probably wind up its twelfth week before leaving there. The lease is a month to month proposition and can be abrogated by either party at any time upon thirty days' notice.

Triangle and Madison Exchanges Move.

He is one of the oldest film men in Detroit in point of service, starting with the old Cadillac Film Company in 1912. He succeeds Earl Hennessy at the Maxine, who has gone with the Goldwyn exchange as assistant to J. E. Flynn.

Prices are ten, twenty and thirty cents; policy, four changes weekly.

Buys Rights on Exclusive Feature.

Dave Mundstuk, of the Strand Features, Detroit, has purchased the Michigan rights to "Who's Afraid of the Hun," an Exclusive Feature. Dave has two prints on this two-reel subject which he expects to be a clean-up. Dave also reports that business on his Chaplin and Arbuckle comedies is so good that he can scarcely get an open date for weeks ahead.

Fontaine Succeeds Ranshaw at Fox

Eddie Fontaine, recently city salesman in Detroit for Artcraft-Paramount, and former manager of the Pathe exchange, has been appointed assistant branch manager of the Fox exchange, to succeed George Ranshaw, who left September 1 to enter the United States Naval Training Station at Great Lakes, Ill., as a yeoman.

Detroit Brevities.

Under a new plan just effected, the Standard Film Service Company, of Detroit, Cleveland and Cincinnati, will hereafter distribute the Ford Weekly in Ohio and Michigan.

Peter L. Smith, formerly one of the partners in the State Film Company, which was recently sold, has affiliated with the George Kleine exchange as booker and city salesman in Detroit.

"Triple Trouble" played the Miles Theatre, Detroit, the entire week of September 1. Manager A. J. Reed, of the George Kleine exchange in Detroit, says he has three prints booked solid.

Oscar Price, formerly an exhibitor in Rochester and Traverse City, has leased the Baker Theatre, Detroit, from Fred North.

Michigan Theatre Notes.

The New Liberty Theatre, Holly, Mich., owned by J. P. Allen, opened September 1.

The New Bijou Theatre, Hudson, Mich., opened September 1, with "Hearts of the World." This theatre is equipped with two Power's machines and Velvet Gold Fibre screen, and has 450 seats. Harold Weiss is the lessee. The theatre was formerly the opera house and town hall.

Eugene S. Brewer, of the Strand Theatre, Owosso, Mich., is the proud father of another baby boy—he arrived August 19, weighing 10 pounds. "Papa" was recently in Detroit, passing around smokes because of the happy event.

RENOVATED BLUE MOUSE THEATRE OPENS

Baltimoreans Have Practically a New House in Overhauled Structure—Arthur B. Price, Manager

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

PRESENTING an entirely new appearance to its patrons the Blue Mouse Theatre, 28 West Lexington street, Baltimore, which is owned by Max Covalerchek, reopened under the management of Arthur B. Price, the well known film man of Baltimore, who is a pioneer in the game. Mr. Price is also directing the affairs of the Rialto Theatre, North avenue near Linden, and is booking the pictures for the Aurora Theatre, 7 East North avenue.

The lobby of the Blue Mouse has been entirely remodeled. The box office, which was formerly located to the right as you enter, has been set in the frame work of the outer doors. A floor of small tiles has been laid, with an ornamental border. A paneled ceiling, from which hang three inverted lights with ivory finished globes, gives a clear, soft effect. The color scheme is old ivory and brown. The operating room has been widened by about three feet, with two large windows opening on the lobby. The interior of the house has been redecorated and painted, and the color scheme of old ivory and brown is here carried out. Brown damask curtains hang at the double entrances. The estimated cost of the improvements was several thousand dollars, according to Mr. Covalerchek.

Pictures Aid Home for Children.

For the benefit of the St. Vincent de Paul Country Home for children, of Catonsville, Md., a moving picture entertainment was held in St. Paul's parish house, Caroline and Oliver streets, on Friday evening, August 23, under the auspices of the women of the parish. Vivian Martin in "The Trouble Buster" was the attraction.

Bushman Club to Meet.

The annual convention of the Bushman Club, which is an organization for the purpose of elevating the moving picture screen and influencing the public for clean pictures, will be held at Bushmanor, the country estate of Francis X. Bushman, the Metro star, at Riderwood, Green Spring Valley, Md., on Saturday, August 31. Five hundred delegates are scheduled to be present at the gathering, and it is said that delegates representing chapters in 30 states will be present. Mr. Bushman is honorary president of the club, and Mrs. Alice R. Allen, 3011 Abell avenue, Baltimore, is secretary. Mrs. Allen will head the Baltimore delegation. Mr. Bushman will be the host on the occasion. A business meeting will be held, which will be followed by a program of music, speeches, classic dancing and moving pictures. A moving picture will be taken to demonstrate the method, all the members acting in the film.

Women Musicians at the Maryland.

When the Maryland Theatre opened its season on Monday, August 26, Manager Frederick C. Schanberger came out on the stage and announced that as the musical union had made a demand of 50 per cent. increase in wages he had filled the places in his orchestra with women. He had engaged twelve women for the orchestra, but only six put in an appearance. It is claimed that the new rates are consistent with those now paid in Washington; that the Baltimore musicians have long been underpaid, that no raise has been asked in 10 years in the principal theatres, and that the proposed 40 per cent. increase only includes what they are entitled to. The picture, "The Historic Fourth of July in Paris," was shown at the Maryland last week, the rental going to the Red Cross.

Pictures Aid Farm Reserve.

One thousand feet of moving pictures showing the activities of the boys enlisted in the United States Boys' Working Reserve picking peaches in Western Maryland and picking peas around Westminster, Md., and their method of life while in the camps were shown at the City College on Monday night, August 26, before an audience of mothers, students and relatives of the boys. These pictures were taken by Harry Lewy, of the Wizard Theatre Company, to aid the working reserve movement. Mr. Lewy made a special trip to the camps where the boys are located and obtained a thousand feet. So powerful was the effect of the pictures on the audience, that when a call was made for 100 students of the second and third classes of the college for farm and orchard work during September and October, over the number gave an immediate and enthusiastic response.

ISIS THEATRE LARGEST IN KANSAS CITY

It Is One of the Most Beautiful in the West—Has a Big Hope-Jones Organ and a Ten-Piece Orchestra

By Kansas City News Service, 115 Rail- way Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.

THE new Isis Theatre, Thirty-first street and Troost avenue, Kansas City, opened Wednesday, August 21, and immediately stepped into its place as the largest motion picture house in the city and one of the most beautiful in the West. The decorations, which are green and cream throughout, with the exception of a shell pink boudoir for women, are a harmonious background for the profusion of flowers, ferns and greenery of all kinds in hanging baskets and pedestals covered with bark which fill every corner.

Through a long, marble wainscoted lobby patrons enter the most charming part of the theatre, a foyer, 32 feet wide and 82 long. The furnishings are of natural wicker with draperies of cretonne covered with an Egyptian motif. Floor cages of canaries, baskets of flowers, pictures, and an alcove with fireplace and easy chairs give the place a homelike atmosphere hard to associate with a public rest room. In fact, the Isis is apparently built to fill its place in the minds of the suburban patrons as a neighborhood institution this winter. A nursery for the children with a maid in attendance is one of the conveniences which should encourage theatregoing.

The theatre proper is the longest building of its kind in Kansas City, being 164 feet from the projection room to the screen. The seating arrangement provides for two balconies and the orchestra, built on the order of an amphitheatre, with a long, slow ascension, and no division between the three except wide aisles. The Isis seats 1,800 persons, and, in spite of its great size, one can see perfectly from any place in the building. Along the walls are great arched panels inclosing long French windows of stained glass. The stage is large, and can be converted easily into use for private theatricals or amateur exhibitions of that nature. One of the points which is most worthy of mention is the projection room, which is 22 by 14 by 12, and well ventilated.

The music is furnished by a twenty-thousand-dollar Hope-Jones organ and a ten-piece orchestra, the organ being used exclusively during the matinee performances. The Isis is the only suburban house in the city to run a matinee, and it is an experiment which is being watched with considerable interest by other exhibitors. The admission charge is 15 and 10 cents all over the house.

A. H. Bandy, who is managing the theatre, has been in the moving picture business for some years, first being connected with the Pathe exchange here and later in charge of several of the larger houses in the South.

David Horsley Visits Kansas City.

David Horsley, producer for the George Ovey Cub Comedies, and C. Williams stopped in Kansas City to call upon I. F. Mantzke, of the Mutual Film Exchange. Mr. Horsley is on his way to Washington from the Coast, and will stop off in Chicago, Boston and Philadelphia. Within the next five or six weeks Mr. Horsley will announce some news which will be of interest to the exchanges.

Leading Theatres Book Hayakawa Films.

The Mutual Film Corporation's Kansas City office has closed contracts on the Sessue Hayakawa productions with every leading theatre in the State of Missouri, according to Manager I. F. Mantzke. The new Isis Theatre has booked the Hayakawa pictures and also the Chester Outing and Screen Telegram.

Many Small Towns Show on Sunday.

Many small towns in Kansas and Missouri are gradually getting away from the hidebound attitude toward the Sunday showing, and many of them are booking Sunday in addition to Saturday. Most communities are particularly well-disposed toward patriotic films, and these are the least apt to arouse antagonism.

Exhibitor Notes.

C. W. Simons will open the American Theatre at Ninth street and Troost avenue, Kansas City, about September 1. Mr. Simons has contracted for Goldwyn service.

N. B. Morris, Mankato, Kan., and Fred Savage, of the DeLuxe Theatre, Hutchinson, were in Kansas City last week.

M. W. Goddard, manager of the Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo., gave a big patriotic benefit for the Red Cross, August 20, showing the Metro screen classic, "Lest We Forget."

J. H. Cooper, Wichita, Kan., who has been connected with several of the leading photoplay houses in the Southwest, was in Kansas City for a few days recently arranging the program for his new theatre, the Wichita, which will open shortly.

Richard Flynn, owner of the Wonderland, Twelfth street, and Garden theatres, Kansas City, has closed with the Fox Film Corporation for its entire output during the year 1918-19.

Exchange Notes.

W. E. Truog, manager of the Kansas City branch of the World Film Corporation, has left on a week's trip to the home office in New York.

John A. Stevenson, district representative of the W. H. Hodkinson Enterprises, will arrive in Kansas City shortly from Cincinnati for a few days' visit.

C. S. Edwards, manager of the Kansas City office of the General Film Company, reports heavy bookings on "The Historic Fourth of July in Paris, 1918." The exchange is using three prints of the subject, and they are booked solid for some time to come.

W. C. Ansell, for a short time with the Camp-Bell Company, Kansas City, is now Western representative for the Kansas City office of Goldwyn Pictures, Inc.

Among the Exhibitors.

Fort Madison, Ia.—Owen & Payson, architects, 202 Reliance Building, Kansas City, have plans under way for a moving picture theatre to cost approximately $30,000. The building will be one story, 50 by 145, and of brick and terra cotta construction.

TORNADO SWEEPS BY SCENIC THEATRE

And Leaves It the Only Building Intact on the Main Street of Tyler, Minn.—Hundreds in Audience

By William Edward Mulligan, Minneapolis Journal, Minneapolis, Minn.

TWO hundred persons comprising the audience in the Scenic Theatre had a miraculous escape from death when a tornado swept and destroyed the major portion of the town of Tyler, Minn., Wednesday, August 21. The theatre, of which Westlund Brothers are the proprietors, was the only building left standing on the main street of the town. Thirty-three persons were killed and 150 injured in the disaster. The damage is estimated at $1,000,000. William A. Lochren, of the Lochren Film Company of Minneapolis, had moving pictures taken of the tornado-swept town, and the pictures were shown within three days at the Minneapolis Strand Theatre and other houses.

Buys Mandan House.

Joe Maitland, who has been managing the Palace Theatre at Mandan, N. D., for the last half year, recently purchased the interest of H. L. Hartman in the house. Mr. Maitland was for years in the show business in the Twin Cities, and has built up a splendid patronage at the Mandan Theatre.

Concern Changes Name.

The Elliott-Sherman Film Corporation is now known as the Elliott Film Corporation. The name was changed at a recent meeting of the board of directors because Harry Sherman, former president, has not been connected with the concern since April, 1917. The officers of the corporation are J. E. Elliott, president; A. E. Nelson, vice-president; F. Y. Elliott, secretary.

Chief Auditor Appointed.

C. B. Howe, traveling auditor for Universal, who has been spending the past month at the Minneapolis exchange, was recently appointed chief auditor for the West, and will leave soon for Denver, where he will make his headquarters. He will make trips twice a year to exchanges at Salt Lake City, Butte, Omaha, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Portland and Seattle.

Mechanic Wins Distinction.

William Phillips, formerly mechanic for the Theatre Equipment Company of Minneapolis, went to war more than a year ago a private. Last week he returned to Minneapolis with two hero medals and a lieutenancy in the United States army. Lieutenant Phillips was the first Twin City moving picture man to be wounded and to receive both the French Croix de Guerre and the British war cross for bravery in action. After spending a furlough in Minneapolis he left the city to return to duty in France under General Pershing.

"The Geezer" Still Going Big.

"The Geezer of Berlin" had a week's run at the New Palace in Minneapolis, and proved one of the best drawing attractions ever shown at the house, notwithstanding the heat and the fact that Ringling Brothers circus played against it the first two days of the week, according to Manager Harry Beilings. The picture also was a great drawing card at the New Palace in St. Paul.

"Lusitania Sinking" Here.

"The Sinking of the Lusitania," Winsor McCay's great historial animated drawing of the sea disaster released by Jewel, has been received at the Minneapolis Universal Exchange. Charles G. Branham, manager of the Minneapolis Strand, booked it for the initial showing in the Northwest.

Foursquare Activities.

Jack O'Toole, manager of the Minneapolis Foursquare Exchange, has returned from Chicago after a conference with President George Backer, of the Foursquare exchanges. Mr. O'Toole has become financially interested in the Minneapolis exchange, and is an enthusiast over the year's prospects. Mr. Backer has completed arrangements to distribute the Gaumont ten-episode one-reel serial, "The Hand of Vengeance." Mr. O'Toole announces that he has a contract for the distribution of the Christie comedies. This statement is of particular interest because the comedies are being advertised by another independent distributing company, and there is some dispute as to who has the right to distribute the one-reel comedy subjects. Mr. O'Toole says the controversy will soon be adjusted.

Critical Reviews and Comments

Concerning Current Productions

"FIRES OF YOUTH"

Ruth Clifford Featured in Bluebird Subject of Problem Type.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

SKILLFULL direction does a great deal to hold the observer's interest in this five-reel Bluebird subject. It takes familiar plot materials and weaves them into a story so realistic that it grips the interest from beginning to end. It is only when the story is completed that the observer realizes that it has been done before in many different ways.

Ruth Clifford is cast in the role of the young wife of a middle-aged man. Her husband, John Linforth, is a judge of the superior court, and so absorbed in his own thoughts and work that he neglects her sadly. This situation has furnished the opening setting for many stories, but it may safely be doubted whether anyone ever brought it out so well as Rupert Julian has done in this number. There is no taking it for granted in the usual way that the wife is neglected, but the facts are set forth so clearly in a few deft scenes that the observer understands matters thoroughly. Furthermore, he sympathizes with the wife when she is later tempted to fall in love with another.

It is the familiar story of the husband's young friend named in this instance Ronald Standish. He is welcomed into the home, and the neglected wife turns to him for entertainment and finally for love. Ronald is torn with conflicting emotions, another thing too unusual with film heroes. He battles between personal honor and love for his friend's wife. He resolves to elope with her, and then repents. But not until a third party, witnessing the love scenes, has complicated matters by robbery and later attempted blackmail. In the end the wife separates from her husband and, after the passage of a year or more, marries the hero.

Ralph Lewis gives a convincing portrait of the neglectful husband, and George Fisher appears to advantage as Ronald. The story was written by Rupert Julian and E. J. Clawson, and directed by Mr. Julian.

"THAT DEVIL, BATEESE"

Bluebird Subject Features Monroe Salisbury in Characteristic Role.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE particular type of story in which Monroe Salisbury appears to best advantage is found in this number written by Bess Meredith and directed by William Wolbert. It gives Mr. Salisbury every opportunity to display his sturdy physique and his frequent and winning smile. He fairly shines as the rough and rugged Bateese Latour, a French Canadian, who knows only the life of the woods. In the course of this tale he carries off the girl in genuine cave-man style, and in due time succeeds in winning her love.

The story begins with the arrival of Kathleen St. John in the Canadian woods, whither she comes to teach school and forget the ill treatment she received at the hands of Martin Stuart, to whom she was engaged. She loses her way in the woods upon her arrival, and falls into the clutches of Louis Courteau, a shiftless fellow, who makes immediate advances to her. Bateese, just in from the lumber camp, sees the girl's peril and rescues her from Courteau. Later Martin Stuart appears, and there is a three-cornered rivalry between the men to win her. Bateese, of course, succeeds.

Some excellent locations have been provided for the delineation of this tale, which is stronger in many ways than the average of its kind. There is considerable villainy of the obvious type, but on the other hand the characters ring true and are really interesting.

Ada Gleason plays Kathleen, Lamar Johnstone the part of Martin Stuart, Lon Chaney appears as Courteau, and Andrew Robson as Father Pierre.

"THE GREEN GOD"

Harry T. Morey Featured in Vitagraph Mystery Story That Baffles the Spectator.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

NOT one spectator in a thousand will solve unaided the mystery that holds the interest in "The Green God," a five-part Vitagraph picture made from a story by Frederick Arnold Kummer and directed by Paul Scardon. The plot is the familiar one of the man who steals an idol from an eastern temple and is followed relentlessly by the infuriated priests of the ravished shrine until the despoiler meets his death. Suspicion points to three or four different persons, but the author has succeeded in baffling the detective instinct of the average spectator and has found a plausible answer to the riddle. Such an achievement more than offsets the want of novelty in the material, and the production of "The Green God" is of excellent quality.

Robert Ashton, an enterprising but unscrupulous traveler, throttles a priest of Buddha and makes off with a little green god at the instigation of Major Temple, a collector of curios, who has promised Ashton the hand of his daughter, Muriel, if he is successful. The major has a Chinese servant in his employ who shows that he is watching Ashton as soon as that person arrives with his prize. Owen Morgan, an American artist, who admires Muriel, is an inmate of the Temple home the night Ashton is murdered and the idol disappears. The fact that the bolts to the door and windows in Ashton's room have not been opened from the outside keeps everyone guessing until the author gives the right answer.

Harry T. Morey is featured as the artist, and represents a fine type of manly, vigorous American. Betty Blythe as Muriel Temple, Arthur Donaldson as Major Temple, George Majeroni as Robert Ashton, Bernard Siegel as Li Min, Robert Gaillard as McQuade, and Joseph Burke as a Priest of Buddha are entitled to commendation.

"HER COUNTRY FIRST"

Vivian Martin in Novel War Story Produced by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ADAPTED by Edith Kennedy from a story by Mary Roberts Rinehart, the Paramount picture, "Her Country First," starring Vivian Martin, treats of the war in a novel and often amusing manner. Before the story ends, however, a series of genuine thrills with German spies and the heroine bound and gagged put a lot of lively action into the plot. The ability of the famous author to keep up a good supply of refreshing humor is well established, and the director, James Young, has maintained the Paramount reputation for thoroughness of production.

"Her Country First" comes under the head of juvenile fiction, the heroine being about seventeen years of age and surrounded by a bevy of irrepressible maidens to whom 'Life is a joke that's just begun.' Their demes are all very human, and will amuse and interest persons of mature years, as well as the young folks.

Dorothy Grant, the character played by Vivian Martin, is a much spoiled young lady who becomes fired with a determination to do her bit to down the Kaiser. Her father is the owner of a munitions plant, and Dorothy is familiar with the danger from spies and the necessity for guarding the works. Although without an aeroplane she organizes a girl's aviation corps whose duty it is to watch over her father's factory. The members order proper and well-fitting uniforms, and go out in the country to drill. They learn to wigwag from a farmer who served in the Spanish-American war, and have a number of funny experiences.

The excitement starts when the Grant chauffeur and cook, both German spies, learn that Dorothy knows the password that will enable them to get into the munitions plant and destroy it. The girl is handled roughly, and her life threatened, but she defeats the enemy, and is proclaimed a heroine by her admiring family and her best young man, who has just enlisted and calls around in his new uniform.

Vivian Martin has the youthful charm demanded by the captain of the girl's aviation corps, and responds to the different moods of the character with complete conviction. John Cossar, Florence Oberle, Brydine Zuber, J. Parks-Jones, L. W. Steers, Lewis Willoughby, James Farley, and Lillian Leighton are the members of the adequate supporting company.

"KULTUR"

Absorbing War Story in Fox Photoplay Starring Gladys Rockwell.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

PUT together like a Swiss watch the Fox photoplay, "Kultur," written by J. Alexander Grubb and Fred Myton, and starring Gladys Rockwell, is an unusually adroit intermingling of fact and fiction based upon the present world war. To begin with, it is always dramatic, and its development is handled with the skill of the true dramatist. Its revelation of character and the morals of those in high places is not always edifying, but it follows so closely the human side of the events that started the great conflict and then twines a romantic interest around its heroine so firmly and convincingly that its six parts pass before the spectator without one moment's slacking of his absorbed attention.

Starting in Vienna it connects up the killing of the Archduke Franz Ferdinand by Danilo with the infatuation of the Austrian Emperor for a young and beautiful woman, the Countess Griselda Von Arenburg. The scene then shifts to Berlin, and the extravagant and unbridled night life that distinguished the capitol of Germany shortly before the breaking out of the war is introduced with striking effect.

Rene DeBornay, a member of the French secret service, falls in love with Griselda in Vienna. When he hurries to Berlin to learn what Germany intends doing about the assassination of the Archduke he finds the Countess there. She has been forced into serving the German war office by Baron Von Zeller, who learns that the Archduke had tried to separate Griselda and the Emperor, and that Danilo was inspired to kill Ferdinand by his love for the aged monarch's mistress. Von Zeller tries to take advantage of his hold over the Countess, but she repulses him and turns him into a relentless enemy.

Rene and Griselda are trapped in the woman's apartments by the German officer. The Countess confides all her war secrets to the man she now loves. France must have the information at once. Rene escapes. Griselda is killed in her boudoir by a file of soldiers at the command of Von Zeller.

Gladys Rockwell is an excellent selection for the Countess. In appearance and method she is fitted to the character, and her impersonation is illuminated by the many clever touches that go to round out a finished portrayal. William Scott is equally successful in his acting of Rene. Willard Louis as Von Zeller, Charles Clary as the Archduke, and Nigel DeBrullier as Danilo are to be highly commended for their work. The direction by Edward Le Saint comes in for a like amount of praise.

"THE MASK"

Excellent Triangle Subject, with Claire Anderson in Lead.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE is much that is fresh and unusual in this five-reel Triangle subject, written by E. Magnus Ingleton, and directed by Thomas H. Heffron. It contains some firmly drawn characters, a bright, original plot, and is certain to please observers everywhere. The first four reels are exceptional for their skillful presentation of absorbing comedy-drama situations. The concluding reel, though it rounds up the story interest well, is rather out of proportion, the prolonged struggle in De Lacy's room is melodramatic and unconvincing, and the production would no doubt profit if most of this were cut out.

Claire Anderson does some very effective work in the part of Sally Taylor, a working girl who inherited a million and temporarily lost her head. But the other characters are also good, including the sister, Babe; the two lovers, Billy and Sam, and the dilletante artist, De Lacy.

The opening situation, where Billy's uncle intrudes upon the birthday party and is greatly offended by the treatment accorded him, at once gets a strong hold on the interest. The uncle disinherits Billy, and leaves his fortune to Sally Taylor, who is in love with a young workingman named Sam Joplin. Billy proves a good sport, and goes to work as Sam's assistant, but the sudden wealth proves too much for Sally. She at once tries to invade high society with her sister. They have some amusing experiences, and Sally's eyes are opened to her sister's peril just in time. Both girls return to their real lovers after this lesson. The struggle in the room seemed too long, as above stated. It is not only an old situation in itself, but tends to switch the interest away from Sally. For this reason we think cutting would help.

Others in the cast are Rae Godfrey, Grace Marvin, Miss Chevalier, Lillian West, John Guilbert, Ed Hearne, Juan De La Cruz, Harry Holden and Marie Van Tassel.

"THE WHITE LIE"

Bessie Barriscale Has Made for Paralta Distribution an Engaging Photo-drama of Domestic Life.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

THE wife deceived her husband in the matter of her child's parentage and as a consequence Paralta has come into possession of an extremely interesting drama, acted without flaw or fault, directed by Howard Hickman in a manner to create admiration for his skill and retaining what so infrequently may be properly described as 'gripping entertainment.' The observer is beguiled by a clever trick of direction in drawing the wrong conclusion to the story and the resultant "surprise" in the outcome lends an added charm to a session with Bessie Barriscale and her associates while "The White Lie" is being visioned.

But when it is done there is just a tinge of regret that the lie so unnecessary, had not left with the observer a feeling that differs in only a small degree from the aftermath of a practical joke—especially as, in all human presumption the lie itself need never have been told. There is in this expression of opinion no desire to find fault, rather is the point brought out to emphasize the skill in which the narrative unfolds while foiling the plot detectives.

Time moves very quickly before the screen as "The White Lie" passes, the five reels speed swiftly and prove, in their fleetness, that the picture is possessed of such entertaining qualities that the plot carries without lagging through a presentation that will entertain exceeding well the great bulk of "picture fans" who see Miss Barriscale in this splendid result of her artistry. The star and her associates all act sensibly. They do the thing that might be expected of regular human beings under similar circumstances, and give to their work that wholesomeness and sincerity that will always be the saving grace of dramatic presentations whether on stage or screen.

"UNTAMED"

Triangle Subject Presents Roy Stewart in Good Western Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE is a pleasant, congenial quality in Roy Stewart's presentation of the typical Western hero. It is found in this five-reel subject, "Untamed," written by Kenneth B. Clark, and directed by Cliff Smith. The plot is entertaining and moves along in good style, with occasional points of dramatic interest. As a whole, it ranks well with other offerings in which Mr. Stewart has appeared.

A real ranch setting has been provided for this number, and in the final reel great cattle herds are shown. The settings throughout are in keeping with the story, and the characterizations are pleasing.

Jim Jason, the hero, enters into a partnership with a Spanish ranch owner, Don Felipe. Jim is to do the work of directing the men and bringing the place up to the dividend-paying point, and for these services is to share equally with Felipe. The latter inserts into the agreement a paragraph which says that in the event either of the partners die, the other shall fall heir to the whole. This provision is accepted by Jim with reluctance, and naturally leads to trouble.

In the course of the story bad blood arises between Jim and Felipe. The latter has betrayed a girl, Dolores, and tries to throw the stigma upon Jim. Jim is in love with Ruth, the daughter of a professor who is exploring some old ruins in the neighborhood and is also planning to restore an old mission. The child character, Carmelita, whose playmate is a calf, is an enjoyable one.

The dramatic moments come in the latter part of the story, when Jim has learned the true character of Felipe, and is repeatedly called upon to protect his own life. Felipe is finally killed by Dolores.

The assisting cast includes H. N. Dudgeon, May Giraci, Ethel Flemming and Jimmy Weil.

"THE COOK"

Heaps of Fun in the Latest Paramount-Arbuckle Comedy.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ALTHOUGH the list of dishes concocted by the fat chef in the new Paramount-Arbuckle comedy is a long one, the principal and favorite food served in "The Cook" by Roscoe Arbuckle is food for laughter. It is not at all necessary to set down all the doings, high jinks and comic stunts that fill the two reels of the comedy with unconfined joy, but, with the help of Buster Keaton, Al St. John, Alice Lake and Luke, the heavyweight comedian turns a respectable and orderly restaurant into a mirth factory, with efficiency experts holding on to all the jobs. Not satisfied with this the entire force overrun a Pacific Coast Luna Park in their chase after fresh heaps of merriment, and pursue the hunt into the ocean, with Luke tearing along behind as fast as his four feet will carry him. Luke is all dog. "The Cook" is one of "Fatty's" best releases.

"QUEEN OF THE SEA"

Annette Kellerman in Notable Six-Part Submarine Spectacle Produced by Fox.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

AFTER all is said and done, the biggest thing about an Annette Kellerman picture is Annette herself. The Kellerman is such a splendid object lesson to her sex of the advantages of physical training, and the finely developed muscles of her graceful body are eloquent of such perfect health and strength, that clothed only in a yard of so of chiffon she is still without offense.

"Queen of the Sea," the latest Fox spectacle to feature the famous swimming and diving expert, is skillfully contrived to exhibit the aquatic accomplishments of its heroine. It also furnishes one of those good old fairy tales, in which knights in armor, mermaids, lightly-clad sirens, demons, and a host of other characters, struggle for the mastery and have thrilling adventures by land and sea. George Bronson Howard wrote the scenario, and John F. Adolphi directed the production.

Merilla, Queen of the Sea, is a mermaid who incurs the hatred of King Boreas, Master of Storms, by rescuing three sailors whose ship has been lured to destruction by sirens, the daughters of Boreas. For her good deed Merilla is given mortal shape by the fairy Ariela, when the water queen falls in love with Prince Hero. She does not find happiness with her lover, however, until she goes through a number of the regulation hardships at the hands of her enemies. She is taken captive by Boreas, and rescued by the prince. An eighty-five foot dive from a wire is one of her sensational acts.

The land scenes are full of action and peopled with crowds of warring mortals and evil spirits against a background of weird grottoes and bold exteriors. But it is the marine views, the scenes along the seashore and under the water, with the mermaids and the sirens racing along with the waves or darting about in the depths below, that give the picture its chief beauty and charm. To catch glimpses of the flashing limbs of the swimmers beneath the surface and note the wake of bubbling water at their heels is to receive an impression of grace and vigor that is not easily dispelled.

Hugh Thompson, Walter Law, Mildred Keats and Beth Irvins have the leading parts among the supporting company.

"A BIRD OF BAGDAD"

An O. Henry Story of Amusing Suspense, Released by Broadway Star Features.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE suspense of this amusing little story hinges upon the solving of a riddle. A joking old merchant with a pretty daughter and two amorous clerks decides that he will give his daughter's hand in marriage, and eventually the business, to the clerk who solves his most difficult riddle, "What kind of a hen lays the longest?" One clerk, who suspects that most of the old merchant's riddles are culled from old joke books, makes a strenuous study of these and finds what he believes to be the answer. The other, who is favored by the daughter, goes about it scientifically, visiting chicken farms and examining serious books on the subject of chicken raising without result. He is almost frantic, gradually losing his mind, when he comes upon an old fellow who imagines himself a Caliph of Bagdad and indulges in a quaint sort of philanthropy, that of giving away meal tickets, good for so many feeds, to those who appear to be in trouble.

The eccentric philanthropist hands the serious clerk one of these tickets, and it offers a line of suggestion which leads the young man to exclaim "I've got it." What he has is not disclosed until the test is held in the old merchant's garden. There, in the presence of the daughter, the first clerk says "the hen that lays the longest is the one that lives the longest." The favored suitor arrives with the correct answer and wins the girl. The ticket he was given is good for one roast chicken. The answer to the riddle is that the hen that lays the longest, probably meaning in cold storage, is a "dead one." Out of these light materials, not particularly realistic, is formulated a little comedy which held a Rivoli audience and won almost instantaneous commendation from the audience.

"THE TURN OF THE WHEEL"

Engrossing Murder Mystery in Five-Part Goldwyn Photoplay Starring Geraldine Farrar.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

STARTING with a dramatic opening, an engrossing murder mystery holds the attention until the finish of "The Turn of the Wheel," a five-part picture that constitutes Geraldine Farrar's first Goldwyn release. The story was written by Tex Charwate, and has been admirably directed by Reginald Barker. A fine supporting cast and the well-schooled acting of the star complete the favorable conditions that go to make the picture thoroughly enjoyable.

Monte Carlo and its gaming tables is the scene of the first step in the drama. The attention of Rosalie Dean, an American girl traveling with her aunt, is attracted to a fellow countryman who is losing heavily at roulette. Maxfield Grey is the name of the young man. When the wheel claims his last franc, Rosalie forces him to play some of her money. Grey immediately starts to win.

The next day, while talking to Rosalie, he is arrested for murder. His wife has been slain in New York, and he is taken back to this country to answer the charge of having killed her. Grey will make no attempt to defend himself, and Rosalie undertakes to clear up the mystery. The accused man has an invalid brother whose wife has allowed a wealthy young rue to become too friendly. Rosalie learns of this, and starts a flirtation with him on her own account. By a series of frequently employed but skillfully connected incidents she fastens the killing on her new admirer and frees the man she now loves deeply.

"The Turn of the Wheel" is melodramatic, but never oversteps the bounds of convincing probability. It was photographed by Percy Hilburn. Herbert Rawlinson, Percy Marmont, Violet Heming and Hassard Short have the principal supporting roles.

"WHEN NATURE SMILES"

A Scenic of Fine Picture Composition.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

MANY of these views of mountain, lake and stream are remarkable for almost faultless balance, besides being artistic glimpses of sun-bathed mountain peaks, wind-stirred forests and sparkling trout streams. They are poetic, straight through the subtitles, which are admirably chosen, and they appeal strongly to man's natural sense of beauty, as evinced by the applause they received by a representative Rivoli audience. It is hard to find fault with them from a point of view of pictorial art, but there would be an additional glamor if there could be infused into the impression they make some more deeply interesting human element. How this is to be done will undoubtedly be evolved with no loss of seeing Nature in her loveliest aspects, commingled with human nature in some of its dramatic phases. The picture was photographed by Van Scoy for the Post-Pathe Series.

"THE SILENT WOMAN"

Edith Storey Has Congenial Character in Five-Part Metro Production.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

WILLINGNESS to accept without question the mental deductions of the two leading characters in "The Silent Woman" will result in this five-part Metro picture proving an exceedingly entertaining story. Written by Lois Zellner and fashioned for the screen by June Mathis and Katharine Kavanaugh, it has the twists and turns of incident that keep the interest from lagging, and is so well acted by Edith Storey and the supporting company that most people will not be inclined to find fault with the hero for not telling the heroine he did not love her when he asked her to marry him or to blame the girl for trying to smirch her own reputation in order to shield the character of the hero's first wife, an utterly worthless woman who had betrayed the father of her child. It is by such devices that the story teller wins sympathy in many cases, and "The Silent Woman" is an excellent example of its class.

A Hudson Bay Company trading post and lumber camp is first shown. Nan McDonald, a clerk at the post, has become warmly attached to little Billy Lowery, the son of a couple who are guests of Clifford Beresford, the wealthy owner of the lumber tract. Mrs. Lowery is infatuated by Beresford and is accidentally killed the night she steals down stairs to keep an appointment with him.

John Lowery never suspects the truth, but Nan knows all about the affair She accepts an offer to go back home with Lowery and look after his son. Finding that gossip is busy because he has an attractive woman in his house, Lowery asks Nan to marry him She is deeply in love with him and consents Directly after the ceremony, her husband tells her that his heart will always belong to his dead wife

Future events give Nan an opportunity to prove that the first Mrs. Lowery betrayed his love, but Nan spares John the pain of learning the truth Later on, when Beresford compromises her also, she still remains silent, although innocent, and so shields the guilty woman at the price of her own reputation When Lowery's eyes are accidentally opened at last, he discovers that Nan has crowded all regret for her dead rival from his heart

Frank Mills, Joseph Kilgour and Lille Leslie are cast for John Lowery, Clifford Beresford and Mrs. Lowery respectively George K. Hollister was the photographer. Herbert Blaché directed the production

"JOHANNA ENLISTS"

A Pleasing Fancy by Mary Pickford with a Military Flavor.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THAT there is no necessity for sombre mood in stories of present-day military atmosphere is delightfully illustrated in "Johanna Enlists" and she naturally does enlist as Mary Pickford in the American Artillery regiment which gave her support in the play The regimental action and encampment near the house of Johanna of the story is real and is cleverly incorporated in the movement of the play at every stage of its development

This realism, some humorous sub-titles and Miss Pickford's artistic interpretation constitute the main values, but they are winning enough to please almost any American audience

The story is a very frail fabric Johanna is a little country girl in a dull environment who longs and prays for a "beau" Her prayer is answered by a regiment Three become suitors, two bitter rivals, during a two weeks' encampment, and the third quietly wins the girl. During the brief period Johanna develops with almost startling rapidity, from a raw specimen to a graceful little creature, largely through her own efforts, and these furnish the kind of comedy material Miss Pickford enjoys. Most amusing are her attempts on the lawn to acquire the grace attained in rhythmic movements All that she has to guide her is the print of a lady posing in little else than gauze. She also decides to take a milk bath in the dairy, with consequences both amusing and disastrous The story is more than a vehicle but is so little more than one that only a Mary Pickford could make full use of its leading characterizations.

Most of the sub-titles are bright and humorous, but those which get outside of the action into narrative could be eliminated without serious loss to story interest. "Johanna Enlists" should please every Pickford audience, and many more besides.

"PRISONERS OF THE PINES"

J. Warren Kerrigan Has French-Canadian Role in Jesse D. Hampton Production.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel

THERE is some very fair acting in "Prisoners of the Pines," a five-part picture produced by Jesse D Hampton, with J Warren Kerrigan at the head of the cast. The story, by Kenneth B. Clarke, is not a strong one unfortunately, and its picturesque settings in the Canadian forest and a neighboring settlement do not make up for the want of the dramatic incident that puts the punch into a photoplay Ernest Warde directed the production, and has tried faithfully to inject some action into the plot, but the slender thread of material has defeated his efforts Characterization is a necessary element in building up a scenario, but only one of the elements Without an adequate supply of properly handled motives to guarantee sufficient action the story must limp along when it should move freely and firmly

Hillaire Latour is an impulsive, warm-hearted young French-Canadian trapper, who marries his sweetheart Rosalie before deserting his traps and going into a lumber camp to work where he can earn more money All winter long he toils, and when the spring comes is eager to collect his earnings and rejoin his wife, who is waiting for him at his old home

A letter from Rosalie has told him of a new member of the family Hillaire cashes his pay check, but is robbed before he leaves the settlement. A dance hall woman gets the money, and Latour is obliged to go back to the camp without seeing his wife and child The next spring the same thing happens over again, and once more Hillaire is unable to leave.

Third times is the same trick played upon him Aroused at last to the fighting pitch, Hillaire almost wrecks the dance hall and makes the light-fingered female return his roll of bills A number of uniformed policemen arrive at this moment and take him to the station house, where he meets his wife and boy, who have come in search of him

Lois Wilson as Rosalie, Walter Perry as Lafferty and Claire Du Brey as the dance hall woman are excellent Charles Stumar was the cameraman The picture is released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation

THAT DEVIL, BATEESE (Bluebird).—A five-reel subject written by Bess Meredith and directed by William Wolbert. THE WHITE LIE (Paralta), Sept. 2.—Bessie Barriscale is star of William Parker's story directed by Howard Hickman from J. L. Lamothe's scenario. The story deals with a span of domestic life that reaches almost to the dissolution of a happy home, but happiness comes in a surprising outcome The trickery of plot holds suspense and leads the spectator from an entirely erroneous opinion of the wife who has told a needless lie and lived through years of suppressed unhappiness because of it. Very fine acting is done by Miss Barriscale and every individual in her support "The White Lie" will provide exceedingly good entertainment.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW NO. 10 (Pathe), Sept. 1.—A number which is filled with much of the grim side of war. This pictures the devastation wrought by the Hun. Explosions and burning buildings are shown, also orchards cut down wantonly. A bombed hospital and impressive funeral services for dead nurses and soldiers are also shown.

THE DIPPY DAUGHTER (Rolin-Pathe), Sept. 8.—Toto is featured in this rapid-fire, knockabout subject. He appears as cook at a country home. The daughter of the house becomes mentally ill, and imagines she is a queen. This contains some amusing situations, and several that will bring laughter.

A JAPANESE NIGHTINGALE (Pathe Play), Sept. 22.—An exquisite little Japanese story, with Fannie Ward as Yuki, the Jap maiden, who flees from Shiba Temple and has some great adventures. Blossoming cherry trees and fine garden scenes are part of the settings. The story is a dainty one, with a series of dramatic incidents at the close. Reviewed at length in last week's issue.

WIVES OF MEN (Pioneer).—Florence Reed is star of the Pioneer Film Corporation's splendid presentation of John M. Stahl's self-directed story. Frank Mills may deservingly be featured as the leading man. Miss Reed gives a faultless performance of an exceedingly trying role, tense in dramatic sequences, and made immensely appealing through the pretty star's native artistry. The settings are really sumptuous—a bad word to trifle with in these days of "adjectiveitis," but fittingly applied in this instance. Here is a play that gets away with an inconsistent story through sheer skill in its dramatic presentation, the splendid acting smothering all plot defects.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE MASK (Triangle), Sept. 1.—A strong five-reel number, with Claire Anderson in the lead, assisted by a well-balanced cast. This is a fine comedy-drama, containing many fresh and enjoyable situations, and should succeed well. It was written by E. Magnus Ingleton and directed by Thomas H. Heffron. The melodramatic scenes in the last reel are out of keeping with the first part, and would stand cutting. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

UNTAMED (Triangle-Kaybee), Sept. 1.—A five-reel Western subject featuring Roy Stewart as the cowboy hero. It was written by Kenneth B. Clark and directed by Cliff Smith. The story is well constructed and entertaining, and includes some fine views of the cattle range in the final reel. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Universal Film Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 37 (Universal), Aug. 14.—This leads off with a timely hint to stenographers that the Government needs their services. Laborers arriving from West to work in shipyards, Labor Department work, hospital methods in England, Secretary Baker greeting Rheims heroes, and other features are included.

CUPID VS. ART (Century Comedy), Sept. 11.—A two-reel comic featuring Alice Howell as a lady who paints—fences. Hughie Mack plays the rotund hero. This number abounds in knockabout and slapstick situations of a typical sort, most of which are amusing, and none is offensive. The wind-up is fast and furious, with all sorts of vehicles taking part at full speed.

HEARTS AND LET'US (Lyons-Moran), Sept. 14.—In this number Eddie Lyons appears as a grocer boy and Lee Moran as butcher boy. Both love the same girl, but after numerous amusing advances a third youth marries her. This is a pleasing subject, with some good character work of a semi-burlesque type, and will entertain the average audience.

THE BRASS BULLET NO. 6 (Universal Special), Sept. 14.—"A Dangerous Honeymoon" is the title of this number of the serial, and covers the final successful effort on the part of Rosalind's lover to escape from the tunnel leading from the house where he has been imprisoned, and his dash in a police boat for the yacht on which Rosalind, as the supposed wife of another, is being taken away. Considerable of the struggle between the girl and her supposed husband in her bedroom on the yacht might well be eliminated.

PAT TURNS DETECTIVE (Nestor), Sept. 16.—A comedy number by Charles J. Wilson, Jr., featuring Pat Rooney as a messenger boy detective. He is employed by a jealous wife to shadow her husband, and gets their affairs entangled with another couple's. The plot is very slight, and works up only a fair amount of humor.

THE BRASS BULLET NO. 7 (Universal Special), Sept. 21.—"The Depth Bomb," the seventh number of the serial, finds the lovers making a successful struggle to be released from the yacht's crew. The yacht, owing to a gasoline leak which connects with a lighted lantern, is blown up after all on board have escaped by means of life boats and life preservers. Both Jack and Rosalind are again captured before the close of the episode.

THE BRASS BULLET NO. 8 and NO. 9 (Universal Special), Sept. 28.—The eighth and ninth numbers of this serial cover a series of thrilling events in connection with the recapture of Rosalind and her lover. In the course of events the affinity of Rosalind's supposed husband tries to kill her, and upon discovering the girl's real plight attempts to help her to escape. An infernal machine operated by means of a magnetic bug fails in doing away with Jack according to plans, and a sweat-box at Dago Joe's, in which victims are baked into parting with their money, affords considerable thrill.

World Pictures Corporation.

T'OTHER DEAR CHARMER (World Pictures), Sept. 16.—A splendid five-reel society comedy written by Charles Sarver and directed by William P. S. Earle. Louise Huff and John Bowers play the leading roles in this superior production, which tells a bright, animated and generally enjoyable story.

"The Talk of the Town" (Universal).

Dorothy Phillips, who has starred in some of Universal's best productions, is featured in the special attraction "The Talk of the Town," which will be released September 23. She takes the part of Geneva French, a young woman who has been deprived of the safeguards of knowledge and who is whirled close to the brink of tragedy. The film is taken from the story by Harold Vickers, adapted and produced by Allen Holubar.

Pretty Dancing in "For Husbands Only."

Some of the prettiest exhibitions of esthetic dancing are presented in the film "For Husbands Only," which was produced by Lois Weber for Jewel productions. The dancers are a group of the advanced pupils taught by Ruth St. Denis and Ted Shawn, who have become famous over the country as the Denisshawn dancers. The scenes are laid in settings of fine artistry. Though this is but an incident in the picture, it is declared to be as complete an entertainment as the dancers would provide in real life.

Universal Will Distribute British War Pictures

IMMEDIATELY on his arrival in New York, Carl Laemmle completed arrangements with Capt. G. McLeod Baynes for the distribution of a series of Official British War Pictures, which were presented at the Strand Theatre in New York. Mr. Laemmle obtained for the Universal Film Mfg. Company the exclusive rights of distribution in this country and its possessions.

The series is a thrilling production of war pictures, entitled "Fighting for Freedom." They are taken from the latest British war films, and are a completed visuallzation of all the land, air and naval arms of warfare recently wielded by Great Britain in assuring the conquest of the Hun. The contract was made between the Universal and the Official Government Pictures Inc., of which company William K. Vanderbilt is president.

"Fighting for Freedom" will be released in seven sections, one each week. Following the the titles for the individual episodes: "Admiral Beatty's Fleet in Action," "Bomb Dropping From Aerial Submarine Destroyers," "The Sensational Capture of Bagdad," "Thrilling Feats of the Royal Flying Corps," "Repairing War's Ravages," "Chinese and African Workers Trailing the Hun," and "Britain's Battling Bulldogs—The Navy."

A thrilling impression of the British war strength jumps out of the scenes. The spectator learns that, with all the losses it has suffered the British Navy is now four times stronger in men and ships than it was in August 1914, when Germany plunged the world into war. The public for the first time will learn how this navy, with the help of its Allies, has been able to safeguard the transportation of thirteen million of troops, with the loss of only 2,700 by enemy action.

As the titles of the various episodes indicate, practically every branch of the sea, air and land service are shown in actual scenes of action in many lands, covering all of England's far-flung battle lines. Particularly interesting will be scenes incident to the capture of Bagdad and operations along the Tirgis of which, very few, if any, pictures have been generally distributed.

Jewel Arouses Curiosity with "For Husbands Only"

THIS film is intended for the whole family," says an announcement by the Jewel Productions in reference to its six reel picture entitled "For Husbands Only." An official of the company the other day added interesting comments on the title.

"Curiosity is a wonderful thing," said he. "That picture, supposed to have a message only for husbands, is bound to get the wives all worked up. If it had been entitled "For Wives Only" you'd see husbands flocking to see it in droves. That's what curiosity and the old forbidden fruit idea does."

The chief characters are played by Mildred Harris, Lewis J. Cody and Fred Goodwins. Lois Weber produced the picture. Miss Harris as Toni Wilde is a convent-bred young woman, who suffers a deep wound in her first love affair. She discovers that Rolin Van D'arcy, whom she has loved, is not a marrying man and has been toying with her. In revenge Toni deliberately wins the love and becomes the wife of Samuel Dodge. This has the desired effects of arousing D'arcy's jealousy. He sets out to wreck Dodge's faith in his wife. To this end he stages a play "For Husbands Only," which he devises in such a way as to suggest the experience of Toni, himself and Dodge, putting an evil construction on Toni's motives. What happens, when Samuel sees the play, forms a surprise climax.

Cast.

The Wife.....Edna Goodich
The Husband.....Howard Hall
Their child.....Mildred Clair
Major Clintock.....Clarence Heritage
Herr Von Aachen.....Stuart Holmes

Directed by Burton King.

The Story: Engrossed in the perfection of a new high power explosive the husband seems to neglect his wife. She is further piqued by the introduction into their home of a man whose presence is unexplained, but who is really a Secret Service operative guarding the invention. The Government has asked that the wife be kept in ignorance. In this frame of mind the wife lends a ready ear to Aachen, who suggests that the husband be taught a lesson by the abstraction of this all-absorbing formula. Through this means he gets the formula, but in the end the Government gathers him in, and the only permanent result is a needed lesson to the innocent little traitor.

Feature Edna Goodrich as the wife and Howard Hall as the husband.

The Story: Van Twiller Yard, a well born young man, who becomes a derelict through drink, is shanghaied in a cheap Boston lodging house and carried to a logging camp in Vermont, where he is roughly treated by the lumber boss. Svea Nord, a young woman, enters his life, and, recognizing him as a bum, she treats him with contempt. This awakens his dormant manhood, and, in the hope of winning her love, he reforms. When he regains his health he beats his brutal boss into a pulp, with Svea watching him admiringly. The big guns at the front are mounted on money. Don't forget that! And they will hold the enemy back only so long as their foundations last. Don't forget that!

This war cannot be carried on on loyal sentiment and armchair strategy. It has got to be carried on with big armies, powerful guns and everything guns and armies need for continued action.

War Savings Stamps will furnish the money provided you retailers enlist your salesforce at full power to sell the stamps.

Some of you have more salespeople at your command than a regimental commander has fighting men. Just think a moment of the selling power of a store as big as that. Just think of the stamps it could sell if it worked only 15 minutes a day. And the smaller stores can do as well in proportion.

Put in a Thrift Stamp Department today if you haven't already done so. And then push the stamps!

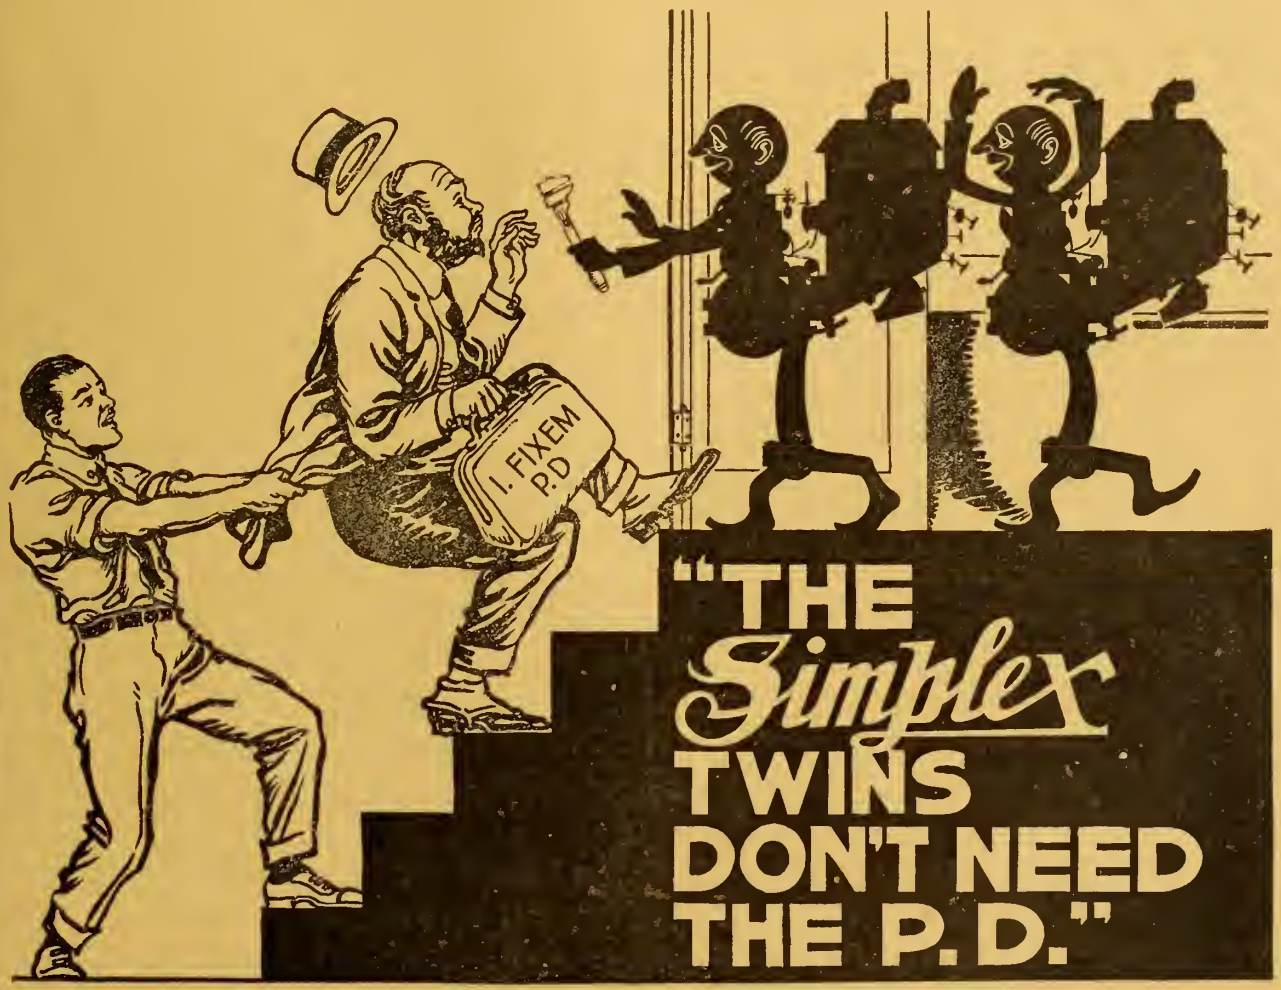
Simplex

Have you had this experience?

The projection isn't as good as it was, and day after day you watch it grow worse, until finall ythe pained expression in the faces of your audience leads you to order repairs.

Now, those repairs may not cost much; but the screen-results which showed their need were much more costly than the repairs themselves. For the people don't say "Never mind, the projection will be better next week, when the Machines have been repaired." Not on you life! They simply stay away.



We realized this from the beginning; and that's why we build the Simplex as nearly repairless as possible: a Machine that doesn't need the Projection Doctor.

And the thousands of Simplexes in use demonstrate that in place of Intermittently Perfect Projection we have created Permanently Perfect Projection.

Intermittently Perfect Projection may pay the P. D., but it doesn't pay you

Goldwyn has given her the best story of her screen career... a wonderfully successful picture.

CHICAGO EXAMINER:
Geraldine Farrar is a great bet. Her personality shines as glowingly as ever it has shown before. Goldwyn does know how to make fine pictures finely.

CHICAGO TRIBUNE:
Goldwyn has given Miss Farrar a splendid story remarkably well told, and a noteworthy cast of well known names.

Back of each production is concentrated the genius

WE'VE been working six months on the Success Series, getting these re-issues in perfect condition. We wouldn't change the negatives if we could, for they're masterpieces. That was the kind we chose from the hundreds of pictures in our vaults—the kind that the public wouldn't want altered any more than a Mark Twain story, a Caruso record, or a James Montgomery Flagg poster.

But the original negative isn't quite everything. These re-issues come to you in perfect condition—the prints are right off the drying drums, the titles have been re-made and re-edited, all unnecessary scenes have been cut out.

And the accessories are as new as the prints.

The way you advertise the Success Series is mighty important.

We give you every aid. The advertising and cuts are the finest we can produce, the copy has been written with careful attention to your needs. Special exploitation plans on the Success Series have been laid out for you.

Everything is ready for a big year for the Success Series. The tools are there. Use them!

THE EVENING MAIL

IN FILMLAND

By T. E. OLIPHANT.

It is doubtful whether any young woman ever traveled the road to screen stardom via a shorter route than that traversed by Lila Lee. Some two or three months ago Jesse Lasky announced her discovery. The public was told that "Cuddles" of Gus Edwards's vaudeville "kid" acts had grown to young womanhood and photoplay stature at one end the same time. That as Lila Lee she would make her stellar bow shortly in a Lasky-Paramount picture.

Which she did yesterday at the Rivoli Theatre, in "The Cruise of the Make-Believes." No one will deny that her advent into filmland was made under auspicious circumstances, but film history has shown that even a pathway strewn with reams of publicity will not make a star. All the more honor, therefore, to Mr. Lasky's judgment and Miss Lee's talents, for Lila is a film figure to be reckoned with. She is of the stuff from which celluloid stars are made; she is beautiful to a marked degree, and it is quite evident that her pretty little head is crammed full of intelligence. She has "arrived" with her very first picture.

"The Cruise of the Make-Believes" hasn't one thrill from the first reel to the last—praise be! It is just the sort of story that every one has woven into his day dreams. Its message is happiness, and who doesn't prefer happiness to thrills?

Bessie Maguiness is a daughter of the tenements who provides a livelihood for her alcoholic spirited father and worthless brother by renting furnished rooms. To the tenement next door comes Gilbert Byfield, son of a wealthy family. He is something of an author, in search of type atmosphere for a story. Bessie comes into his range of vision and together they cruise in her backyard yacht, constructed from old boards and chairs with a discarded sewing wheel to steer the course.

Their first cruise leads to love. Byfield, concealing his identity from Bessie, bribes her father to take her to a country place for a month's vacation. Maguiness is to announce that he has come into a sum of money and Bessie is to have a cruise on the waters all her own. The trip is fairly well under way when an ambitious mother of society appears upon the scene with her marriageable daughter, Byfield's identity is disclosed and the boat goes on the rocks. But heartbreaks returns to her backyard yacht, and Byfield—but that would be telling the best part of the story.

Mr. Lasky has surrounded Miss Lee with a cast that would test the talents of many a more experienced star. Though she plays with such skilled actors as Raymond Hatton, Horace Ford, Spottiswoode Aitken and Mary had been decorated with the Cross of Honor for conspicuous bravery.

D. W. Griffith's next motion picture, following "The Great Love" and "Hearts of the World," will be entitled "A Romance of Happy Valley," and work on this film is already under

Even Blasé Broadway Said "Lila Lee Is Great!"

THE CRITICS WERE WAITING for Lila Lee on Broadway; doubting, ready to pick her to pieces; eager, perhaps, to sneer at this little girl who so quickly had been made a star.

It was a terrific test, for, contrary to some methods of launching a new star, it had been decided that Lila Lee must make good by merit alone.

No wild, weird tales, no sensational billing had misled the public.

She was represented as just what she was—a clever motion picture actress, a girl with rare charm and talent. She was young and beautiful!

And over night she was a sensation!

The critics were unanimous in their praise. Her debut was the feature of every dramatic page in New York.

She was "made" in a day—for one reason and only one—because all that was said about her was true. She was clever, she did have rare charm and genuine talent. She was the sort of an actress that the public loved at first sight.

The Rivoli played to big business the first day and—this is the real test—box office receipts increased steadily throughout the week.

That meant that folks who saw "The Cruise of the Make-Believes" went home and told their friends how wonderful the star and picture were.

Every person who sees Lila Lee is a continual advertiser for the theatre that shows her pictures.

Lila Lee's Debut at Rivoli—

The Cruise of the Make-Believes, which is the feature at the Rivoli this week, is important chiefly because it introduces a new star to the screen. Her name is Lila Lee, and she does not seem at all depressed by being known as "Cuddles." Lila has a twinkle all her own. Before her appearance she was handicapped by being advertised as an "infant prodigy," but she lived this down in her first few moments on the screen, and President.

The name stands for the best in adventure films, the sort of stuff only a red-blooded man would dare produce. Frederick Burlingham risked his life not once, but several times to secure these pictures. And then just to vary the interest—to make a setting for the thrills—he intersperses them with marvelous travel "takes" that are shot from unusual angles and heights, all tending to make the series something you have never seen before. It is in a sense a travel serial, and should be so advertised, for a serial spells punch and pep to an audience. Taken for the most part atop the Alps, the Burlingham pictures are a novelty of the most positive sort and exhibitors will book them with zest. That makes them the dandy proposition they are for foreign purchase, and we trust you will write us immediately for fuller particulars than this "Talk" can give.

Constance

CONSTANCE TALMADGE'S great success in the pictures of her First Select Series was one of the notable screen happenings of the season just closed. Have your patrons seen her in these great attractions, in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick?

"SCANDAL"

Cosmo Hamilton's story of the girl who claimed for a husband a man to whom she was not married.

"THE HONEYMOON"

in which the star hits the comedy curves at high speed in a screen drama of surpassing beauty. A honeymoon with a chorus girl hang-over! Do you get the idea?

"THE STUDIO GIRL"

"There are at least two miracles in this story," wrote the Moving Picture World when it was first presented. Your patrons will enjoy watching them come to pass.

"THE SHUTTLE"

The famous story by the author of "Little Lord Fauntleroy" in which Constance Talmadge impersonates the live end of an Anglo-American alliance.

"UP THE ROAD WITH SALLIE"

Clean as a whistle and swift as a wink!—is this story of a young adventurer who sought romance, with a bankroll, and found it!

"THE LESSON"

Here the star scores again in a laughter-plus-drama photoplay in which scenes of city life are delightfully intermingled with small town comedy.

"GOOD NIGHT, PAUL!"

A determined uncle from Canada, a scapegrace of a nephew caught in a big fib, an alarmed partner, and Constance Talmadge as his cleverly obliging wife—mix this and you have the swiftest of screen farces!

"A PAIR OF SILK STOCKINGS"

The last and perhaps the greatest of Constance Talmadge's First Series. A stage hit in England, a riot here—and perfect upon the screen.

Talmadge in "Sauce for the Goose" presented by LEWIS J. SELZNICK

When your patrons see Constance Talmadge in this, the first of her Second Select Series, they will at once agree that the sauce is the best part of any dish. (Note—C. T. serves the sauce!)

Scenario by Julia Crawford Ivers
Directed by Walter Edwards

"WIVES OF MEN" A FINE PHOTOPLAY.
At the Casino Theatre last night there was shown one of the best motion pictures seen in New York in some time.
The name of the photoplay is "Wives of Men," and it has for its principal player, the talented actress, Florence Reed, and for once she did not have the role of a "she-villian." Instead she is the neglected wife of James Randolph Emerson, Jr., and lives with him for 12 years despite the fact that she suspects him of having another wife. To tell you the whole story would spoil your pleasure if you decide to see this picture which will remain at the Casino for two weeks.

FLORENCE REED EXCELLENT IN "WIVES OF MEN" FILM
Pioneer Film Company Offers New Picture at Casino.
"Wives of Men," a new picture with Florence Reed as the star, was presented at the Casino Theatre last night by the Pioneer Film Corporation. It is a strong and dramatic picture, with plenty of thrills, but with practically no comedy. John M. Stahl wrote the scenario and also directed the picture.
Miss Reed's role is that of a wife who, on her wedding day, learns of an Indian love of the man she married. For twelve years she is as Bertha M. Clay used to write her novels, "wife in name only," but all the while still loved her husband. She finally decides to see if he really loves her. By pretending to be in love with another man she succeeds in making her husband jealous. The story of his infidelity, and thereupon finds herself struggling between

Dear Mr. Hatch:-

Allow me to extend congratulations for the feature picture "To Hell With The Kaiser" which I booked from your company and as I understand it I believe I have the honor of being the first exhibitor in the State of Michigan, to show this picture.

To say that I am satisfied from a box office standpoint would be placing it mildly for tonight, whioh is the third night of my showing, also Wednesday and Thursday nights I have been unable to handle the crowds who have clamored to get in, so in order to accomodate as many as possible I am running continuous tomorrow (Saturday) from 10.00 A.M. until midnight. You can quote me as saying that "To Hell With the Kaiser" will stand up under any advertising an exhibitor can give it and is without doubt one of the best box office attractions of the year.

Yours very truly,

Fred B Watkins

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT OFFICIAL WAR PICTURES

All Exhibitors in North America:

The United States Government wants you to exhibit "America's Answer," the official war picture from the battlefields of Europe—for the benefit and comfort of American families—in every city, town, hamlet in North America. Our Government requests that you run these live pictures of our own sons, brothers and friends—filmed at the gates of Hell and brought back through the submarine-infested seas—in the same worthy spirit that put America in this world war. In this instance, Distributors and Exhibitors should be above commercialism. Consistent with operation the price will be made fair. Every Exhibitor is part of the plan. Your co-operation is necessary. Every effort will be made to get "America's Answer" to you. Right here in town there are many families represented in these pictures. You should localize the effect. A plan has been thought out whereby you can show "America's Answer" without raising your admission price. The cost to you will be the consistent minimum and you are asked to not haggle and barter and hold off, but to be personally as anxious to exhibit them as our intrepid soldiers are to establish democracy with the blood of their stalwart bodies. These pictures show you how they are doing it—show to Mothers the priceless nobility of their sons' manly courage in fighting for the Right. Show these pictures—you will ease many aching hearts in American homes. Exhibitor, get these films—you will gain—your patrons will be grateful and you will effectively serve your country. Co-operate with the Government. Our salesman will call and outline a plan whereby you can do so advantageously. Your personal interest is respectfully urged.

"America's Answer"—Released October 14th

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT OFFICIAL WAR PICTURES

Proportionate Cost Plan

Small theatres can show "America's Answer" at a cost proportionate with each theatre's income—a new plan devised in friendliness and fairness to the small as well as the big.

"America's Answer" comes to you—with the thousands of dollars of introductory expense for heavy advertising all paid—bearing the stamp of approval of the biggest centers.

The smallest theatre can afford "America's Answer"—the poorest shall have it. Apply!

Distributors presented bids to the Government for the physical distribution of "America's Answer" and from and on the bids submitted the World Film Corporation was selected. Write to the World Film Corporation now! !

Preference was given also to those distributors who had not yet had an opportunity to handle an official war film.

But all of the big distributors are patriotic and are requesting and instructing their sales forces and employees to help spread "America's Answer" over the length and breadth of the United States.

"America's Answer" comes as a thrilling message of the approaching victory of Democracy over Autocracy.

The screen is the medium by which the real news, alive and in the making, is conveyed to the families in America—they are all waiting for it.

Show "America's Answer" to Americans.

FACTIONS GET TOGETHER IN CHICAGO

Following Inspiring Talk by William A. Brady at A. E. A. Convention Committee of Exhibitors and League Agree to Affiliate with National Association

By James S. McQuade

IT has not often occurred at any convention gathering that the culminating event has been reached on the first day; but the strangely unusual and unexpected thing happened at the second annual convention of the American Exhibitors' Association, Tuesday night, September 3, at the Hotel Sherman, Chicago.

Strange, too, the eagerly hoped for consummation, which was the main object of the convention was achieved in private session by leading representatives of the League and the Association, after the opening session of the convention had been adjourned a few hours before. That session was made memorable by the powerful appeal made by William A. Brady to the two organizations of exhibitors to get together. His words fell on many willing ears and on some that may have been unwilling, but any one sensitively attuned to catch the prevailing spirit and mind of the convention was impressed that more than the mere hope of an amalgamation of the two organizations was in the air.

William A. Brady

Frank J. Rembusch

TWO BIG FIGURES AT CONVENTION

Amalgamation Considered Imperaitve Duty.

The spirit of willingness to give and accept terms had been gradually growing in the minds of the members of both organizations for some time past, and the leading men in both camps were convinced that amalgamation was not only necessary but an imperative duty. Mr. Brady knew this and felt that the psychologic moment had arrived.

The president of the National Association had arranged to leave for New York on the 5.30 train Tuesday evening, but changed his mind and stopped over until Wednesday morning. He contrived to get the leading members of both organizations to meet, each party by themselves, in separate rooms, at the Hotel Sherman, to settle the question of amalgamation right there and then—not on the morrow. He was the go-between who kept both parties in touch during the session and who suggested and begged—and succeeded in getting greater concessions than either party was willing at first to yield to the other.

The fruit of his labors is shown in the following agreement, signed by the leading representatives of the M. P. E. L. of America and the American Exhibitors' Association:

Resolved and voted by joint committees duly appointed representing the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and the American Exhibitors' Association, held at Sherman House, Chicago, on Tuesday, September 3, 1918:

1—That the name of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America be changed to National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Exhibitors' Branch.

Schaefer Remains the President.

2—That Peter J. Schaefer remain as President.

3—That the secretary be named by A. E. A. directors.

4—That Ernest H. Horstmann remain as treasurer.

5—That Frank J. Rembusch be a member of the increased executive committee and chairman of same.

6—That ten additional members be elected on the executive committee by A. E. A. directors (twenty in all).

7—That four additional vice presidents be elected by A. E. A. directors to the present four vice presidents.

8—That a by-laws comittee be appointed consisting of three members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and three members from the American Exhibitors' Association; in case of dispute

William A. Brady to decide all points not agreed upon, and his decision to be final.

9. That this agreement become effective on September 4, 1918.

Tuesday Afternoon

THE second annual convention of the American Exhibitors' Association was opened at the Hotel Sherman at 1:30 p. m. Tuesday, September 3. Men representing the producing, distributing and exhibiting departments of the business kept coming in all day Monday from various sections of the country, and telegraphic advices gave promise that quite a number could not arrive until Wednesday.

When Platform Manager Sam Atkinson called the first meeting to order there were not over sixty people in the convention hall, but it turned out that in mental calibre and in the interests represented the meeting was a notable one in the history of the industry.

Frank J. Rembusch, executive of the American Exhibitors' Association, in the absence of Jake Wells, the national president of the organization, who has been on the sick list for some time past, made the opening address, saying in part:

Rembusch Opens Proceedings.

"On behalf of the American Exhibitors' Association I want to bid you all welcome. I regret that we haven't a larger attendance at our first meeting of the convention. Many of the exhibitors haven't been able to arrive, but will be here tomorrow, and I look for a much larger attendance tomorrow and Thursday. Yesterday was Labor Day, and many of them were busy and couldn't make Chicago in so short a length of time.

"In explaining the purpose of this meeting I know of no better way than to read a telegram we have received from D. W. Griffith. This telegram is so beautiful that I wouldn't care to add anything to it because it explains the purposes of this meeting better than anything I could say. Here it is:

"'To you assembled in one body, confronted with the world's greatest effort for organized effort, may my message be only that of further urging you to take some step toward uniting under one great head the motion picture theatres, which are today the most effective propaganda mediums in the world, for one great purpose—to bring to a quicker close the cataclysmic horror that envelopes civilization.

"'It is not for me to preach to you of patriotism, for I know that each of you already burns with a far more vivid fire than any words that I might say could arouse in you, nor is it my prerogative to tell you how you may best serve the nation and the world.

"'Here in Hollywood we are uniting in the greatest service we know how to render, and it is my hope that there where you are meeting you may see the greater possibilities for carrying that unison through the millions whom we are serving and on whom both you and we and the preservation of the world depends.'

Meetings To Be Open.

"Let me say that this is an open meeting, and will continue so during the convention. We have invited every branch of the industry here and all exhibitors from all over the country. We have especially invited those who we felt were the head of the industry—as we call them "the bell-cow" exhibitors, those who should be leaders in their section and we want every one to be heard, and if you have anything to say for the good of the industry this is your opportunity.

Peter J. Schaefer
President

"I hope we will make up in enthusiasm what we lack in numbers today. We have prepared this program in this manner: We have a platform manager who will take charge of the meeting and call upon those who are to address us. Mr. Atkinson, who is our platform manager, will give you every possible opportunity to give this meeting your best efforts, and I want you to give him all the support you can."

Mr. Atkinson first called on Captain John W. Gorbey, one of the first Four Minute Men in Chicago, for an address on "The Meaning of America," which was done in a most eloquent manner. Captain Gorbey is a Chicago banker and will leave in a few days to take up his work in the army.

Meeting Rises to Greet Brady.

Amid loud applause and cheers Mr. Atkinson next called on William A. Brady, president of the N. A. M. P. L., who had come on in the midst of very important work at his studio. Out of respect for the man the audience stood as he walked to the platform.

"The Need of a United Industry" was the subject selected for the speaker, and Mr. Brady at once plunged into it.

"In the literature that was very wonderfully circulated in advance of this convention several remarks were made about the need of a national organization," he began.

"In Sunday's Telegraph—I don't know whether he was properly quoted or not—Mr. Rembusch stated that the President of the United States had been requested to send a representative here. I am the representative of the President of the United States as far as the motion picture industry is concerned.

"I believe when the President of the United States honored this industry and appointed me as a representative to bring about an active co-operation between the motion picture industry of the United States and the departments of the United States during war times, it was the duty of every man, woman and child connected with the motion picture industry to support me in that work. (Applause.)

Brady Doesn't Beg; He Demands.

"I don't come to Chicago as I came a year ago, imploring factions to get together. I come to Chicago now, gentlemen, demanding your patriotic service. I come to Chicago as the representative of your Government, demanding—not begging—that you shall get together and deliver 100 per cent. efficient service to your Government in a time of need. And how shall we have this efficient service?

"By battling between ourselves? By clishness? By methods, by objects that I know not of? I don't understand the idea of two exhibitors' associations in the United States. I want to say right now—and I am required to leave Chicago at five o'clock—that before I finish I want any gentleman who represents the American Exhibitors' Association or the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and who feels that the National Association of the Moving Picture Industry has failed to do the work required of it by the industry, to point out to me just what fault he finds with it and what it has failed to do.

"Why should not the exhibitors of the United States participate with it? Why should there not be an association representative of the entire motion picture industry of the United States at a time when the motion picture industry of the United States has the one opportunity it has had up to date, and may never have again, to get together—every man of us—and work for the good of our Government and for the good of our industry?

Can't Divide Into Camps.

"You cannot divide yourselves into separate camps; you cannot for selfish reasons promote different organizations for different purposes. You must be one for all and all for one, and it is your duty at the present moment that that sort of a combination be brought about.

"I am not for the American Exhibitors' Association; I am not for the Exhibitors' League of the United States; I am not for the distributors' branch of the motion picture industry; I am not for the producers' branch of the motion picture industry; I am not for the equipment branch of the motion picture industry; and I defy any man in this room or any man in the United States connected with this industry to cite a time in the past three years where I have played with any one of the different branches of the motion picture industry of the United States.

"I have played in the middle of the road for the good of you all, paying my own expenses, going here, there and everywhere, wasting hours and hours and hours and hours of my daily work listening to foolish arguments of the times, but always with the good of my industry at heart or your industry—I should say our industry.

"Therefore, why not a united industry? I am tolerably clever. I have lived a long time in the world. I've been what you might call a big business man for a great many years. I've had a lot of experience. I can't see why we are not united.

Line Between Leads to Friction.

"I am told today that there must always be a line between the distributor and the producer and the exhibitor. Why? I don't know. If that line is constantly kept between them it must constantly lead to friction. If there are two organizations led by two sets of politicians there can be nothing but friction. Friction naturally must come from two organizations.

"I have read it in the newspapers, and heard it in meetings, and I have read about it being asked in exhibitors' meetings, what right have a set of men in New York and a few other prominent places in the United States to represent to the Government or to the state that they control, that they are going to deliver the screen. The argument has been that the exhibitor controls his screen. Well, now, he may control it in a certain way, as was argued in Boston. He may be able to prevent unnecessary advertising being done on the screen, but when it comes to a national proposition or a state proposition or a censorship proposition, or any proposition that affects the industry, state, city or nation, I deny that the exhibitor controls his screen, and I call, for instance, to one thing that is happening now—a concrete fact.

"Secretary McAdoo, representing the promotion of the next Liberty Loan, has called upon the motion picture industry to do a very extraordinary thing. He has asked that there be shown on the screen in the United States a series of motion pictures which prominent motion picture stars of the United States have contracted (at their own expense) to make from a plot based on a Liberty Loan story.

What Manufacturers Are Doing.

"The manufacturers of the United States are furnishing the studios and the labor and the lights to make that picture; the directors of the United States are furnishing their services gratis to make that picture; equipment men are furnishing certain aids to make that picture, and exhibitors are going to show that picture, which will be made by Mary Pickford, or Douglas Fairbanks, or Charley Chaplin, or Marguerite Clark, or Pauline Fredericks and other stars.

"Now I ask you, ladies and gentlemen—referring to the biggest thing that has ever been done by any industry for the Government of the United States—in this particular instance, where does the exhibitor come in as controlling the screen?

"The actor made the picture and paid for it himself; the director directed the picture and paid for it himself; the manufacturer supplied the studio and the lights to make the picture; the distributor is going to distribute the picture free of charge, and the exhibitor is going to show it on the screen. Now where in that instance does the exhibitor control his screen?

"In everything within three years, or since the outbreak of this war, to complete the great services that this industry has done for its Government, it has been necessary that all parts of the industry shall contribute its effort to the ultimate success of what has been done. Therefore I deny and I challenge any man in the room to prove to me that the exhibitor should control his screen.

Ernest H. Horstmann
Treasurer

"No, we should be a united industry. We should value and wonder at the progress that the screen has made. We should thank God that such a great instrument for publicity, such a great instrument for good, for education, shall be placed in our hands, and we should wake up some fine morning and realize our own importance and start out and handle it for our own good and our own benefit. (Applause.)

Denounces Secret Diplomacy.

"Mr. Rembusch said to me this morning that he was going to have, or his association was going to have, three days of open meeting, in which everybody, as the chairman said, was going to be allowed to talk and tell what they thought was good for the industry. And what then? A series of secret meetings for the rest of the week. For what purpose? Amalgamation? Then if it's going to be amalgamation the only way to amalgamate is not do it by secret diplomacy. The day of secret diplomacy in this world is finished! (Applause.)

"If you are here to discuss the good of the motion picture it is your duty as good citizens of the United States to discuss it out in the open. Put your cards on the table, and if you've got any gentleman in either one of the organizations who are using it for selfish purposes then put his head on the block and cut it off! (Applause.)

"It is impossible for me to understand why so many bright men as I have met in this industry—and it is young and it is jammed full of youth, intelligence, brightness, cleverness, everything that comes to a man or woman—fail to comprehend the opportunity that is before them—to realize it. Yours is the one industry in the United States outside of the makers of munitions that has been declared essential to the successful conduct of this great world war! (Applause.) Yours is the one industry in the United States which has never gone to Washington or any state capital and asked for anything. You have always gone to offer something; not offering it at a price, not wanting price fixing, not wanting offices, not wanting commissions, but just going in and saying, 'Gentlemen, we are patriotic. We have been jarred and punched and shoved and kicked around by every petty, stinkin' politician in this country and now in a time of your need we are here to show you that we at least want to make good.' (Applause.)

No Profiteering in Industry.

"None of our companies is profiteering by the war. We are not making money by war times. We are declaring no big dividends. We are rolling up no great surpluses. It is not necessary for any Senate committees or tax committees to examine into our business to find out whether we are giving the Government a straight deal or not because in a very large percentage of our business there's been no chance for us to steal anything. The war has, to use a slang expression, "crabbed" our business.

"But still we are offering services to our Government, and our Government is appreciating it, ladies and gentlemen.

"A motion picture man now in any capital, either at Washington or in any state in the Union, has not got to stand up in legislative halls and listen to all the long-haired fanatics that are assembled calling the motion picture the work of the devil. That day is past. It is two years since you have lost a fight in any capital in this country, and it will be twenty years before you lose one if you will only take yourselves seriously and stop this damned nonsense at such a time.

"You want a national organization. The exhibitor wants to feel the distributor is on the level with him and the producer wants to feel that the other branch is on the level with him. You don't want to let a lot of petty politicians shove a great industry like this around and make it a football for—Well, I see there is a stenographer here and I don't care to be quoted about it.

May Bring Nearer War's End.

"You must get together! It is your patriotic duty to get together! The Government needs you at the present moment and believe me, ladies and gentlemen, we haven't passed or forded the river yet. There are dark, dark days ahead. It may be necessary yet for the motion picture to be introduced into the ignorant parts of Russia, and it is possible that through your aid the winning of the war may come sooner.

"There is some reason why the American Cinema Commission is rushing millions and millions of feet of film every week into Russia, Siberia and the Balkans. It may be that a projection machine and a few hundred feet of film, scientifically placed on the eastern front may do a lot more good than guns and soldiers. We may be able to reach those people on the eastern front and back in Russia, Siberia, Serbia, Bulgaria and Turkey by the one thing that speaks the universal language—the screen. And the camera cannot lie, and all German propaganda can be stopped through the eye and not by the head or the ear.

Brady Invites Hecklers.

"Therefore, again I say to you you should get together. At this point of my remarks I ask that any gentleman connected with the American Exhibitors' Association or any gentleman connected with the league or any exhibitor independent of either heckle me; to tell me why there should be two exhibitors' organizations, to tell me why the exhibitors should not be part and parcel of the national organization, to tell me why the exhibitors of the United States should not be required to pay their just portion of the work that is being done for them, to tell me why a national organization has been supported for three years without one dollar being paid into it by the exhibitors with the exception of a section of New York State—New York City.

"And there again I say it is a mistake that when New York is in trouble action comes, but when Indiana is in trouble, or Nebraska or Kansas, or California there is no action nationally. There is a flaw—a serious flaw—in the organization of the National Association when that great thing cannot be accomplished. It is not right when something happens in New York State that money can be found and men can be found to jump to the front and go and settle that trouble, and it is not right when this gentleman's state, or California, or Maine, or Florida is in trouble the same assistance cannot be granted that is rendered in New York.

Should Be One National Head.

"'But New York men would naturally answer, 'let the Florida man do as we do. When he's in trouble let him support himself.' If that's the case then our entire organization should be changed, shaped differently, the constitution and by-laws changed. We should have the combination of state organizations with a national head, founded somewhat on the plan of the American Federation of Labor, with a national council for national purposes, with local and state organizations, all leading up to a national organization.

"I should like to answer before I go back to New York an assertion that has often been made in exhibitors' councils that the exhibitor should not be a member of the national organization except in an affiliated way.

"Let's see what affiliated means. It means that the exhibitor reserves himself the right to hold secret conferences and then, as has been declared in the meetings of the exhibitors and published in the trade press and never denied, after holding these secret conferences he reserves the right to go into the big council with all the other people there, find out what they want to do and then go back to his council and govern himself as before. That's not fair. It should be one great big association."

General Discussion Develops.

At this point Mr. Brady again invited discussion by asking any one present to tell him what was the matter with the National Association, and it led to a lively and extended interchange of opinions. The chief participants on the exhibitor's side were M. A. Choynski of Chicago, Sam Bullock of Cleveland and Thomas Furniss of Duluth.

At one point during the discussion with Mr. Choynski Mr. Brady asked: "You believe there should be two organizations?"

"Absolutely not!" was the reply.

"Only one?" asked Mr. Brady.

"Yes. A national," answered Mr. Choynski.

"Do you believe the exhibitors should be in an organization by themselves either under the title of American Exhibitors' Association or the Exhibitors' League of the United States or some other title they should agree upon and be absolutely and complete by themselves," queried Mr. Brady.

"As a business proposition, yes," was the reply.

"Who is going to pay the support of the bigger organization? Do you believe the exhibitor should pay anything to the support of the National Association?" was asked.

"Yes, we should pay. I think that was a vital mistake not to pay. They should belong to the association, but they should have a separate and distinct organization," said Mr. Choynski.

"Suppose that in this council this week the two factions get together, the two associations get together and form one association representing the exhibitors of America. In what form do you think that organization should participate with the national organization?" asked Mr. Brady.

"Well, they should participate to the extent to have such a voice that it will be of influence when their demands are just," replied Mr. Choynski.

Samuel H. Trigger
Vice-President

"Do you believe, then, as suggested by the exhibitors' league at Boston, that they should demand a 50 per cent. representation in everything?

Suggests Board of Arbitration.

"Without going into the matter I should think that the 50 per cent. representation should be theirs, but in a different way. I believe a board of arbitration should be appointed for this organization to adjust the difficulties between the different branches and should sit the same as the supreme judge, and when they render a decision that it be finally binding," was the answer.

Later on Mr. Brady elicited from Mr. Choynski that there must be a national organization to settle differences, and that all must abide by the national head.

"That's all I'm talking about," said Mr. Brady amid applause.

"I begin to see daylight," interjected Sam Bullock of Cleveland. "I was somewhat instrumental in the formation of the N. A. M. P. I. and was chairman of the committee on grievances. We don't need to go further than the constitution and by-laws to settle our differences.

"Let me ask Brother Brady one question. Has the national grievance committee of the N. A. M. P. I., of which I was elected chairman, ever been called on to settle the difficulties that are interminably coming up between producer and exhibitor? The only cases that were called were the cases of different actors who jumped their contracts with different producers. I remember the Universal was in one case; Miss Mabel Normand was in another case, and J. Warren Kerrigan in another case.

Bullock Tells of Cleveland Action.

"But let's let by-gones be by-gones. We took your remark last spring for 100 per cent. efficiency in Cleveland. We took your remark as applicable to every exhibitor in the country. The exhibitor doesn't control his screen today.

"We formulated a plan in Cleveland, and we are bringing it up here to make every slacker toe the mark for the boys in the trenches. Now, Mr. Brady, I'm not going to question you any further. We know our national grievance committee has never been called upon. I am a man of peace. I hold an office in the state of Ohio in the league and also one in the A. E. A. Can you beat it? I am not here to fight. I am here to say right now today that the National Association as constructed and its constitution and by-laws are ample.

"If the matter of the war tax had been referred to the grievance committee no doubt it could have been settled satisfactorily. The advance deposit matter could have been settled. Those are two vital questions which we ought to be able to receive an audience upon."

"You're hitting a wonderfully good point there in mentioning the grievance committee. It should have the right to settle those things," Mr. Brady said.

"I happen to be chairman of the committee, and I have never been called on to decide a question or call a meeting of the committee. I was instrumental in getting the boys to accept that constitution. There wasn't a man on that committee that would even look at it," Mr. Bullock returned.

"May I interrupt you just one minute because that is the crux of the whole thing?" said Mr. Brady. "We couldn't call on you because this industry didn't have enough money in its association bank to pay your fare from Cleveland."

Cleveland Man Starts Something.

"We could have come on our own hook like we always have. I always have paid my own way. Mr. Brady, let's let by-gones be by-gones. Today the proposition is: Gather the strings together. I say let the National Association stand, but let it be understood that we follow out those rules and by-laws and constitution. They are ample to cover all the troubles that may arise," was the answer.

"I want to interrupt you on that remark. You say let the national organization stand. What do you mean?" asked Mr. Brady.

"The present N. A. M. P. I.," said Mr. Bullock

"What do you mean by 'let it stand'?"

"We don't need to form another," replied Mr Bullock.

"No, you couldn't if you wanted to," replied Mr. Brady.

"I am only anticipating," said Mr. Bullock.

"I mean that. I mean the national organization at the present moment is by far the strongest organization that's ever been created in the motion picture industry," answered Mr. Brady. "Its financial troubles have been solved, and if the exhibitors would only stand in and help we'd form the greatest national organization in the world."

"It derives its strength from the exhibitors," claimed Mr. Bullock.

"No, it's never had anything from the exhibitors," was the answer.

"You act in our name in Washington, you speak for me," said Mr. Bullock.

Brady Still Represents President.

"I beg your pardon, that's another misconstruction," said Mr. Brady. "Wait one second. You say I act in your name. I don't. I am not representing the National Association in Washington. You've got it wrong. I am appointed as chairman of a committee by the President of the United States, not as president of the National Association; the same as he'd appoint any other man to do something. If I had chosen not to accept the presidency of the National Association this year that wouldn't have stopped me being representative of the Government, because the Government notified me immediately that if I had chosen to refuse to be president another year they would have still insisted upon my being their representative. So you got things kind of crossed. I am not here when I say I represent the Government as president of the national organization. I represent you all. When I say I represent the National Association it is an entirely independent attitude. I am occupying two positions. In one moment I am imploring you to make a great national organization. I am talking to you then from the proposition of the industry.

"On the other hand, I am imploring you to snatch this moment for national good and your own good. I am far-seeing enough to see that your opportunity is here. I am far-seeing enough to see if you will all only get together and will all—the little lady there in Waukesha, the man in Peoria and the man in Jacksonville and the man in Utah and the man in Idaho—only wake up to a sense of their responsibility and a sense of what they can do, they can form the greatest national organization in America.

"I am not responsible for all the good that's been done in Washington. I'm not responsible for your being declared essential. You people are responsible for that. It is the wonderful good that you have done; it's the wonderful way in which you have stood behind your Government. I've simply been clever enough to see everything you did and see that it was properly presented at the right source, but it was you—it was the multitude, it was every one of you—that has done the good."

Brady Agrees with Bullock.

"Don't you think, taking the war tax proposition or advance deposits, had the chairman of the N. A. M. P. I. called a meeting of the grievance committee to see what they could do, don't you think we'd have been in a harmonious condition today?" queried Mr. Bullock.

"I agree," said Mr. Brady. "I think the grievance committee is the most important thing in the national organization."

"I think possibly all this discussion was gone over two years ago very fully by Mr. Evans in the formation of the National Association," interpolated Thomas Furniss. "Here was the problem: The National Association financially didn't prosper as was expected, and the exhibitor found himself in there consuming practically all his funds while absolute paupers were eating up the treasury at the monthly meetings. I believe the exhibitors felt more than humiliated time after time when they knew the demand for funds was great and they couldn't raise the money. The exhibitors didn't have a united organition back of them and they didn't prosper."

"Right!" exclaimed Mr. Brady.

In concluding his speech Mr. Brady said:

"The motion picture is the greatest business in the world at the present moment, with the greatest future. When you imagine that men and women in this business are making fortunes; that young women are getting salaries that never were heard of before; that directors are getting big salaries; that everybody connected with the business is getting such salaries, you must remember it is for the reason that, notwithstanding that the motion picture is one of the greatest vehicles for the circulation of propaganda in the world, the fact remains there is no place where anybody can go to be taught about the motion picture.

"Lawyers are being taught, preachers are being taught, engineers are being taught, but no one is being taught the art of the youngest, the most prosperous and the one industry in the world which has got the greatest future. We look at the motion picture only from its entertainment end.

Let's Keep Export Business.

"We are furnishing the rest of the world with 90 per cent. of the film that is used—South America, Great Britain, Holland, Germany, France, Siam, New Zealand and Alaska. Let's get together and preserve that business for God's sake! Let us remain as the motion picture service of the world. Let us keep our export business. Let us keep our grade of goods high. We cannot do it by being apart.

"You have no idea of what the export business means. You think, the exhibitor thinks of himself, the producer thinks of himself, the distributor thinks of himself. Let us all get together in one concrete mass, think for each other, and, as I said before, let us be all for one and one for all—a big business, not a cheap, tawdry, mountebank business: not despised, not abused, but respected as we are now.

"Imagine an organization running down from a central council to a state council and from that state council into a local council and from that local council into a village council! Then it would be possible to do almost anything in the United States—make a brand of goods, make a success of bonds, Y. M. C. A., Red Cross, anything that you can imagine can be done if you gentlemen will all get together and form a national organization.

How to Build a Treasury.

"Figure this: There are 14,000 motion picture theatres in the United States. If each theatre should pay one dollar a week into a national fund it would mean from the exhibitors alone, at the rate of one dollar a week, a million dollars a year. If the other organizations should pay their share proportionately another million dollars would be raised. In other words, you have in your hands without putting any trouble on anybody, without inconveniencing anybody—if all will work for the national good—the possibility of the motion picture industry raising two million dollars a year for self-protection or for self-promotion or for any other purpose that may arise for the natural good of the motion picture industry. A national combination, for instance, and I beg and implore you two gentlemen (Mr. Rembusch and Mr. Atkinson), if you have anything to do with it, that you bury the axe and try to bring about this great thing."

William Wright, of the Kalem company, and John Freuler, former president of Mutual, were next called on by the chairman, and they responded in happy, pithy speeches that were received with frequent applause. Adjournment was then announced until Wednesday afternoon at one o'clock.

At a meeting of the joint committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and the American Exhibitors' Association, held Tuesday night, September 3, the following were elected as members of the by-laws committee of the new organization to draw up a constitution and by-laws in harmony with the constitution and by-laws of the parent body, the National Association:

Frank J. Rembusch, Sam Bullock, I. M. Mosher, Ernest Horstmann, Alfred Black and Lee Ochs. William A. Brady was appointed chairman pro tem until the work of the committee is finished. It is expected that the committee will meet in New York in the near future.

WEDNESDAY'S SESSION.

As on the opening day the only meeting held was in the afternoon. The attendance was rather slim, owing to the fact that the big fireworks had been set off on Tuesday night. Chairman Atkinson, however, displayed his wonted interest in the proceedings. He read the resolution signed Tuesday night by a joint committee of the two organizations and followed it by the comment:

"This announcement means that about 2 o'clock this morning an amalgamation or reorganization was effected, that the

REVENUE BILL HITS FILM INDUSTRY

Doubling of Admission Tax But One of Several Increased Imposts Trade Will Have to Meet

THE doubling of the tax on admissions is but one of several ways in which the motion picture industry will be hard hit by the new revenue bill, which was on September 3 introduced into the House of Representatives. The Ways and Means Committee, which framed the bill, has increased the tax to two cents upon each ten cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for admission. The tax upon children under twelve years of age is fixed at one cent, regardless of the amount paid for admission.

The tax upon admissions to performances where the maximum admission is seven cents or less, has been fixed also at one cent, thus eliminating the houses which now are operating tax free.

Another change in the bill exempts from the admission tax all persons in the military or naval service of the United States, when in uniform, admitted free by the proprietor. In the case of persons receiving reduced rates of admission to any place, the tax will be two cents upon each ten of the price charged to other persons for the same or similar accommodations.

A new tax has been placed upon tickets sold at places other than the box office of the theatre, amounting to five per cent. of the excess of the price charged by the vendor over that charged at the box office for the same ticket, if not more than fifty cents in excess of such price, and a tax of thirty per cent. of the excess if more than fifty cents.

Persons having the permanent use of a box or seat under a lease, who formerly paid 10 per cent. of the amount for which such box or seat would be sold for a performance, will hereafter be required to pay 25 per cent.

The 20 per cent. tax applies also to cabarets, roof gardens and similar places where charge is made for refreshment, service or merchandise. The Treasury Department has ruled that 20 per cent. of the check is the charge made for admission, and tax will be levied thereon.

The taxes upon seating capacity also are doubled in the new bill. Houses having a seating capacity of not more than 250 will be required to pay an annual tax of $50, a seating capacity of not exceeding 500 will call for payment of $100, capacity of not more than 800 will be required to pay $150, and houses seating more than eight hundred will pay $200.

These rates, however, are to be cut to one-half in cities, towns or villages of 5,000 inhabitants or less.

A tax for the carrying on of business is to be levied upon all domestic corporations, to be equivalent to $1 for each $1,000 of so much of the fair average value of its capital stock for the preceding year ending June 30 as is in excess of $5,000; in estimating the value of capital stock the surplus and undivided profits shall be included. There is also provided a flat tax of $10 upon the proprietor of any trade, business, or profession the gross receipts of which for the preceding year ending June 30 exceed $2,000. Producers and manufacturers will be required to pay an additional $15 under the provision that "if such gross receipts from sources other than sales directly to the consumer exceed $100,000" will be liable to a tax of $25.

The footage taxes on raw and positive film have been eliminated and in their stead a tax has been included amounting to 10 per cent. of the price for which sold or leased on all positive moving picture film containing a picture ready for projection, sold or leased by the manufacturer, producer or importer.

Exchanges will be hit by the transportation taxes. The tax on personal transportation remains unchanged at 8 per cent., while that on seats, berths, staterooms, etc., has been reduced from 10 to 8 per cent., so as to permit of the selling of combination transportation and berth tickets.

The tax on freight is also unchanged, remaining at 3 per cent., that on express matter is fixed at 1 cent for each 20 cents or fraction thereof, while a tax of 1 cent on each 25 cents or fraction thereof is provided on parcel post matter in excess of 25 cents.

The tax on telephone and telegraph conversations and messages is fixed at 5 cents in all cases where the charge is between 14 and 50 cents, and at 10 cents on all costing in excess of 50 cents.

In addition to the above direct taxes, and the income, corporation and inheritance taxes to which he may be subject, the motion picture men will be required to pay a tax of 10 per cent. upon the electric fans he buys, and a similar tax on photographs, whether productions or reproductions, adding machines, automatic slot-device vending machines, liveries, and a number of other items pertinent to the theatre.

Government Warns Against German Propaganda Stuff

THE Military Intelligence Branch at Washington is sending out a warning to the motion picture industry of the efforts being made to distribute and circulate throughout the United States German propaganda films. The attention of the Military Censor has been directed to the fact that there are considerable stocks of still and motion pictures of enemy origin in the United States and that their exploitation is being constantly attempted by certain interests in this country.

Publishers and editors, as well as motion picture producers, distributors and exhibitors, should realize that the object of such exploitation is the furtherance of German propaganda here and that the sole intent is to influence public opinion in America, or wherever such pictures are used, and that consequently the military censorship will not approve such pictures, whether taken before or after our entrance into the war, and whether they be prominently or otherwise displayed, and regardless of caption matter or titles accompanying them.

The handling of these enemy pictures violates the Trading with the Enemy act. Such pictures were taken solely for the glorification of the German cause and German methods, and their introduction here is a part of a subtle propaganda campaign which should be opposed wherever found.

Violations of this request and attempts to introduce such material should be immediately reported to the Chief, Military Intelligence Branch, Washington, D. C., where they will be promptly prosecuted.

"Why America Will Win" To Open Liberty Theatre

THE William Fox patriotic picture based on the life of General Pershing, "Why America Will Win!" will open the new William Fox Liberty Theatre, Grand and Delmar streets, St. Louis, September 29. The Pershing picture will be shown for an indefinite engagement.

A $12,000 organ has just been installed and the interior of the theatre has been greatly improved. One of the features of the new interior of the Liberty is the greater opportunity provided for a more elaborate stage set. The lobby, too, has been enlarged and fitted up until the William Fox Liberty Theatre now has one of the most imposing fronts in the Middle West.

ASSOCIATION AIDS DRAFT.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has received a request from the United States Chamber of Commerce, of which it is a member, to aid in the distribution of all necessary publicity relative to the rules and regulations of the new selective service law calling for the registration of all men between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years on September 12.

This request was made as the result of a letter sent by Provost Marshal General Crowder to Harry A. Wheeler, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

The Committee on Public Information is preparing several posters giving full information relative to the draft regulations, and these posters will be distributed to all of the members of the United States Chamber of Commerce for redistribution among their members. As soon as these posters are received by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry they will be sent to all members of the association.

EXPOSITION TO BE REPRESENTATIVE

Disbandment by Exhibitors of Their Organization and Affiliation with National Association Make for Largest Interest in Great War Service Display

THE action of the exhibitors in Chicago in disbanding the two national exhibitors' organizations —the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and the American Exhibitors' Association—and forming in their place the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry—Exhibitors' Branch—makes the coming exposition at Madison Square Garden, October 5 to 13 inclusive, more an exposition of the whole industry than ever before.

Arrangements are now being made to have the first big get-together meeting of the new combined organization staged at the Garden during exposition week. This is the first time in the history of the motion picture business that the entire industry has been united under one head, and it is particularly fitting that the first meeting should be held at this war service exposition of the motion picture industry.

The exhibitors have buried the hatchet with one predominant idea in mind, and that is patriotism and service to the Government for the duration of the war. In conformity with this thought William A. Brady, as soon as he had effected the amalgamation, set the wheels in motion to stage an enormous meeting of all the industry at Madison Square Garden for the week of the exposition.

This has been done with two purposes in view. The first was to provide an opportunity for every branch of the industry to get together under one roof, and by an interchange of ideas work out the most effective means of organizing the entire industry for war service. The work that the industry has done in the past in aid of the Government has been great, but with the business under the control of a centralized authority that service can be made 100 per cent. efficient. That is what the Government and the industry expects, and it is hoped that this meeting at the Garden will be the first step to bring it about.

Officials May See What Has Been Done.

The second purpose of the meeting is to afford an opportunity for the high administrative officials of the Government to see with their own eyes the things that the industry has accomplished up to the present time in war work, and to bring them in close touch with the industry as a whole in order that they may comprehend the vast power of the motion picture as the most effective means in the country today of spreading broadcast to the people all forms of Government propaganda.

There is hardly a day goes by but what some official connected with the Government calls at the office of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to confer in reference to some form of Government activity and the best methods to use in getting it before the people of the country. When the machinery of the industry for handling all sorts of Government work is explained to them, they are amazed at its completeness. How much greater will this be under the new arrangement that was effected at Chicago!

While it is impossible to mention any names at the present time, it can safely be said that there will be a larger attendance of high officials of the Government at the war service exposition of the motion picture industry than has ever been present at an exposition of any kind in the history of the country. Mr. Brady has been in close communication with the heads of all of the various governmental departments, and they have all expressed their great interest in this exposition, and have stated that they will be present unless some unforeseen emergency arises at the last moment to prevent.

Four Campaigns Are Planned.

At the present time plans are being made for four distinct campaigns by the motion picture industry for as many departments of the Government. These are the campaigns for the fourth Liberty Loan, the Fuel Administration, the Department of Agriculture and the drive for the seven associated war charities organizations, including the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., the Red Cross, the Knights of Columbus, the Jewish Welfare League and the Salvation Army. The motion picture part of the Liberty Loan campaign will start probably one week before the commencement of the drive and continue for the three weeks of the drive. All of the plans for this have been completed, and officials of the Treasury Department have expressed themselves as more than pleased at the way things are being worked out.

As a result of the enormous opportunity for obtaining subscriptions for the Liberty Loan and the staging of an enormous Liberty Loan rally, the Treasury Department is now planning to have one of the largest and most attractive of all the many displays that will be found at the Garden show. Arrangements were also made during the past week for a large, interesting exhibit by the Department of Agriculture, which will show some of the big war problems of this department and the manner in which they are being solved by means of the motion picture. At the present time the department has traveling motion picture shows touring the state fairs as a means of driving home to the farmers the great necessity for increased food production.

Government Officials Enthusiastic.

Every administrative Government official who has heard of this war service exposition of the motion picture industry has immediately showed not only the most enthusiastic interest, but has asked if means could not be provided permitting his department to exhibit. Needless to say this permission has been immediately granted.

Another one of the departments in Washington that will stage a large and interesting exhibit is the Aircraft Board. There was some talk of this branch of the Government giving an exposition of its own in New York for the purpose of showing the many problems that confronted the Aircraft Board in organizing the manufacture of aeroplanes in sufficient quantity to make the weight of America felt. As soon as it heard, however, that the war service exposition of the motion picture industry was an assured fact, it immediately cast aside all its plans and arranged to take space in this exposition.

From the foregoing it can be seen that this is to be a real war service exposition, and for that reason it should receive the enthusiastic support of every concern in the motion picture business and those affiliated with it. The motion picture industry has been declared essential, and this exposition is its opportunity actually to demonstrate the reasons for its essentiality and to prove to the Government the many ways that it can be of still greater service.

In addition to the patriotic feature of the exposition there will be a motion picture theatre for the demonstration of all the latest devices in the way of projection and also for the purpose of exhibiting all of the various propaganda films of the various departments of the Government. There will also be a miniature motion picture studio, in which pictures will be made in order that the public may be taken behind the scenes and shown a few of the mysteries of motion picture production.

Likewise for the amusement of the public there will be a collection of the greatest stars of the screen, many of whom will be on from the coast in connection with their work for the Liberty Loan.

Taken all in all, it is safe to predict that this will be the most successful exposition ever held by the motion picture industry. Vast as the space in Madison Square Garden is, more than half of it has already been disposed of, and additional inquiries are coming in to the exposition headquarters in the Times Building every day.

One of the most interesting of these is that from the Sunlight Arc Company, which has obtained the exclusive privilege of taking motion pictures of the entire show. The latest models of their enormously powerful lamp will be hung from the second balcony of the Garden, and when this light is turned on the whole place will be bright as day, permitting of the taking of pictures of the entire exposition. So far as known this will be the first time in the history of Madison Square Garden that motion pictures have been made of an exposition in its entirety. This picture will be taken on the opening night of the show, and it is probable, if plans now in the working go through, that it will be ready for exhibition in the large theatres of the city during the week following.

WORLD FILM GETS "AMERICA'S ANSWER"

Director Hart Announces That Second Pershing Film Will Be Available to Houses of All Sizes

THE official announcement is made by Director Charles S. Hart of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, that "America's Answer," the second in the series of "Following the Flag to France" war pictures, which was first shown at the George M. Cohan Theatre in New York and has since created remarkable enthusiasm in other cities, will be released for distribution to the motion picture houses of the United States October 14. The World Film Corporation has been selected as the medium for distributing this important Government film.

"In releasing 'America's Answer' for general distribution at this early date," says Mr. Hart, "the Division of Films has in mind the importance of 'getting to' the greatest audience in the shortest possible time. It is recognized that this can best be done through the medium of the regular picture houses. The value of paving the way by exhibiting the official pictures in the larger cities in theatres not usually devoted to motion pictures should not be discounted. The publicity received in this way is helpful, and creates a preliminary desire on the part of the public in the smaller cities to see the picture. In another way it is helpful to the exhibitor. The picture gets to the motion picture house with all the preliminary heavy outlay in advertising and printing fully paid. The subsequent expenses to the exhibitor are practically nominal.

Small Theatres May Show Film.

"In the desire of the Division of Films to get 'America's Answer' into the motion picture houses as expeditiously as possible, and, at the same time, on a basis that will be just to all concerned, a plan has been evolved that it is expected, will meet with wide approval. Under this plan small theatres can show 'America's Answer' at a cost that will be in keeping with its income. There will be no incentive for the raising of prices. The regular admission fees will be found adequate to afford a reasonable profit, to say nothing of the increased returns that an official picture of this kind naturally insure. This means that the smallest as well as the largest among the motion picture houses can afford to play 'America's Answer' and, no matter what their regular prices may be, there will be no need for raising them in order to warrant the exhibitor in showing the film. It stands to reason that an arrangement of this kind, based on justice and a spirit of friendliness and fairness to the exhibitor and the public, and at the same time keeping in view the importance of 'America's Answer' as the highest form of Government propaganda, will meet with a general and generous response from the motion picture exhibitors of the entire country.

"Surely no special argument is needed to convince exhibitors of the value of 'America's Answer' not only from the standpoint of the boxoffice, but also as a means of aiding the Government in a work that is daily growing in importance.

"America's millions who have expended their incomes lavishly in Liberty Bonds, Government Stamps and for the various organizations that are doing such glorious work behind the lines in France, to say nothing of the growing taxation which they are meeting with a smile, are entitled to know just what the Government is doing with the billions that are entrusted to it. 'America's Answer' responds to this demand in a way that is at once comprehensive, thrilling and satisfying. The exhibitor who shows this great war picture in his house is not only more than financially justifying himself for the reasonable expense involved, but he also is doing his 'bit' in stirring up his community to the needs and purposes of the world war for democracy. Communities are more patriotic after seeing 'America's Answer.' It has helped to prove that the films is the most effective way of reaching the eyes and intelligence of the public that so far has been devised. The motion picture theatres have been 100 per cent. patriotic in the war. They have in many ways aided the Government in its propaganda work. The showing of 'America's Answer' will be one more page added to the long record of helpfulness.

"Quite apart from the invaluable information which 'America's Answer' imparts, and which is now given to the public, the picture has a stirring appeal in the fact that it takes the spectator actually to the battle front, shows our American boys under fire, and visualizes war as it actually is. Night after night, in New York and other cities where the picture has been shown, fathers and mothers, sisters and sweethearts have seen their loved ones among the masses of soldiers depicted upon the screen. The possibility of seeing and recognizing soldier boys in the picture is one of its great appeals, the value of which every exhibitor must realize.

"The arrangement with the World Film Corporation insures a systematic distribution under the new plan which has been formulated."

Metro Advance Guard Reaches Los Angeles

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, president, and Joseph Engel, treasurer of the Metro Pictures Corporation, accompanied by James D. Rhodes, a large stockholder in the corporation from Pittsburgh, and Count Cippico, a member of the executive staff, arrived in Los Angeles on September 1.

These officials are the advance guard of several Metro companies that will go to California for the winter, and probably remain permanently. Some of the Metro companies are expected by the end of this month, and Alla Nazimova and her organization are due to arrive early in October. Nine companies in all, counting those now here, will be on the West Coast before December 1.

The Metro forces already in Los Angeles are occupying the Lone Star studio on Santa Monica Boulevard and Lillian Way, used by Charles Chaplin while with the Mutual corporation. This place, while roomy and well equipped, will be entirely too small to accommodate anything like a large number of companies, and tentative plans for the erection of a large plant are under way.

President Rowland says that a survey of the situation with the view of bringing the Metro forces from the East to the West Coast will be initiated at once.

William Davidson Joins Officers' Training Camp

William Davidson, well known as a juvenile lead, lately appearing in William Fox productions, is now learning how to become an officer for Uncle Sam. Davidson entered the artillery officers' training school at Camp Zachary Taylor, Louisville, September 5, and was accepted after he had tried to enlist a number of times. Three weeks ago he started work under the direction of Richard Stanton at the Fort Lee studios in "Why I Would Not Marry."

William Davidson.

The day work started, Davidson received official notification from Washington that his enlistment had been accepted and for him to prepare to leave for camp on September 5. In order to enable Davidson to appear in the play Director Stanton worked night and day, as did other members of the company, to shoot 150 scenes in which Davidson appears. The last scene was filmed late Tuesday night, and immediately after Davidson caught a train for Cincinnati, where he said good-bye to his mother at the station on Wednesday night en route to Louisville.

"OVER THE TOP" REPEATING.

The first week in September marked the beginning of "repeat" bookings on "Over the Top," Vitagraph's big patriotic special which has as its star "Private" Arthur Empey. During the last week Vitagraph was in receipt of numerous letters and telegrams of congratulation from exhibitors, many of whom placed their orders for repeat showings during the fall and winter season. "Over the Top" has had many fine compliments paid it since its release.

SMILEAGE BOOK DRIVE IS ON

Exhibitors Will Be Asked to Contribute 10 Per Cent. of Receipts for One Day Out of Each Month

THE War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities will start a "drive" for the sale of Smileage Books on September 10. The movement will be under the general direction of L. J. Meyberg, acting for the Military Entertainment Council, of which James Couzens is chairman. These Smileage Books, as is generally known, are for the use of soldiers in training camps, who are thus provided with admissions to Liberty Theatres. Without Smileage in their possession the Yanks, while in training, must pay in cash for their entertainment.

Particular attention will be paid to a movement Mr. Meyberg is advancing toward co-operation among managers of moving picture theatres throughout the entire country. An effort has been made to place pledges in the hands of every showman who exhibits films, with a view to securing contributions of sums equal to 10 per cent. of the gross receipts of every picture theatre in the land on one day each month, the date to be selected by the showman himself. Accompanying this article we reproduce the cover of the Smileage Book for the purpose of identification.

The thirty day "drive" which starts September 10 will have in mind an awakened interest in the purchase of Smileage Books by the public in general. Picture theatres will be asked to contribute to this movement by showing slides, using publicity and generally advertising the Smileage Books with material the Military Entertainment Council will provide for the purpose. Proper news stories and bulletins will go out during the drive, and for the period of the war, not only to exhibitors but to newspapers to the estimated number of ten thousand publications.

Five Hundred Exhibitors Pledged.

Big men in the industry are co-operating with the "little fellow" to the end that the heartiest "punch" may be injected into the movement by everybody concerned in the business of manufacturing, distributing and exhibiting motion pictures. Already more than 500 pledges to give 100 per cent. of receipts on a selected day of the month have been signed by exhibitors large and small There is a conspicuous example of co-operation in the case of Marcus Loew who has, in addition to signing the pledge, given five million tickets of admission to his various theatres to be sold at 10 cents each, promising a sum of $500,000 for the Smileage Fund.

Carl Laemmle has offered the services of the Universal organization to circularize 17,000 exhibitors and place pledge pads in every Universal exchange. Mr. Meyberg, in charge of the "drive," has started upon a tour of the principal cities in the west, when he expects to address meetings of exhibitors in Chicago, Detroit, Minneapolis, Omaha, Denver, Salt Lake City, Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Books Will Support Liberty Theatres.

For months individual efforts have been made by prominent professionals to sell Smileage Books to individuals that soldiers in training may have "passes" to Liberty Theatre entertainments. The Commission on Training Camp Activities is a vital force in the War Department's machinery. Liberty Theatres are supposed to be self-supporting, and the sale of Smileage Books will make them so. All of the funds derived from the sale of tickets, the rental of films and other sources of revenue that come under the general heading of entertainment activities, are held in a separate account by the United States and are handled exactly as other Government funds.

The Commission on Training Camp Activities is doing an important work, and exhibitors of moving pictures who co-operate will be helping in a way that will be personally appreciated by every soldier who has a Smileage Book placed in his hands. The funds are safeguarded and the entertainments are considered by the War Department as absolutely essential to the welfare of soldiers in training.

Meyberg Writes Laemmle.

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, has just received from J. L. Meyberg, personal representative of the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities, a letter expressing the highest appreciation of the service Mr. Laemmle has rendered in obtaining Smileage for men in Uncle Sam's service. Mr. Laemmle recently sent out strong appeals to all Universal exchanges enlisting their co-operation in getting contributions to this fund from the exhibitors. The response is reported to have exceeded expectations.

Following is the letter from Mr. Meyberg:

My Dear Mr. Laemmle:

I should like to express to you, however inadequately, some measure of our appreciation for the part which you are taking in the plan of the Military Entertainment Council in its work of providing Smileage for our men in the large training camps.

We thank you especially for your assistance in introducing Smileage along the lines suggested by you, whereby you lend your good support and that of your organization toward making the present drive to obtain the "Smileage Pledge" from every theatre in the country a huge success.

There is no way of telling you what it means to have your good co-operation in presenting to the industry through your exchanges this opportunity for service upon their part. All of us recognize the important part being taken by this industry toward helping win the war, and we are confident that by hearty support of this Smileage movement they will render an especially and particularly valuable service.

The fact that there is no reward or compensation adds to our sense of appreciation for your patriotic helpfulness.

L. J. MEYBERG,
Personal Representative.

Moss is now negotiating with some of the big names on the screen. Also he is negotiating with several directors.

Yankee Soldiers Abroad Ask for Screen Stars

MARY PICKFORD, Douglas Fairbanks and Charley Chaplin have been invited by the Overseas Theatrical League, of which Lee Shubert is chairman, to go abroad and entertain members of the A. E. F. near the battle line in France.

Moving picture interests with whom these stars have contracts have given consent to sufficient "time off" for the trip to be made and telegrams have been sent to the individual players inviting them to go overseas. As we go to press no response has been reported.

Uncle Sam's soldiers are being entertained by stage celebrities through co-operation with the Overseas League and the boys have also expressed a desire to see some of the big screen stars.

CANADIAN SHOWMEN HOLD CONVENTION

Exhibitors' Protective Association Meets in General Session with Good Results

THE first general meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario, Limited, since the annual meeting of the organization was held at the Sons of England Hall on Tuesday morning, September 3, with President J. C Brady, owner of the Madison Theatre, Toronto, in the chair

After a lengthy discussion the meeting decided to ask the Canadian Motion Picture Distributing Committee to arrange for the representation of the association on the special committee which will have charge of the handling of Victory Loan releases throughout the dominion this fall Announcement had been made that this special committee would be made up of representatives of all recognized exchanges in the country, but the exhibitors' association expressed a desire for some say in the work

The exhibitors also decided to ask the Federal Government for official recognition as an essential factor, and in this connection the members expressed their willingess to co-operate with the Government in every possible manner The association, however, wanted assurances from the Government that the moving picture business would receive all due consideration during the coming fall and winter.

The members were advised that there would be fifteen special Victory Loan pictures for their use and choice It was decided that no exchange advertising would be shown in connection with the loan releases

Announcement was made that the Ontario association had made great strides in its membership, the roll of active members now reaching beyond one hundred and fifty names Secretary Thomas Scott may be sent throughout the province on a membership mission Several out-of-town representatives declared that such a tour would undoubtedly help the organization a great deal. It was suggested that Mr Scott could cover the main cities and towns at least.

President Brady announced that no trivial complaints would be considered by the grievance committee. In future all members must lay positive evidence of an injustice before the association before a complaint would be taken up.

Several of the members urged the formation of a joint stock company for the handling of exclusive releases for the members of the association No decision was reached in the matter, but the subject will be brought up at the next meeting It was suggested that a representative of the association be sent to New York City to interview the producers with a view to securing control of suitable attractions.

According to a statement of profit and loss presented at the meeting a balance of $502.61 has been carried forward to the coming year. The balance sheet covered the period from January 1 to July 31 The expenditures during this period included rent of the association's headquarters at 143 Yonge street amounting to $120.

Representatives of the press were present for the first time at a meeting of the association. A number of out-of-town members were also in attendance

Made One Hand Wash the Other.

Eugene Levy, managing director of Levy's Orpheum, Seattle, Wash., recently found a way to be patriotic and to pull a good advertising stunt at the same time He offered to donate to the local marine recruiting station the money for a large supply of recruiting posters to be pasted up by members of the marine corps about the city, and he offered a suggestion for the wording of the posters

Both his donation and his suggestion were accepted, with the result that every available post, window and sign board, both official and unofficial, in the city were pasted with an 18-inch poster, which bore the legend "To Hell with the Kaiser" in very large type, while at the bottom in much smaller type was added "Join the Marines." The Metro special production, "To Hell with the Kaiser," which opened at Levy's Orpheum the first of the following week, started off with a rush

Circulates Newspaper on Propaganda Film

ONE of the most remarkable publicity stunts ever put across in Canada was the "big boost" secured by Roland Roberts for the presentation of "To Hell with the Kaiser" at the Regent Theatre, Toronto, during the week of September 2. With the co-operation of the Daily News Mr. Roberts issued a special war extra of "The Regent Graphic," and the paper was distributed in such a manner throughout the city that the people became greatly excited. The motor trucks of the paper were sent out with crews of six men each, and they hustled the paper in true newsboy style. This occurred during the Friday evening before the opening date for the picture, and the residents of the various streets rushed out from their houses to buy copies of the "special extra"

The Regent Graphic resembled a daily newspaper in every way except that the whole paper was devoted to advance notices and advertisements for "To Hell with the Kaiser." Even the front-page cartoon referred to the feature. The third page was a one-page advertisement, while the fourth page was devoted to coming attractions at the Regent. The special paper was also distributed free of charge by the newsboys on the main downtown corners of the city and also at the Canadian National Exhibition, where upwards of one hundred thousand people were in attendance.

New York State Film Men to Look Over Candidates

THE motion picture interests of New York State have formed no alliances or affiliations with any political parties up to the present time and have taken no active part in the coming gubernatorial campaign. This statement was made by Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the State of New York, in contradicting a statement that appeared in a morning paper to the effect that the theatrical and motion picture interests would form to organize the Albert E. Smith Theatrical League to aid the Democratic candidate for governor.

"Our organization is keeping in very close touch with the political developments throughout the state and proposes to issue a call shortly for a state-wide conference, to be held at a central point up-state, to discuss the situation in all its phases," said Mr. Cohen.

It can be safely said that the motion picture will play a prominent part in the coming campaign. The entire state has been thoroughly organized, and the weight and power of the motion picture and the motion picture screens of the state will be thrown in favor of those candidates who have played fair with the picture interests. This campaign will probably be conducted along non-partisan lines, especially in the cases of candidates for the state Senate and Assembly, and those men will be favored who have shown a disposition to treat the motion picture industry fairly in legislative matters.

The state-wide conference, which will comprise all of the influential motion picture men, will probably be held at Saratoga in the course of the next week or two.

Exhibitors Form Local Association.

The moving picture theatre branch of the Retail Merchants' Association of Ottawa, Ont., has been definitely organized, and every local house has become associated with the local branch. Officers of the Ottawa organization have been elected as follows:

President, Ben Stapleton, Centre Theatre; first vice-president, Harry Brouse, Imperial and Family theatres; second vice-president, James Moxley, Allen's Regent Theatre; treasurer, Isadore Sugarman, Princess Theatre; secretary, T. Nolan, Rex Theatre.

Some Liberty Theatre Activities.

Porter J. Johnston, formerly manager of the Paramount office in Cincinnati, will relieve Henry Schoenstadt as Southern picture representative of the War Department's Commission on Training Camp Activities.

"Hearts of the World" played to big business at Camp Merritt.

"Crashing Through to Berlin" and all Jewel productions will play the Liberty Theatre Circuit on a patriotic cost-of-delivery basis.

The Picture Division of the War Department, Commission on Training Camp Activities, is going to assist headquarters at Camp Halabard, Baltimore, Md., in securing equipment and films for their auditorium.

The band soloist and song leader idea is proving popular with Liberty Theatre managers to supplement picture programs.

Frances Ingram, contralto of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, is now touring the Liberty Theatre Circuit, with a Pathe Weekly and a Douglas Fairbanks feature picture as an added attraction to her program.

Arrangements are being made to "shoot" a picture every week at some one of the Liberty theatres. It is quite possible that several of the best known picture stars will be snapped distributing Smileage to the soldiers.

E. L. Hyman, director of the Picture Division, now issues a weekly bulletin of instructions to the Liberty Theatre managers for their guidance.

Crowd Waiting in Front of the Fox Theatre.

With Temperature at 103 Bay State House Breaks Records with "The Prussian Cur"

TEMPERATURE of 103 degrees in the shade is not ordinarily considered "good weather" by motion picture exhibitors. Keeping a line of people one block long constantly in front of a theatre from 10:30 a. m. to 9 p. m., in spite of the fact that ticket sellers were working industriously all the time, is some achievement for any theatre in any sort of weather.

Yet this sort of weather and this sort of a crowd is reported to have been the greeting which "The Prussian Cur" received at its opening week before last in the Fox Theatre in Springfield, Mass. The production broke all house records.

The accompanying photograph was taken on the first day of the engagement of "The Prussian Cur." The street temperature was 103 degrees, and there was no perceptible relief in the evening.

Not only did record-breaking business prevail on the opening day, but it also continued during the entire engagement in Springfield.

Many significant incidents occurred during the showing of the film. At various times during the picture the audience hissed Captain Horst von der Goltz, the confessed German spy, who is one of the principals in the production.

The picture evoked enthusiastic reviews from the Springfield daily papers.

I AEMMLE PLANS TO FILL GAPS.

Universal, under the impetus of special orders from its president, Carl Laemmle, has undertaken a swift campaign to fill up the gaps made throughout the organization by the recent draft. The plans contemplate the engaging of workers in all branches not only to fill the present depletion but to anticipate the inroads likely to be made by the new draft of men between the ages of eighteen and forty-five.

As part of the undertaking, Joe Brandt, assistant treasurer, leaves this week for an extended tour around the country visiting all the exchanges. He will also work on Mr. Laemmle's latest campaign to help the government by raising funds for Smileage books, for men in the service .

Exhibitors who desire to meet Mr. Brandt personally during his trip in reference to Smileage or any other matter will be able to ascertain exactly when he will be in their district by inquiring from their local Universal exchange.

FARNUM SHOOTS SCENES ON SHIP.

Through the co-operation of United States officials William Farnum and his company, now filming "The Man of Power," were able recently to stage scenes of the play on board a ship and on one of the big piers in San Francisco Harbor. One whole afternoon was devoted to photographing on the ship.

The scene on the pier at San Francisco called for the presence of a big mob. After shooting the scenes on the pier the party went to the Rialto Theatre, where Mr. Farnum's new propaganda picture, made expressly for the United States Government, was being shown for the first time.

ROUNDUP DELAYS STUDIO WORK.

The slacker roundup in New York had its effect on the work at the World studio at Fort Lee. A number of the actors were held up at the ferry, and as some of them had left their registration cards at home they did not get to work until after scenes were delayed for several hours. The Madge Evans company had to quit for the day, as three of the important members of the cast were made to stay in the Sixty-ninth regiment armory until night, before they were able to secure their release.

Hodkinson Signs Frank Bailey.

Frank J. Bailey, of the American Theatre, Butte, has signified his belief in W. W. Hodkinson's ideals for the motion picture industry by joining the Hodkinson co-partnership plan. The American is one of the representative theatres of the Northwest.

TONNEAU TALK WITH EVELYN NESBIT

Star of "The Woman Who Gave" Discusses Her Ambition, Screen Art and the Story of Her First Fox Play During Trip from Fort Lee to Manhattan

SOME one had mislaid Michael. All the passengers were in the car but the chauffeur. That useful person was missing. Anxious inquiry failed to furnish any clue to his whereabouts. It was late last Saturday afternoon. After a strenuous day at the Fox studio, spent in taking interior scenes of the picture, "The Woman Who Gave," every one was anxious to get home. Russell blew a loud "honk" on the horn, then turned and smiled at his mother on the back seat. Still no Michael. Even Evelyn Nesbit showed a slight indication of impatience. Plans were suggested for instituting a systematic search for the absent chauffeur.

While the waiting passengers were looking up the road and down the road in front of the studio Russell looked across the road and spied Michael sleeping peacefully in the shade of a nearby bush. A concerted shout aroused the sleeper. Michael awake is an energetic person. The car was soon tearing along and more than making up for any previous delay. During the ride to Manhattan Evelyn Nesbit talked freely of her ambition, the art of the screen and her first Fox release. The interview was opened by a reference to one of the costumes worn by the star in "The Woman Who Gave."

"That was a striking color scheme I came upon, Miss Nesbit, when I first walked into the studio this afternoon. That long, brilliantly illuminated salon with its purple high lights and you standing in the center of the room in that gorgeous yellow gown made a picture that recalled an impressionistic painting."

"The story allows of almost Oriental richness in dress during a portion of the action," Miss Nesbit replied. "I play a Paris grisette, a sort of French Trilby, only more careful of her morals, who marries a Balkan prince and goes to live in his country. The people south of the Danube have a strain of the barbaric in them, you know, and run to gay colors and bizarre effects in dress."

"Your part seems to be quite different from anything you have done before in moving pictures."

Story Romantic and Full of Action.

"It is! The story is romantic and full of action, with frequent changes of scene. Paris, Bulgaria and the United States all figure in the locations. Two brothers, both artists, are among the characters. One is a hunchback, but a brilliant man. He employs the grisette as a model for one of his pictures, but loses his eyesight before it is finished. He is in love with her, and so is the brother. Both keep silent, however. After her marriage to the prince and the birth of a child the nobleman neglects his wife. Later on all the characters meet in this country. I must not tell you now how it ends, but there is real strength and honest passion all through the plot."

"You are evidently very much in earnest about this work, Miss Nesbit?"

The car had just shot around a turn of the road and the spires and tall roofs of the great city where so many strive for success flashed into view across the waters of the Hudson. The woman on the back seat of the tonneau did not answer on the instant. She was still looking across the river when her reply came. She spoke quietly, but the seriousness of her purpose was not to be doubted.

"Yes! I feel that my past screen experience warrants my trying my best. There is much to be learned, of course, but I am willing to work hard, and Kenean Buell, our director, knows how to make it as easy as possible for one. He has helped me so much."

Buell a Painless Director.

"I noticed at the studio he uses the painless method of directing. While you were changing your gown he did a scene with some of the other members of the cast. I was standing near but with my back to the set and the scene was nearly over before I was aware of what was going on."

"It is always that way with him. I am to make a number of pictures for Mr Fox—pictures in which I shall be obliged to stand absolutely on my merits as an actress. When we talked the matter over Mr. Fox promised me every aid to success on that basis. His choice of a director was my first assurance of how well he intends to keep his word."

By this time the car had halted and was one of a long line of vehicles waiting to take the Forty-second street ferry. Coming down the sloping Weehawken road a moment before an exclamation from the front seat drew attention to a troop train just pulling out of the railroad yard. Every one turned and gave it a parting cheer and a friendly wave of the hand. When the car was on the ferry-boat Evelyn Nesbit spoke of the screen stars she most admired and of the amount of patient application and intelligent thought apparent in every one of their characterizations.

Camera Exaggerates Defects.

"You simply must hold up your end of the work. The camera is remorseless. In place of covering up any defect in your method of make-up or acting, it pushes it forward and exaggerates it. The posing also is so important. If the cameraman does not do his part correctly, and you do not respond with just the right expression, whatever of good looks you may possess leaves you instantly. It is only necessary to recall any batch of proofs from a photographer to realize how a slight turn of the head or the lifting of the chin a trifle too high has caused you to take back the whole lot and demand a new sitting. The more I learn of the art of the screen the more I respect it."

"Do you believe with me that the day is approaching when the phonograph will have a rival in the home, and a cabinet filled with moving picture gems, exquisite little one-act plays, rare scenics and short poems like Keats' 'Ode on a Grecian Urn' will be found in the music room or the library?"

Evelyn Thaw's face lit up with pleasure as she replied: "What a fine way to entertain one's guests! The spoken drama has its intimate little theatres, where the works of such writers as Dunsany are given. Their plays are also to be obtained in printed form. The screen can reproduce the shorter masterpieces of literature in a new and fascinating form, which may be as accessible as the records of the phonograph or the books on the library shelf. Such a method is bound to benefit the screen."

A word or so about Evelyn Nesbit's personality. The public is familiar with her features. They have been shown in paintings, on the stage and in the moving picture. Very few know the woman herself. She has won the loyalty of her co-workers on the silent stage. Half an hour's conversation with her revealed a mental poise and understanding that will aid her greatly in the task she has set for herself. Her first picture shows that she has deep feeling and sympathy, and she is sincere in her attitude toward her work and toward other people.

Truckmen Make Proposal to Washington Managers

THE exchange managers of Washington have received a proposal from an express company operating several large trucks between Washington and Baltimore to handle their film transportation business. The company proposes to furnish a bond for the fulfillment of its promises, to guarantee the exchanges against loss by theft or fire, and to establish central offices in both cities, to which exhibitors may go at any hour to secure their shows.

The company states that it will guarantee to get the films to Baltimore at a stated hour. The exhibitors there can then phone the express office and ascertain whether or not their shows are in and, if desired, give delivery directions. If the exhibitors find their shows are not in there will still be time left for them to secure shows from Washington. It is reported that the service now available between the two cities is not all that it should be and that there are times when bad delays are caused because of an inability of the exhibitors to get in touch with Washington in time to cover themselves.

The rates will be 20 cents for a small film case, 45 cents for the large cases and 15 cents for paper.

Messrs. Morgan, Osborn and Linz were appointed to take up the matter further and to report to the exchange managers at an early meeting of the association.

Fuel Committee Goes to Washington.

A meeting of the producers' branch of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the studio managers was held in the association rooms in the Times Building Tuesday morning, September 10, at 11 o'clock, for the purpose of working out recommendations to be submitted to the Fuel Administration as to ways and means of conserving fuel in the production of motion pictures.

The report of this meeting was immediately put into shape and was submitted to the Fuel Administration at a meeting of the Standardization Commission of that body, held in Washington Wednesday morning, September 11, at 10 o'clock.

"PERSHING" BOOKINGS LARGEST EVER

First Government Release Has Been Placed in 3,500 Houses, Forming Record for Single Subject

ALTHOUGH complete returns are not yet in on the contest for the trophy offered by the Moving Picture World for the most intensive bookings for "Pershing's Crusaders" it is clear that this campaign has resulted in the most comprehensive bookings ever made for a film of any description. The first Government subject has been booked into upward of 3,500 houses for from three showings to two or three weeks, and it is safe to say that this film, on present bookings alone, will have been seen by a greater proportion of the population that any film ever before produced by any source. It is naturally gratifying to know that this result has been attained, and we are glad that in some degree this publication has contributed to the result.

The exchange managers of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit have shown wonderful results. Doubtless they would have done their best in any event, but the beautiful bronze trophy offered the exchange showing the best result was a definite aim, and the jump the bookings took after the offer was made tells its own story. Naturally each manager was prepared to do his best because the Government desired to give the fullest possible publicity to these films, but a two-dollar bet will make a wonderful difference in the interest you take in a horse race, and the bronze eagle represented a definite and tangible result to be worked for.

It will be remembered that in some stages the film was handled by the State Committee for Defense, and their figures have not yet been fully reported. Not all of the First National exchanges have sent in their final report, and it has taken some time to list and verify the contracts, but it is expected that during the coming week the returns will be in such shape that they may be canvassed by the judges and an award announced.

Denver Looks Like the Winner.

At the present writing, to judge from the results already at hand, Denver is going to take some beating. That exchange lacks but a fraction of 1 per cent. to make it a 50-50 break. The percentage of bookings for that territory is 49.58, or 295 contracts out of a possible 591 houses. Denver is by no means compact territory. It is not easy to get salesmen around, and some of the ground had to be covered by mail, but the results gained are so far ahead of the next available figures that it would seem that presently the eagle will find a permanent roosting place above the desk of C. Post Mason.

Two weeks ago Pearson of Minneapolis sent in a bunch of ninety-nine contracts in one week, and it looked very much as though the award would be his, but Minneapolis has a larger territory, and the final figures gave him a fraction over 43 per cent., which is doing mighty well when you consider the difficulties to be encountered.

Indianapolis stands third at present with about 25 per cent., but it is not unlikely that California will be a runner-up. The figures from Sol Lesser are not yet in, and it is known that he has been keeping his men up to concert pitch.

The Des Moines office did not quite make 20 per cent., but New York showed 21 per cent. and Chicago 23.28. New Orleans gets the low record with 7.87 per cent.

Figures May Change.

These are not the final figures, but that is the way the contest looks at present, and it is unlikely that Denver will be nosed out, though it is, of course, a possibility. Few of the exchanges did better than 25 per cent., but it must be realized that no other film has ever been so widely booked. It is probable that these figures will be excelled in the case of subsequent Government releases. It must be remembered that these bookings will naturally result from the missionary work done in the case of the first release.

This is what makes this showing so important. More than one-fifth of the managers of the country have already been shown the cash value of these releases and the greater returns in the appreciation of the patrons. They are ready to book the succeeding releases, and others are now ready to book the series, having learned of the success which has followed "Pershing's Crusaders." It will be necessary only to build upon the foundation already laid by the First National.

Not a little credit should be given the Department of Films of the Committee on Public Information, for the Victory Screen Pledge did much to help bookings. It is not alone a beautiful ornament to any lobby, but it stands a practical emblem of patriotism. It means something beyond the mere showing of the film.

Many of the bookings were for week stands and longer. Some bookings were for three to five showings a day, though three would be a better average. Many of the houses were of large capacity, and it is safe to say that the film has been shown to at least half a million persons and perhaps that figure might be doubled with safety.

It is a wonderful record—one to be proud of—and it will stand out above all other achievements because it was the first. We are sorry that there are not nineteen trophies that one might be awarded each exchange, for all of them did their best and have pulled together with a will.

"PRIVATE PEAT" ON SCREEN.

The initial announcement concerning the details of production and plans of distribution of "Private Peat," one of the contributors to the literature of the present war, was made by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation September 9. In a most elaborate screen version of this big "seller" the soldier-author himself enacts the leading role. The production of "Private Peat" was made at the Fort Lee studios of the Famous Players-Lasky organization under the direction of Edward Jose, the French producer, who is now staging the Caruso-Artcraft films. "Private Peat" is now entirely completed and will be released in October as a Paramount-Artcraft Special, one of the nine to be distributed during the season of 1918-19. In New York the production will have its premiere at the Rivoli.

FACTS AND COMMENTS

WALTER W. IRWIN, who has been put in charge of the work of distributing the special Liberty Loan subjects which the several manufacturers have contributed to assist in the forthcoming drive, outlines the plan in a letter published in last week's WORLD. As the Government has put a limit on the number of prints that will be available for the picture campaign, it is estimated that not more than one-third of the available booking days can be utilized. This unfortunate condition calls for the greatest efficiency in the process of distribution, so that the greatest possible days may be filled. Mr. Irwin estimates the total booking days at 70,000 a week. If no time is lost by delay in forwarding prints from house to house, a fraction over 13,000 days can be filled each week with the 3,000 prints which are to be supplied. The big item for every picture theatre manager to keep in mind under these conditions is to speed up the service. Don't allow a single print to be delayed. See that the print you have today is shipped immediately after the close of the show. Do it yourself if necessary. It will be a little patriotic effort on your part if nothing else. Let us see if every available day cannot be covered.

THE new tax bill has not yet been passed by Congress, but the first draft of it is now in the hands of the lawmakers, who are clearing the decks for action, and the prognostications are that the proposed measure, with some changes from the original, will probably become law by the middle of November. Motion picture men already know that the taxes on admissions have been doubled and that other taxes affecting all places of amusement have been increased. Thus far there had been no outspoken protest against this levy, and we believe that when these increases become effective they will be paid without protest. Surely, by this time and in view of the remarkable showing that has been made by our European delegates headed by General Pershing, who have been hustling the Hun all over the war map, every motion picture theatre manager knows that we are in this fight to a finish, and that he is helping to finish it, so that, when his bunch of canceled revenue checks comes back, he can point proudly to them as evidence that he did something to back up the boys who did the fighting. The greater the sum the prouder he can be. You know that if you can't fight you can pay; the more you pay the better the boys over there can fight for you. So smile and pay and then smile some more, for there will be a grand good laugh coming to you one of these days when our boys put the Hun in his last hole.

CAREFUL perusal of the report of J. H. Hallberg on the regulation of the use of electrical current, published in last week's issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, will be of material benefit to managers of picture theatres. Mr. Hallberg is an expert on the subject of electric lighting, and his analysis of the subject is complete and concise. According to his calculations it will be possible to effect a coal saving of 1,000 tons a week, conservatively estimated. While 1,000 tons is not a great deal when those figures are set over against the grand total of coal requirements each week, yet it is still 1,000 tons and worth saving. Read the report and get in line.

THE outlook for the coming season is good. There is an activity among independent picture makers that would indicate such a condition. While the "18 to 45" draft will take a great many good patrons, others will come along to make up the loss, and there will be compensating circumstances. The influx of new pictures will create new interest by affording new programs. A little extra effort may be required to keep your patrons alive to the good things that houses will have to offer, but that is to be expected. The main thing is not to lose the strong grip, the determination to succeed. Look closely after the "overhead"; conserve wherever conservation is necessary and advisable, but keep the character of the show up to the highest standard. Persistence and hard work will win out.

HAPPINESS AND THE SCREEN

By Edward Weitzel.

In one of his periodical attempts to "gas" the stage and the screen Gordon Craig, the apostle of the marionette theatre, emits this truism: "The theatre is not entirely to educate, not entirely to amuse—something of both." The English critic also delivers the following verbal barrage against both forms of entertainment: "Both are vulgar to the core, vulgar because they reveal the slush of man's egoism, his pettinesses."

George Jean Nathan is another inconoclastic person who is doing his best to batter down the good repute of the motion picture, by claiming that "It has removed style from literature, speech from drama, color from painting, form and the third dimension from sculpture."

Well, a man is known by the enemies he makes—and also by his friends. And the maxim holds good of the moving picture. The readers of The Mask and The Smart Set, the publications in which the two articles appeared, are as hundreds compared to the tens of thousands of patrons that are daily entertained by the screen. Nine-tenths of the latter know little of and care less about the two critics and their views, but go right on absorbing recreation and mental stimulus from the silent stage and the photo-novel.

To offset the acrimonious opinions of Messrs. Craig and Nathan we have the printed words of the devoted adherents of the shadow story, whose only quarrel with the maker of the moving picture is that he does not confine his product to a grade of art that represents the highest possible intellectual expression.

Being a good business man and knowing that the average patron of the screen is about on the same mental plane as the average theatregoer, the manufacturer of motion pictures takes warning by the conditions that confront the theatrical manager.

The mass of entertainment seekers do not want the "highbrow stuff." If they did Walter Hampden would now be playing "Hamlet" to overflowing houses in the largest theatre on Broadway, in place of having to his credit one performance of the part at a special matinee last spring, when he won the verdict of being the best Hamlet since Booth. Neither would Clayton Hamilton consider it a matter for deep congratulation because between fifteen and twenty thousand people attended in New York within the compass of a single month Margaret Anglin's reproductions of the two Athenian tragedies, "Electra" and "Medea."

The truth of the matter is set forth in Gordon Craig's dictum: "The theatre is not entirely to educate and not entirely to amuse." And by far the greater portion of stage and screen patrons want and will have nothing else but amusement.

The Rev. Dr. Percy Stickney Grant, in an article in the Theatre Magazine, points out the fact that President Wilson attends the theatre four times a week and that his taste runs chiefly to musical-comedy or vaudeville. After noting that the President's object in going to the theatre is to rest his mind, the clear-sighted and liberal-minded clergyman makes this observation:

"The influence of the theatre upon the First Citizen of this country is the best modern comment I can think of. It should not surprise those who enjoy Shakespearean drama or problem plays to observe the President prefers musical comedy and vaudeville. The best purpose the theatre can serve is to inspire happiness, and that is a quality which we largely manufacture for ourselves according to the normal habits of our lives."

The maker of the moving picture understands the truth and practicability of the above estimate of human nature in general, and will continue to be guided by it in shaping his business policy and the character of the goods he offers for sale.

DECIDEDLY "ESSENTIAL"

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

The very idea of classing moving pictures as "non-essential" was born in deepest ignorance. That same ignorance in modified form has prevented authors from fully understanding the subject, and it has caused producers to concentrate on the medium instead of on what it expresses.

Back of our democracy stands a great principle.

"The greatest good of the greatest number."

Our Declaration of Independence states in unmeasured terms that "The pursuit of happiness" is one of the "Inalienable rights of man."

The regulations we have enacted for the exercise of that right are purely social ones. We feel that it would be detrimental to the greatest good of the greatest number if the pursuit of happiness involved degenerating indulgence in the coarser desires. It is to avoid mental and physical decadence that we have imposed those restraints on conduct and habit which are embraced in our varying codes of morality.

The animal world is in a perpetual struggle for bare existence.

The savage human race is not much better off. Primitive man is always at war, living in an atmosphere of endless dread, both as to the enemies he must fight and of the mysterious unknown about which his hideous superstitions cluster, a nightmare of horror.

There is only one freedom, that of intelligence.

We are now using our intelligence for two great purposes.

We are waging war abroad to protect ourselves and our principles.

We are struggling at home to better the lives we are living.

These constitute two of the highest functions of the system of government we have built up under the title of "democracy," but the war is bound to end, and the more permanent function is that of our continued advancement. Moving pictures are now a factor in helping along collective intelligence, reaching as they do the largest number of people interested in what is being told. This great mass of people must be regarded as an individual in a state of evolution, seeking to benefit himself in every possible manner.

Without dealing in any well known analogies, the society we have organized has undergone, and it is still undergoing, an almost constant change for the better through bringing together its separate elements, just as people by millions are brought to a finer mutual understanding through attendance at the picture shows. It was a lack of this mutual understanding which caused European nations to stand apart, armed to the teeth and glaring at each other, when minor differences among them could have been adjusted to the benefit of all engaged in the present world conflict. Moving pictures may be in their predatory stage, like that of the small boy who steals sour apples from a neighbor when there are plenty of sweet ones at home, but they have awakened the national conscience by instantaneous appeal to human feeling.

The power of moving pictures lies in their appeal

Their language directly addresses our feelings.

The "word" requires intellectual effort to understand.

There is no doubt about the importance of printed language—no one is idiotic enough to discredit its value—but it portrays with difficulty what can be grasped at a glance by ordinary minds in the pictured presentation of what is to be conveyed. Moving pictures are supplying those ordinary minds with a great fund of experience they could not otherwise enjoy. This is unconsciously educational, for no two persons ever have the same experience to guide them, and the general sum of experience, so easily reached through this new medium as to be a source of delight, is broadening the intelligence of our race.

It is better for all that we have varied experiences. It is still better that they should be grouped for all.

No such useful knowledge can do any harm by being shared by our fellowmen and women from coast to coast. It does much to equalize minds that might be only narrowed and prejudiced by what occurs to one individual only. Moving pictures are essential to our happiness, to our enlightenment, to our advancement as a broad-minded nation.

NEW SITUATIONS FOR OLD

By Robert C. McElravy

THE conspicuous progress observable in the production of film stories, as regards character work, depth of thought, wider range of imagination and the like, have made things more difficult in certain ways for the director and scenario writer. This general freshness of subject matter has rendered practically obsolete certain time honored situations that have done service in the past. In other words, it does not pay to dress up new plots in old clothes, for when this is done the plot itself looks old.

There is room for a new bag of tricks in the presentation of screen stories. We cannot change fundamental characteristics of the human family, for they are more or less fixed. But new ways can be devised for bringing them into play, and in doing this a certain effect of originality is achieved.

To give an example. A film story was recently shown which was a veritable triumph for all concerned in its production up to the fifth reel. The characters were firmly drawn, the plot was bright and pleasing and the whole performance a decided success. In the final reel it was necessary to bring out the latent villainy of one of the men. At this point the scenario writer, or the director, or whoever had charge of the production, reached out and brought into play one of the oldest situations in pictures—the familiar struggle of the man and the girl in a room, with the hero and his friends rushing to the rescue. In just a few turns of the reel the production had fallen from its former high level of interest and became painfully ordinary. In spite of the originality displayed at the beginning, there was left with the observer the feeling that he had seen it all before.

Fortunately for this picture the scenes showing the struggle could be cut out, for it was sufficient in this instance to indicate the man's intentions without picturing the struggle itself. It was a gratuitous bit of melodrama that did not belong in a character story anyway.

Probably the struggle-in-the-room scene has appeared in film stories as often as any single situation that could be mentioned. In its day it perhaps contained a certain element of excitement and suspense, but it is hard to conceive of it as adding any great dramatic strength to newer subjects. Yet it is surprising that it still reappears.

There have been any number of other situations that might well be placed in the same category. They were used so much that they became obvious, and lost their savor. When the scenario writer wanted to depict despair in a man he had the man pull a revolver out of a drawer and start to shoot himself. To show despair in a woman he had her go down to the docks to drown herself. The old-time comedies, or at least a large per cent. of them, wound up with all hands taken to the police station, under arrest. The list of these formulas for getting certain effects might be indefinitely increased.

The problem of the scenario writer is how to contrive new ways for bringing out the same effects, and it is a problem. For the old devices, however much they have been abused by too constant usage, had the merit of directness and simplicity. But on examining most of them carefully it will be found that they were also usually sensational and doubtful at best. They had little to do with real life, and the screen is getting into real life today.

Stories at present are beginning to reflect genuine characters, and when the scenario writer wants to reflect a given trait in a certain individual he has only to ask himself, "What would this character do under certain circumstances?" The chances are his character would not naturally do any of the old sensational things, and his emotions in all manner of joys or afflictions may be indicated in simple ways. It is not necessary to go to violent extremes to show depth of feeling. If a man or girl is out of funds in the city the observer takes it for granted that the situation is painful and the individual is in despair. If a man has evil intentions toward a girl, it is not necessary to have him make a deliberate assault upon her. There are a hundred ways of having him approach her or threaten her, any one of which he would no doubt be more likely to employ.

One way to be original is to studiously avoid old, familiar devices. Some simple, natural action on the part of the characters is usually much more effective. If there is a certain freshness of appeal about the main idea in a story it will carry the interest without resorting to the stock situations so frequently used.

AMALGAMATION COMPLETED

IT is probably a bit early to say exactly what measure of success will come out of the convention of exhibitors at Chicago last week. One thing is settled, however, the A. E. A. and the M. P. E. L. of A. have been merged as the Exhibitors' Branch of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry; officers have been chosen from the two former warring organizations in a most equitable division of interests, and there is to be a new constitution to govern the new branch of the N. A. M. P. I.

This was accomplished largely through the pursuasiveness and the persistence of William A. Brady, president of the N. A. M. P. I., aided by a strong desire on the part of the exhibitors present to end all trade differences and to get together for the common good. Mr. Brady is to be congratulated in accomplishing the task he set for himself, and the exhibitors should congratulate themselves that they are now under the banner of a real organization.

It will now be possible to present to motion picture theatre owners everywhere in the United States a good reason why they should join their trade organization. When they pay their dues they may be sure that the money will be expended in their interests.

NORTH TELLS SALESMANSHIP SECRETS

Pathe's Hustler Sends Another Ginger Jar to Salesmen Competing for Championship Cup

EVIDENTLY Tom North is not going to let things grow sluggish if gingering up the staff will help any. Here's another letter from the energetic manager of the Pathe western division sent to all managers of exchanges in his territory. It sounds as though it might have been lifted from "The Business Career of Peter Flint," but it isn't. Mr. North knows what all sales experts know, and he knows about all they know, so we think that what follows came from his own active brain and was not overheard in a hotel lobby. That's just a little local color to make it sound more interesting and to spare his modesty. He writes:

Dear Mr. ———:

The other evening I was sitting in the lobby of the Washington Hotel, where I am living in Seattle, the hour being about eleven-thirty. I had just returned from our local office after having put in a strenuous day and night, or to be more accurate, I had been on the jump since seven-thirty that morning. I had just lighted a "fag" and sort o' spread myself into a not very polite but a very comfortable position and relaxed. There was no one else in the lobby excepting two gentlemen directly back of me. I pricked up my ears when I heard one of these men ask the other for his views on salesmanship and to give suggestions that would be helpful to others, and as well as my memory serves me, the other gentleman replied:

"Any person can sell to any man who wants to buy, but it takes a salesman to sell to the man who does not want to buy. It took me five months in one case to work my way into the confidence of a wealthy man who hated life insurance agents, and we had been acquainted a month before he discovered that I was selling insurance. He later had me write him out for a $10,000 policy.

A Salesman Should Not Lie.

"A salesman should know his goods forward and backward, know human nature like he knows the alphabet, and not lie. Self-confidence, which is indispensable to success, results from exact knowledge of what you are offering to sell and knowledge of your prospect. Salesmen sometimes fail because they have a set way of dealing with all kinds of people. That will never do. They should learn to adapt themselves to all sorts and conditions of men and women; with an easy conversational tone, but natural. Do not get excited or talk loud. Make strong, positive assertions about your goods. You must be absolutely certain that the article you are selling is the very best on earth. Then stop talking before you kill the sale by talking too much."

Isn't that a remarkable good common sense statement? I though so, and for that reason I am sending it on to you, Mr. ———, and will you please have it rewritten and placed in the hands of not only your salesmen but of your each and every employe.

I know that the good this bit of knowledge will impart will be very valuable especially at the present time while the contests are on for the Tom North Trophy.

Don't you agree with me?

Very sincerely yours,
Pathe Exchange, Inc.,
TOM NORTH,
Western District Manager.

That's saying more than a pageful. It's giving away the full secret of salesmanship in a few words. You must know what you are selling and the man you are selling to, and you must not lose a sale by talking too much—or too little. When he signs on the dotted line you stop selling him and begin to tell him how he can sell his patrons.

CARELESS MANAGERS ROUSE ROYSTER

Tennessee State Rights Sales Chief Says a Few Theatre Owners Make Life Hard for Exchangemen

NAT L. ROYSTER is sales manager for the Special Features Company, which has its headquarters at Knoxville, Tenn., and does business throughout the adjacent territory with state rights pictures. In common with all who make a business of leasing pictures to theatre managers Mr. Royster has his troubles. Evidently those troubles have become quite vexatious and hard to bear, so, to relieve his feelings he passes them along to the editor who has no troubles of his own. If you will read what Mr. Royster has to say in the foregoing communication you will have no difficulty in understanding what the cause of his complaint is. There is just a chance it may give you an idea that you, as a theatre manager, should give a little attention. Here's what Royster says:

As my past articles will testify, I have always been a friend of all managers, and am still their friend, but there are a few things that are happening in the South that should not happen, and I sincerely trust that the kind editor of the World will allow me a bit of space to tell.

Film Is Returned Mutilated.

There are "some" live managers in the South, and then again I have come to the conclusion that there are some that are asleep and seem contented to sleep on no matter what happens. In the last few months I have had new prints of "The Whip" and other pictures that have gone into what I thought were good houses, and to outside appearances were good houses, but there has been something radically wrong with the operators of those houses, or else the managers do not take the time to look into how their houses are being run. "The Whip," after being run two weeks, came into our office with sprocket holes torn out, patches pinned together with pins, and titles and bands off. The same has since happened to other pictures we own, and other firms have the same complaint. Why should this be?

Are theatres making so much money that they do not care to be bothered with such mere "trifles," or do the managers really look after other peoples pictures as they would want theirs looked after? Isn't there some way that managers will protect property intrusted to their care?

Wait, I am not done knocking yet. If I were a manager I would know what I had booked. There are some that do not seem to know, and they will hook your features and wait weeks before giving dates, or else, better still, they hook them, knowing that they will never use them. Our exchange has made as big success as any in the South, and still are there many dates held over that have been booked for three months. If they want features that have been tested and found successful why not give a date, or else say they can't use them now. Is it not better to know what you want and when you want it? There have been some managers lately who have in the trade papers stated that they did not care to see so many film salesmen, and still these managers are inviting them back again soon, but not giving dates.

I have known managers to "kick" like a steer over not having their show arrive from some other house in time for their showing, and then they wire the exchange a dozen wires "cussing" them out for not having their show there in time, and then I have been in those same managers' houses when they were to ship one of our subjects out and they have had to look half an hour for shipping instructions, which were finally found on the floor under the desk, and one of these managers mis-shipped one subject of ours, thereby causing his exhibitor friend to miss out. If Manager Jones misses out he is ready to enter suit against the exchange for three times what the rental was, but if he fails to ship as instructed he is not willing to pay the damages.

The whole trouble with a number of managers is that they have the house, an operator and cashier, and they generally leave billing, shipping, settling up, and opening and closing of the house to the cashier or operator. They can't be bothered with such piffle as being on the job from opening to closing time. Why does Rothapfel make his success? I'll bet he is on the job day and night and alive to all.

All managers mean well, and most of them manage well, but oh, the exceptions to the rule. War is on across the pond, so why not conserve. The word conserve is used often these days, but wouldn't it be dandy if some people would learn to conserve time?

I have the very best wishes for every manager in this old world, but it does look like some of them should help exchanges to help them. This article is not written with the intention of being a knock, but to show managers the importance of having help that will take their interests to heart. If a print is in bad shape the theatre kicks, and still operators will never take the time to always rewind carefully and see that it leaves his machine in good condition with all bands on right.

I am willing to go any length to ship shows on time and see that they are in good condition, but I would like to see co-operation from managers also. NAT. L. ROYSTER.

COAST PLAYERS ALL SET FOR DRIVE

Definite Plans Laid That Will Insure Studios Making Quota of $5,000,000 for Liberty Loans

PLANS and arrangements for making the fourth Liberty Loan Campaign in the West Coast film industry a success have been completed. Committees have been named and details have been worked out that will insure the film people making their five-million-dollar quota with ease.

A big open-air stage, designed by Wilfred Buckland, head of the art department of the Lasky Studios, will be erected in Central Park. A realistic production of a gigantic tank will occupy a large space on the stage. The tank will be headquarters for all Liberty Loan activities for all three branches of the industry—producers, distributors and exhibitors.

An especially built platform will accommodate a big orchestra and there will be room on the tank and lower platform for one hundred persons. All around the tank will be sales counters with elevated platforms to insure prospective bond purchasers the chance of reaching the buying platform.

Elevated runways five feet wide will extend far out into the space where the audiences will assemble. There will be ten speaking platforms in addition to the tank rostrum on the edge of the open air amphi-theatre, and it will be possible to hold eleven meetings all at the same time.

The various propaganda films made by the film stars will be shown on a gigantic screen that will drop in front of the stage, and the J. Slipper Company will erect a complete and fully equipped projection booth for this purpose.

The tank in Central Park will be unveiled and dedicated on the night of September 28. D. W. Griffith, president of the Motion Picture War Service Association, is slated to release the curtain that will bring the tank to view, and Lois Weber will christen the tank "Victory."

The first meeting at the tank will be under the auspices of the Motion Picture Directors' Association. Seventy-five directors and many stars of the film world will be present.

Victor Hermann, former Sennett director, but now in the Naval Reserve, has arranged for the forty-piece Submarine Band to be on hand to furnish the music.

The receipt for the first Bond subscription taken at the tank meetings will be indorsed by President Wilson, Secretary McAdoo, Governor Lynch, Twelfth Federal Reserve Bank, and practically every star of filmdom. This receipt, which will be a work of art, will be incorporated into a handsomely bound book containing the autographed photographs of all the stars signing the receipt.

The receipt will go to the subscriber who buys the greatest number of bonds, and bids will be received at the first meeting, or may be sent in letters or telegrams accompanied by 5 per cent of the amount subscribed.

Bids for the first subscription, which must be bona fide whether they are for the largest amount or not, should be addressed to J. C. Jessen, 429 South Figueroa street, Los Angeles.

The tank meetings in Central Park, which were originated during the last two weeks of the third Liberty Loan drive, resulted in $582,000 worth of bonds being sold. This amount did not include more than a million and a half dollars sold in the studios.

Bond selling committees have been appointed by Charles H. Christie and J. C. Jessen, in charge of the campaign, for every studio on the West Coast, as well as committees to operate among the theatres and exchanges. Arrangements have been made to have the sales made by these various committees turned in at the tank meetings designated for each studio or other branch of the industry. In this manner all bonds sold to the people of the picture industry will pass through the auditors of the tank meetings, and figures of the sales to the entire industry will be under one head.

Each studio will have a night at the tank, and all the famous stars will vie with one another and compete for the honor of the biggest night.

The women of the M. P. W. S. A. will have concessions for the sale of refreshments during the drive, the proceeds to be devoted to the various war activities carried on by the association.

The committees appointed in the various studios will be instructed in a school of bond salesmanship.

Little Thrills of the Week

Universal City is being scrubbed and polished and shined, the grass is being cut on the lawns in front of the administration building, the hide of Old Charley, the elephant is being treated to a coat of furniture polish, and other animals in the zoo are being vacuumed, several new hair cuts have appeared around the place—and all because Carl Laemmle will hit the Coast in about two weeks.

The latest marriage rumor links the name of Mae Murray and Robert Leonard together in the golden chains of romance. If these rumors keep up some of them are going to lead to matrimony one of these days.

A writer sent Sessue Hayakawa a scenario last week accompanied with these kind words: "I simply offer the suggestion. Should you like it I should be extremely glad to have you use it without payment." Here's the thrill! Upon reading the script it was found that the story was new, clever, original, interesting and entirely suited to the star's needs.

Stage Mechanics Strike.

Mechanics and stage carpenters of the film industry, members of the International Association of Theatrical Stage Employes on the West Coast, went out on a strike on August 28, demanding higher wages and time and a half for overtime and recognition of the union.

Practically every studio in Los Angeles was affected by the walk-out. A number of the studios acceded to the demands of the strikers, while other plants did not.

At several of the studios celebrated stars got out and hustled props and did the work usually taken care of by the technical and mechanical departments.

At a meeting of producers, held at the Lasky plant to discuss the situation, it was stated the trouble grew out of a controversy between the I. A. T. S. E. and the United Brotherhood, both of which unions are claiming jurisdiction of the motion picture industry.

The consensus of opinion at the meeting of the producers was that the policy of the open shop, heretofore in operation at the studios, should be continued. As to "time and a half" for overtime it was said the peculiar nature of the industry renders a demand of this kind unjustifiable. In the matter of the wage scale it is claimed by the producers that the studios have previously granted the scale demanded by the mechanics—that is, $6 for an eight-hour day.

Eltinge Begins Production.

Julian Eltinge has begun work on his first feature under his contract with Fred Balshofer at the old Metro studio on Gordon street. The story, which was written by Balshofer, is entitled "Over the Rhine," and deals with a young American college man's experience when he is caught in Germany at the outbreak of the war. Eltinge has the opportunity to wear several changes of stunning feminine apparel during a portion of the picture.

Warren to Make Pictures.

Herbert Warren, for some time past director and producer for Roscoe Arbuckle at the Balboa studio in Long Beach, has left the Arbuckle comedy organization and will in the future make pictures on his own account. Warren departed last week for New York, where he will conclude arrangements with a noted comedienne, whose name he does not divulge, and to engage the remainder of his company. He will return in about three weeks and begin producing pictures in a studio in Los Angeles.

One of the objects of the new venture, according to Warren, is his desire to try out several new and original ideas of his own for screen production. Valerie Bergere, Mrs. Warren in private life, will have a hand in the management of the new company.

Foreign Rights for Hayakawa Pictures.

The British and Australian rights to the Sessue Hayakawa productions to be made during the coming year have been sold, according to an announcement made by the Haworth Pictures Corporation in Los Angeles, to J. K. Walker, of London, for the British Isles, and to J. Williamson for Australia. Negotiations are now in progress for the disposal of the films in South America and in Japan, the star's native land.

United to Open Three New Offices.

The United Films Corporation, of which Ernest Shipman is Western manager, will open offices at Seattle, Denver and Chicago within the next two weeks. Mr. Shipman, who leaves in a few days for the East, will go by way of these cities and establish the branches on a working basis before he finally leaves for New York. Since coming to Los Angeles a few months ago Mr. Shipman has contracted for the exploitation and distribution of film productions to the amount of more than half a million dollars. These pictures are to be produced by the Corona Film Company, Al Jennings Productions, Edwin Frazee Comedies and others.

Volunteers for Camp Theatre Wanted.

Raymond Wells, who with his wife has volunteered his services to the Government to entertain and plan entertainments for the soldiers at Camp Kearney, says that not nearly enough of the patriotic players in and about Los Angeles have offered their services to take part in the plays given for the soldiers.

"If these players could see the four thousand men march in regimental formation into one of the free shows," says Wells, "we would not have to beg them; they would gladly come and help us keep the boys in a pleasant and cheerful state of mind."

For a coming production of "Julius Caesar" Wells has secured the co-operation of a number of noted actors, among them William and Dustin Farnum, Theodore Roberts and Frank Campeau.

Red Cross Workers.

Bert Lytell, Olive Thomas and Fred Goodwins shared honors as guests of the Kinema Tea Room and at the Red Cross shop on Alvarado street on Tuesday and Wednesday of last week.

On Thursday Bessie Love poured tea at the Kinema Red Cross tea room.

Friday a number of little screen stars, including Marie Osborne, Virginia Lee Corbin, Gloria Joy, Ben Alexander and others, lent their aid for a children's program at the Red Cross shop.

At the regular weekly celebration on Saturday at the Alvarado shop Charlie Murray had a show which he called "The World's Museum." During the afternoon and evening Ruth Roland, Franklyn Farnum, Bebe Daniels, Carmel Myers and Ruth Clifford took part in entertaining the crowd. Billy Mason was auctioneer of the day.

Exchange Man Becomes Theatre Manager.

Upon the retirement of Edmund O'Neill from the management of Clune's Broadway Theatre J. W. Anderson was put in charge of the house. Mr. Anderson has for the past year identified himself with the exchange branch of the picture industry.

Manager Matthew Bridge of the Superba Theatre offered $5 for the use of a dog during the run of "The Yellow Dog," and had a hard time finding one yellow enough for his purpose.

William G. Colvin has been appointed Pacific Coast manager for the Dramatic Mirror.

Picture Previews.

Dorothy Gish's new Paramount picture, "Battling Jane," which was filmed under the direction of Elmer Clifton, was given a private showing to a large number of invited guests at a theatre in Venice one night last week.

The United Film Corporation presented its feature, "The Crime of the Hour," to a number of invited guests at the Trinity Auditorium on the evening of September 3.

War Notes.

Theodore Newman, general manager of the W. H. Clune interests, enrolled in the Officers' Training School in Hollywood last week.

Freeman Smith, purchasing agent for the Brunton studios, left last Monday for San Francisco to enter the tank service of the United States Army.

Edmund Booth Gibson, husband of Helen Gibson, and himself recently connected with the Vitagraph company, enlisted in the tank corps, and has gone to Pittsburgh, Pa.

Kenneth O'Hara, former film publicity man and now a soldier, paid a visit to the Lasky studio last week in company with several actor-soldiers.

Harry Caulfield, lessee of the Garrick Theatre, is planning to spend his vacation in Arizona.

Studio Shorts

Constance Talmadge is at work on "A Lady's Name," written by Cyril Harcourt, under the direction of Walter Edwards, at the Morosco studio.

The Studio Club Girls gave a watermelon party one evening last week and entertained their former vice president, Gertrude Griffith, at dinner on another evening.

Ethel Lynn, Bobby Vernon, Clare Seymour, Leota Lorraine, Billy Mason and Al Christie were guests of the Southern California Exhibitors' League at a luncheon at Hamburger's last week.

George McDaniel, Louis Darclay and George Hackathorne have all been engaged to play important parts in Harold Bell Wright's "Shepherd of the Hills."

Al Ray is working in a Lois Weber production opposite Mildred Harris.

At a big military carnival to be given in September at Exposition Park for the benefit of soldiers and sailors at nearby camps and bases Tom Mix will stage a rodeo, with the assistance of the Fox cowboys, as one of the principal numbers on the program.

Le Roy Stone has been engaged as cutter for the William S. Hart films.

Harry S. Northrup will play the part of Captain Hodgeman in "Arizona," from the Augustus Thomas drama which is being filmed by the Douglas Fairbanks company.

Bessie Love and her company have gone to Sunland on location for scenes in "Sue," an adaptation from the Bret Harte story, "The Judgment of Bolinas Plain."

Billy Garwood is playing the leading part opposite Mary Miles Minter in a coming production in the making at the American studios.

Blanche Payson, six feet three inches in height, who attracted widespread attention as a policewoman at the San Francisco exposition, is now a member of Laurence Semon's Big V company.

Director Christy Cabanne has returned from an ocean voyage which was made for the sole purpose of filming scenes for the new Taylor Holmes feature, "A Regular Fellow."

Richard Barthelmess arrived in Los Angeles last week to play with Dorothy Gish in a new Paramount picture.

While the Monroe Salisbury company were at Pine Knott, Cal., a small village used as a setting for scenes in a new picture, the players staged a Red Cross benefit to aid the local chapter and raised $300 for the cause.

Bothwell Browne, female impersonator, took part in a propaganda film made by Mack Sennett.

The Dorothy Phillips company has gone to Big Bear Lake to remain two weeks while making exterior scenes for a Universal feature.

Josie Sedgwick has severed her connection with Triangle.

Mary MacLaren, who has just completed "Vanity Pool," will take a vacation trip to San Francisco and then visit her godsons at the San Pedro base before returning to work at Universal City.

Mary Anderson made a personal appearance at the Laughlin Theatre in Long Beach on Saturday night in behalf of the "Smileage Book" movement for the soldiers in camp.

"The Infernal Net," the play which Sarah Bernhardt wrote for Mme. Yorska, is being adapted for the screen by Verne Hardin Porter. Lawson Butt will play the part of the hero in the production.

Hugh Fay, comedian, was caught in a slacker raid at one of the beach resorts and was kept in jail twelve hours before his registration card could be brought and he was dismissed. Hugh has made a solemn vow never to travel without the card hereafter.

Ora Carew went up in an aeroplane one day last week with one of the fliers at Venice. This was Ora's second flight, and now she says she doesn't blame the boys for wanting to get into the aviation section.

The Christie Service Flag now displays eighteen stars, and as thirty-five persons are employed about the plant the Christie organization prides itself on having gone fifty-fifty with Uncle Sam.

John Gilbert has been engaged to play opposite Bessie Love in a coming Vitagraph feature. Gilbert has just finished his work in the J. Warren Kerrigan picture, "Sons of Men."

Earle Williams will make a trip to New York immediately upon completing his propaganda film "My Country First."

Death of F. W. Sweet.

Frederick W. Sweet, late traveling representative of the Nicholas Power Company, Inc., passed away at his home in Winthrop, Mass., on Sunday, September 1, after a lingering illness. He was for many years identified with the Power Company and, as traveling representative, was well and favorably known throughout the country.

Mr. Sweet's long experience gave him a broad and comprehensive knowledge of the motion picture machine business which rendered his services of great value. He leaves a host of friends who deplore his untimely passing.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Los Angeles Correspondent Personally Conducts Our Readers Through the West Coast Studios

By Giebler

LADIES and gentlemen, ensconced in a palm-embowered spot on top of the hill we are now ascending is the studio of that staunch and sturdy exponent of the romantic movies, J. Warren Kerrigan.

The history of this young man is worthy of a little consideration.

Mr. Kerrigan was born in Louisville, Kentucky, and although a naturally precocious child, did not give promise of becoming an actor by reciting William J. Byron's "Battle of Waterloo" and other pieces in a fine dramatic voice and appropriate gestures at the age of five, as many of our prominent stars have done.

On the contrary, he was designed by his parents to grace the Episcopalian pulpit, and studied assiduously with that end in view. At the age of nineteen, however, finding the sock and buskin more alluring than the stole and surplice, he joined out with a show.

About three years on the regular stage, during which time he cracked the ice of public approval in several places, he shook the dust of the oral drama from his feet, secured a toe hold on the film ladder and started to climb.

Since that day he has made several hundred movies, several millions of friends, stirred the hearts and minds of romantic maidens and evoked the envy of urban and suburban swains from Danbury, Connecticut, to Beersheba, Oregon, and broke his leg in two places.

A Close-Up of a Magnate.

As we pass through this office we are afforded a splendid close-up of a film magnate. The gentleman at the desk is Jesse D. Hampton, the head of the producing company under whose direction Mr. Kerrigan is now operating.

We will emerge to the stage.

The play being made here is called "Three X Gordon." It is a light comedy-drama, and is unique in the fact that there is no bad man anywhere in the piece, no mysterious papers, plots or plans, no intriguing individual to inveigle an innocent Imogene, no scheming scoundrel to cast covetous eyes at a Nellie of the Cloaks and Suits, nobody falsifies the books and blames it on the heroine's brother, nobody puts a spider in anybody's biscuit—the play is absolutely villainless.

The girl in the wide hat is Lois Wilson, leading lady of the studio. The career of Miss Wilson also offers an interesting study, and a valuable hint to all young girls who want to get in the movies.

Three years ago this girl was totally unknown to fame, as far as the screen was concerned. How then did she attain her present status? Very simple. The people living down south, in the region bounded by the Mississippi River, the Gulf of Mexico, the Mason and Dixon line and the shell road in Mobile, held a contest to see who was the most beautiful girl in their midst, and when the votes were all in Lois Wilson was "it."

Forthwith she was in great demand in the films, and has been ever since.

Any girl wanting to get a place in the pictures can follow Miss Wilson's example by making a noise like the most beautiful girl in seven states.

Step over here to the right and you will be able to see some spirited action being worked out.

How a Hired Man's Bedroom Looks.

This scene represents the interior of a hired man's bedroom and boudoir on a farm near Beeville, New Jersey. The cot near the door is occupied by Mr. Kerrigan. The chap simulating slumber near the wall is Jack Gilbert, one of our best known juveniles.

On the pallet on the floor is Stanhope Wheatcroft. This is Mr. Wheatcroft's first appearance in pictures for a long time. He used to appear in Fox films, but until recently was in the spoken drama with a regular stage star named Maude Adams, who had a small company on the road.

The director is Ernest Ward. Yes, Lady, the director tells the players what to do and how to do it. That's what he's paid for. As you see, he is now instructing Mr. Wheatcroft that he is to crawl under Kerrigan's cot, reach the door and try to escape.

Now they're off! Observe the serpent-like grace of Wheatcroft as he crawls under the cot. See, the doughty and intrepid hero is awake—he grabs him by the foot and drags him back to captivity.

The plot of the story concerns two young chaps, Kerrigan and Gilbert, who live in the silk sock section of New York. One day their respective fathers turn them out to shift for themselves. They get a job on a farm and like it so well that they start a school for the reformation of millionaires' sons. Wheatcroft, who takes the part of a small town dude, is their first victim.

Here's a Farmer Without Whiskers.

Your attention is called to the other end of the stage. This scene represents the interior of a farm house, and is occupied by a farmer in the person of Walter Perry. Your particular attention is called to Mr. Perry's make-up, and you will observe that he does not have the customary chin whiskers and is not chewing a straw.

Mr. Perry is one of our best known character actors, and is especially good in rural parts. He has never been known to say "By heck," or "b'gosh," or any of the other familiar farmer terms without which few actors of either the stage or screen would be completely lost.

The young lady entering the scene from the left is Leatrice Joy. She is supposed to be the farmer's daughter. Mr. Perry and Miss Joy are rehearsing while the other scene is being finished.

The lady knitting on the pink sweater is Pearl Lovci. The thoughtful looking man in the chair is Charles French. Mr. French is made up to represent a successful business man, and Miss Lovci will be his stenographer as soon as the property man gets the business office that he is working on arranged.

And a Non-Gum-Chewing Stenographer.

Miss Lovci, as well as Walter Perry, violates some of the most cherished traditions of the stage and screen. When playing a stenographer she does not chew gum, talk into the telephone out of the corner of her mouth, or stick a pencil in her hair.

The two men near the table are Jay Belasco and Fred Bond. The somewhat sun-wilted but still distinguished looking persons entering the stage with manager Hampton are the well known and justly celebrated team of booking agents, play and story brokers, and New York representatives, Willis and Inglis, otherwise known as Dick and Gus.

One more scene and our day will have been most profitably filled.

Glance over to the lemon orchard to the right, and never say again that actors do not earn their money. If Eddie Markham, who wrote the words to the popular song, "The Man with the Hoe," could have seen Jack Kerrigan in this scene he would undoubtedly have made the name of his ballad read, "The Man with the Plow."

Kerrigan as "The Man with the Plow."

MUTUAL TO DISTRIBUTE AFFILIATED

President Sheldon Closes Deal in Chicago with President Brink—Perret Picture First Release

A CONTRACT for shipping and physical service on pictures of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, through the exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation, is announced by Henry A. Brink, president of the Affiliated. The contract was closed in Chicago at the conclusion of a series of negotiations between the two concerns.

The first picture to be thus handled by the Affiliated is "Lafayette, We Come!" (Pershing, '17), a story of mystery and intrigue, flavored with the romance of love and war, produced by Leonce Perret, featuring E. K. Lincoln and Dolores Cassinelli, recently announced for release to the Affiliated units.

"We consider this picture an especially auspicious initial release for our project," observed Mr. Brink. "It combines a particular topical fitness for the motion picture market of today, with its important values strictly as drama."

James M. Sheldon, president of Mutual, discusses the move as one of special significance to the industry in this period of stress and conservation of dollars and man-power.

"This is, it appears to me, to be a most logical step for both sides of the deal," said Mr. Sheldon. "It has largely been the practice heretofore for each new venture in films to add its own physical system of branches with expensive equipment to the already oversupplied machinery of film distribution. Affiliated has saved itself and the motion picture industry the cost of a new system of exchanges, and it has availed itself of the physical services of a concern which has most thoroughly established itself with a high standard of physical service to the motion picture exhibitor."

The Affiliated-Mutual deal is also to be taken as of a special significance in that it is among the first instances of an important recognition of a co-operative booking plan concern by an old-line motion picture distributing corporation.

The officers of the Affiliated include Henry A. Brink, president; H. C. Cornelius, vice-president; William J. Clark, secretary-treasurer and general manager, all of Grand Rapids, Mich., where the home office is situated, and C. C. Pettijohn, general counsel, with offices in New York.

NEW RED CROSS FILM.

Another war zone picture is to be issued by the American Red Cross for use in theatres throughout the United States. Following the huge success enjoyed by its recent issue of "The Historic Fourth of July in Paris," William E. Waddell, Director of the Bureau of Pictures, announces the title of the new release to be "Soothing the Heart of Italy." The American Red Cross will distribute this film, like its former release, through General Film Company. It is a one-reel subject which is expected to appeal as strongly to audiences as the already famous "Fourth of July" film, but from a somewhat different angle. It is powerful in heart interest, with the spectacular subordinated to the human appeal. Scores of actual scenes of refugees in flight before onrushing Hun hordes are shown in the period when a studied German propaganda was eating into the heart of the emotional Italian people.

Chaplin Liberty Special Is Named "The Bond"

CHIEF among the activities of the fourth Liberty Loan Committee's campaign on the motion picture screens of the United States, in behalf of the forthcoming loan, will be a comedy produced by Charlie Chaplin, and scheduled for release on September 21.

The title given to the production is "The Bond." It is in the nature of a novelty picture, with the famous comedian in the same character that is responsible for the tremendous demand for his regular releases.

The picture is essentially in the nature of propaganda for the fourth Liberty Loan, and will be distributed by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. No rental charge will be made to exhibitors, inasmuch as the production has been made for and is donated to the United States Government by Charlie Chaplin.

To avoid any possible confusion between "The Bond" as a special Government picture, and the regular Chaplin releases the First National has been requested to ask all exhibitors to agree, before booking "The Bond," to advertise it for a propaganda picture, and not as a regular release. This precaution is chiefly to avoid disappoint to the thousands who will see it, and who otherwise might be under the impression that it was one of Chaplin's two-reel comedies.

The settings for "The Bond" are said to be novel and futuristic, and quite away from anything Chaplin has previously attempted in comedy portrayal.

Impressed by the propaganda value of the screen, and determined to utilize it to the utmost in their own efforts, the British and Canadian Governments have sent requests to Mr. Chaplin to make a special production for them. This request has been accepted by Mr. Chaplin, and he is starting work immediately on a successor to "The Bond" for these two allied powers.

Harry Brandt, in Uniform, Says an Au Revoir and Smiles

Patrons of the Carleton Theatre, Brooklyn, found the back page of their program occupied by a parting salute from Harry Brandt, who has long been manager of that house. He now is Acting Corporal Brandt, Company F, Fourth Replacement Battalion, Camp Gordon, Georgia. William Brandt, prominent in all exhibitor movements in the East, is owner of the Carleton, and his brother Harry left his "kind regards" on the back of the program in this fashion:

Au Revoir, But Not Good Bye!

When this week's copy of Reeland is placed in the hands of the Carlton Theatre patrons I will have answered the call of Uncle Sam and joined his forces in Camp Gordon preparatory to joining my brother in France, where his regiment is knocking the all-fired stuffing out of the Hun. Since assuming the management of the Carlton I have made hundreds of friends, and I take this method of thanking them and all the others whom I know by name for their kind patronage. It certainly has been a privilege and a pleasure to cater to such an audience, and their wonderful work during the Red Cross, Liberty Loan and War Saving Drives which placed the Carlton in the lead for a theatre of its capacity has made me exceedingly proud of them.

In my absence the same high class standard will be continued, another brother assuming the reins.

Thank you, good luck and Au Revoir!

HARRY BRANDT,
Camp Gordon, Georgia.

World Pictures Says Exhibitors Not Affected

THE one condition that is giving theatrical managers more concern to-day than anything else is the effect of the "18 to 45" draft. It should be cause for great uneasiness among those who produce for the legitimate theatres, but the motion picture exhibitor will find that he will come through the ordeal practically unscathed, say the officials of World Pictures.

The advantage of the motion picture theatre lies in the fact that fully 75 per cent. of these places of amusement are what might be termed neighborhood theatres, and, being so, it is not necessary for women to call upon the male members of their families to act as escorts. On the other hand, the legitimate theatres, located generally in a central section, draft their patronage from all parts of the city. No woman is keen to come and go at night without having the services of a male escort. The tremendous inroads made on those of military age by the new ruling makes it difficult for our women to call on men either to pay for the tickets or to go along with them. The picture house, with its cheaper price of admission, makes slight demands on one's purse, and this being true the exhibitor will see but little effect of the 18 to 45 ruling.

When the first draft came the croakers saw all sorts of dire things happening to the screen drama. These things did not come to pass for the very reasons that apply to the new condition of affairs created by the 13,000,000 army requisitioned by Uncle Sam for the world war. Business as usual will be the slogan of the exhibitor, and the public will continue to support the motion picture industry because it is an essential and necessary medium for keeping our spirits at a high degree of optimism. Motion picture amusement is utilized, unconsciously perhaps, to create a mental condition that makes for a better mental balance. It produces a suggestive therapeutic that effects cures oftimes as salient as that offered by medicine.

Now For More Sport.

In Vers Libre (Very Free Indeed).

By Thomas Bedding

What's this I see? Lasky taking up your space
To tell how the Power folk went out to race
Play ball, and generally have a high old time of it?
Blessed if I've got moved to make a rhyme of it

Still (by the way) you really must allow the stricture,
Our dear old World is devoted to the Picture—
Or is supposed to be: so forgive me if I sigh to see
Of us familiar sport make a satiety

[Oh, yes, I know the Mayor is an eccentric soldier,
But I'll interrupt as I go on, dear RAMBLER.]
Anyhow, this is what I wanted to deserve a bit
The idea's good, and of imitation pen deserve a bit

Why not have an outing of the entire trade?
Wouldn't it be fine to have 'em all arrayed—
Magnates and stars, press agents and directors?
The public would be slightly interested inspectors

[That's feeble rhyming — RAMBLER.]
Now, see here,
If you think you can do better, my old dear,
Just try it, and not be dismissive. I
Guess I know fairly well how to versify?

[Maybe'—RAMBLER.] Well, to proceed,
Let's organize an outing and a feed
Uncloose the hunch in some big rural dump
And get 'em to show us how they run and jump

Bill Hart and Doug, Charley, Fatty,
Attended by their respective literati,
Mary, Marguerite, Norma, Elsie, Anita,
Clara, Dorothy, and even Geraldine (Incognita)

Then the magnates: Adolph, Carl and Sam
Bill Fox, Bill Brady, Lasky and Hi-ram!
My! Think of the Awe Inspiring Fun of it
If we could lure 'em on to make a run of it?

Then, Ince and Dave and Mack—this triangularity
In a blindfold scramble. Wouldn't that provoke hilarity?
My word! The possibilities of this idea are great
Boys! Think it over, and let's see if we can't make something out of it (and help win the war) at an early date before it's too late and we still luxuriate in the indescribable felicity of possessing great stars, great directors, great press agents, and the movie magnate.

"You'd better make a will."

And this was the second pulled gentlemen's reply.

How the Rudolphs Vs. Reichenbachs Ran Up Their Big Score in the War.

(Reported by William H. Rudolph.)

IT is seldom, if ever, that I can find fault with the news contained in the columns of your wonderful Moving Picture World, and I have been a subscriber to same for the past forty-five years. Its editorial opinions, its policies, its general make-up has always appealed to me, and, when I think of the many "good things" I have "done" in my life, I lay it entirely to the ideas I have assimilated by its constant perusal. But what was my astonishment, not to say chagrin, to see with my own eyes not only an article that is directly contrary to the policy of the press throughout the country, but contrary to the policy of any good, true, upright, honest, red-blooded American.

Now, far be it from me—a publicity "expert"—or any of my brotherhood to break into print. That in itself is a known fact not only by you, an editor, but by the public in general. No publicity man (or press agent) would think, dream, or contemplate wasting his talents on himself—nay' neigh'—he is like the sturdy, faithful, hardy horse hitched to the dray; dragging along his load and "unloading" it on the public. He, with the usual becoming press agent's modesty, sinks his own personality into sweet oblivion while training his searchlight of publicity through the public prints direct upon the 'star.

But I must break this inviolate rule and for once protest under my own name.

As you well know the press agents of the country have done a great deal toward helping along the war by selling Liberty Bonds. Look at Benny Ziedman, Fairbanks' press agent; Mary Pickford's press agent, Wm. Hart's press agent, Charlie Chaplin's press agent' Just think of the vast number of bonds sold by these press agents during the last selling campaign (and I am not mentioning the recruiting and other stunts pulled off by Clara Kimball Young, because it would not be polite or ethical of me to put her name in this article, so I'll say nothing about her), think of the good work of Lieut. Rothapfel, in fact by the entire motion picture industry, to help along the cause of the war, and then to allow this article I am going to mention to appear in your columns—you, the leading publication in the moving picture industry'

I refer to the article which says "there are seventeen Reichenbachs" in the army.]

Now, Mr. Editor, we have been admonished to give absolutely no information that would give "comfort to our enemies" and to refrain from "talking' or "publishing' any "facts" about what we are doing or about to do in this country. Yet here it is "tipped off" in cold type that there are "17 Reichenbachs" in the service—and by now I suppose the Kaiser knows it! No wonder the entire German Army is on the run, yet if this information had been kept under cover we might have captured the entire bunch. As it is we will have to wear out another seventeen billion dollars worth of shoe-leather just on account of this grievous error.

I feel like calling the attention of this "leak" in the Reichenbach lines to old General Reichenbach himself, who does not believe in publicity—or the unnecessary waste of ink during war times.

Why, there has been one hundred per cent. of the Rudolphs in service since the war started, but did I say anything? Not so as you could notice it.

Both of my sons are in the service (you will notice that I don't stipulate any specified number). One left t'other day on his eighth trip to France and the other is right at the front petting one of the big French seventy-fives. And, as for the balance of the Rudolph family to make up the one hundred per cent., I, myself, have never hesitated from the very beginning of the war to give my advice freely and fully to all—just how President Wilson, Pershing, Daniels, Baker and the others should conduct the same.

Fanning the "Flaming Front."

PHILIP FOX, of the Dallas Times-Herald, who represents the World down that way, adopted a peculiar method in sending his report of the grand opening Little Italy put across for the First National's stirring war feature. He sent the following story to Herschel Stuart, of the Hippodrome. It burned Mr. Stuart's fingers until he got it over to Douglas Hawley, representing the First National in Dallas, and Mr. Hawley thoughtfully slipped it along to RAMBLES, where it reposes, with credit and acclaim, as follows:

Hulsey's Hippodrome, Dallas, was delicately decorated with hanging festoons of macaroni—Italy's national flower—when members of the Dallas Italian colony first viewed "Italy's Framing Flunt." A patriotic atmosphere of garlic pervaded the entire playhouse, and as Garabaldi's Battle Hymn was thundered on the organ many a swarthy Sicilian bootblack blew his nose on his bandana in profound emotion.

Signor Herschello Stuartado addressed the assembled Italians in their native tongue, receiving hearty "bravas."

"Benevuto cellini shinola tribuna Italiana charlie pappa. Fra Diabolo bologna in tres partes divisa est. Sursum corda," he declared.

The noted impresario was escorted from the stage by members of the organ grinders union, Local No. 534—who at request of the management had checked their monks in the lobby. A clever feature introduced was the distribution of programs in the form of Black Hand letters each bearing the skull and cross bones of La Mana Nera, and, thus, making the audience feel perfectly at home.

Ushers wore the conventional evening dress of the Texas and Pacific track gangs—blue overalls, pick and shovel, and gay colored bandanas. They welcomed the patrons with specially studied gestures. Thrilling scenes of the great battle film which showed the Italian fighters scrambling through the spahgetti entanglements and lustily bayonetting the Huns brought the audience cheering to its feet.

The whole occasion was a well deserved success.

Being thus inclined the Popular Science Monthly has figured on the cost per letter of your business correspondence. Figure for yourself what mimeographing for publicity costs after you have read the following scientific expression:

Taking into consideration the cost of stationery and stamps, the salary of the stenographer, cost of all accessories to the typewriter, all overhead charges, and last, but not least, cost of time of the man who dictates the letters, it works out at 40 cents per letter, and that is an absolute minimum!

Here's a Letter from "Over There."

Stanley Bayer, who kicked the old mimeograph into the corner of World Pictures educational department and went to join the colors, reached France within six weeks of the time he shook hands with Lee Kugel and the rest of "the bunch." Through the courtesy of Mr. Kugle we are allowed to print this much of Mr. Bayer's first letter home:

"The past month has seen me make Argosy through the States, across the ocean, and partly through France with the rest of Young America.

"The lamp of Aladdin is puny in powers compared to the capacity of Uncle Sam to transport one about. We are now comfortably settled at a part not so very distant from the front, yet with all the appliances of our home camps. The manner in which we are doing things here would seem to indicate almost permanency. The huge warehouses, miles of railroads, scores of barracks—well, the sight doth boggle the eyes! Everyone has high hopes these days that the affair will come to a speedy and satisfactory conclusion.

"Then there is the efficiency of the French which is making its power felt in curbing our impetuousness. Imagine the Frenchman, who is a cynic in some ways, looks with smiling condescension upon our will and aggressiveness. He's had four years of it.

"Still France is marvelously unaffected by the war. It is accepted as a fact. The women and children and older generation of men pursue their tasks with usual accustomness, and life travels with few ripples. At the railroad stations it is familiar to see a number of men returning to their commands in gaily decorated cars and a lusty celebration accompanying their departure.

"Everything back home seems such a far cry from this present life that it appears to have dissolved in the mist of Time. Here you are so preoccupied with little details that any memories are fast eliminated. But that's treading on the tragic muse, and before I descend to that, I'll close."

How Publicists Break Into Print.

Dropping into one of Holyoke's leading cinemagogues I happened across a copy of the M. P. World, and, in perusing it, discovered my name in with a lot of other bandits connected with the industry that used to be in its infancy.

I could pull a lot of this "I knew you when" stuff, but I don't believe in hurting a guy's rep when he's in there trying all the time.

But look here, Mr. RAMBLER, when you say I am press agent for a Holyoke Paper Factory, I want to tell you something. I ain't press agent for no single paper factory, but for twenty-nine of them, and I guess that beats writing press notices like I know a certain guy used to.

EXHIBITORS COMPLAIN OF FREE SHOWS

Washington City Exchangemen Take Action Designed to Mitigate Injury to Business

THE question of donating films to organizations in the national capital for various purposes was brought to the attention of the Washington exchangemen at a meeting of the Exchange Managers' Association following the receipt of complaints from various exhibitors that the shows given in this way are seriously affecting their box office receipts. The demand for free shows is coming also from Baltimore. Here the idea is to furnish without charge amusement for the so-called war workers—men and women who come to Washington and secure lucrative positions under the Government.

The matter is to be further considered at the next meeting but it was thought some sort of uniform application blank should be made up and the people seeking films could state thereon the number and class of films desired, number of exhibitions to be given, for what purpose and under what conditions. These forms would then be sent by mail to the secretary for action by a special committee. This is in line with a plan put into effect by the Retail Merchants' Association of Washington to curb the demands made upon storekeepers for donations for doubtful charities.

Attention was called to the fact that while the authorities are very strict in the enforcement of fire regulations with respect to theatres and exchanges various organizations were permitted to hold exhibitions without regard to the regulations. It was stated that often the projection machines were used without the proper safeguard of a portable metal booth.

The question of incorporating the organization was brought up and the matter was laid before the members by Attorney C. Chester Caywood. Affiliation with the Washington Chamber of Commerce was urged by Thomas Grant, secretary of the latter.

Many Complaints Against Free Service.

There seems to be a great deal of complaint against the free service rendered by the local exchanges to community centers and other organizations operating motion picture entertainments for the benefit of the people of the District of Columbia. At the Sylvan Theatre, for instance, it is pointed out several thousand persons are entertained without expense to them several nights each week with motion picture exhibitions. The Sylvan Theatre is at the base of the Washington Monument, and it is said that as many as 7,500 persons have congregated there at one time. This takes business away from theatres in all sections of the city.

The high schools are also being used to entertain without charge, and one of these has a stadium seating 6,500.

It has been the practice to donate the use of the films, although it is understood the persons in charge of the Sylvan Theatre pay a slight rental charge. However, where payment is made it is far below the value of the production secured. In no case are old films acceptable, the request being for films that have not been shown all over the circuit. This is declared to be eminently unfair to the men who are legitimately engaged in the motion picture business and who are compelled to pay all kinds of taxes for the support of the very people who get the benefit of the free shows—the Government employes, who average in salary something better than $100 per month.

The exchanges have been urged to take necessary steps toward cutting down this abuse. The shows are not for charity, nor for persons who cannot afford to pay the small admissions to the established theatres and airdomes, and there is no excuse for their existence on their present basis. As the result of the continued complaints the exchange managers have under consideration a new plan, limiting the number of films to be so donated.

WOMAN USHERS SATISFACTORY.

The management of the Rialto Theatre, San Francisco, has installed woman ushers throughout the house, including the director, and finds that these give entire satisfaction. Natty uniforms have been designed for the girls along the military lines now so popular, and the accompanying illustration shows how effective these are, as well as demonstrating the fact that Messrs. Sheehan and Lurie are also good judges of beauty. Courtesy is one of the strong points of the policy of this house, and the usher is shown guiding a patron through a side exit. Lightless nights have no terrors for San Franciscans when such attentions as these are showered upon them.

ZELLNER WROTE "FRIEND HUSBAND."

Because of the unusual success attending Madge Kennedy's "Friend Husband," Goldwyn is in receipt of many inquiries as to its authorship, and hastens to correct an erroneous impression regarding the writer of the play. In some quarters the idea prevails that "Friend Husband" is the work of J. Clarkson Miller, while as a matter of fact the author is Lois Zellner, who also contributed "Money Mad" to Mae Marsh's series of unusual photoplays. Miss Zellner, well-known as a scenario writer, wrote "Friend Husband" expressly for Madge Kennedy and to her credit should be given for the unique idea of it. Mr. Miller, the standby of Goldwyn's continuity writers, executed the adaptation and praises Miss Zellner's carefully detailed synopsis.

Goddess of Liberty Theme for Farrar's Loan Special

GERALDINE FARRAR has completed, at the Goldwyn studio in Fort Lee, a Liberty Loan picture, which has been sent to Washington by special messenger. It is called "The Bonds That Tie."

This task over the nature of the contribution is made public for the first time. Both Geraldine Farrar and her director, Reginald Barker, are elated over the finished product. Mr. Barker is confident the friends of the international celebrity will delight in seeing her in a new guise and that the public will respond to her appeal. Harry Durant wrote the story from which the picture was made.

She appears as the Goddess of Liberty. The setting is the steps of a classical temple standing in the shadow of a tree. On one side of the entrance is a sailor (Tom Santschi) and opposite stands a soldier in the person of Milton Sills. The curtains part and reveal Geraldine Farrar as Liberty. She descends to the level of the men in uniform and addresses them in turn.

"You have shown your love for your country. Now your country must show its love for you," says the Goddess of Liberty.

Then she speaks to the public, telling them how many men have already been sent and how many more must be sent with their help. She follows this with a direct appeal to the audience on behalf of the fourth Liberty Loan, concluding with:

"These Liberty Bonds are bonds of love. They bind those who cannot go to those who go to fight—and die if need be. Don't you love them enough to buy a bond? Then buy and buy and buy Liberty Bonds!"

The picture closes with the player's arms outstretched and the stars in her Liberty cap catching the glints of myriad lights. She makes an inspiring figure.

As with Goldwyn's all-star Liberty Loan production, every one associated with Geraldine Farrar donated his services, from Hugo Ballin, who devised the beautiful setting, to the several electricians, who operated the special lights.

Ekre Takes Larger Exchange.

For some time past manager of the Portland (Ore.) branch of General Film Company, George J. Ekre has just been transferred to a larger Pacific Coast office by the company, that at Los Angeles. Mr. Ekre relieves Western District Manager W. S. Rand, who had been acting as local manager pending the appointment of someone to handle the office. Mr. Rand, after the induction of Mr. Ekre is completed, probably will return to his headquarters at Denver.

Dallas Great Distributor of Pictures for Army Men

DALLAS film men believe their city is the greatest distribution point for army motion pictures in the United States. They do not even bar New York and other eastern centers in the classification.

Seven great cantonments, besides scores of flying fields, training camps and military posts, scattered from northern Oklahoma to the Rio Grande border line, are supplied their films by Dallas branch houses at absolute cost. Some 300,000 soldiers depend on Dallas film exchanges for the war-time entertainment which is so dear to their hearts.

Films from Dallas are regularly supplied the Liberty theatres at the cantonments at Camp Logan, Houston; Camp Bowie, Fort Worth; Camp Pike, Little Rock, Ark.; Camp Doniphan, Fort Sill, Okla.; Camp McArthur, Waco; Camp Travis, San Antonio, and Camp Cody, Deming, N. M. The very best features on the market are sent from Dallas for the entertainment of the troops at the Liberty theatres, and the local film exchanges have all agreed to give Uncle Sam's boys the rock-bottom prices and not make a penny on the business.

Literally scores of smaller encampments, flying fields, etc., such as Taliferro, Fort Worth; Call Field, Wichita Falls; Camp Stanley, Leon Springs; Aviation Repair Depot, Love Field, and Camp Dick, at Dallas; Kelly Field, San Antonio, and many other army posts in Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma and New Mexico, call for hundreds of films weekly from Dallas exchanges through the Motion Picture Community Service, with headquarters at San Antonio.

This army business amounts to thousands of dollars on the books of all Dallas exchanges, and the film men take the extra trouble gladly.

Routing for army service has been brought down to a science. The Community Camp Service calls for films to be on the road for about sixty days at a stretch. Along the Rio Grande border, for instance, a continuous stream of films is kept moving along the line of border posts, many of which are in out of the way places, far from the railroad on the Mexican line. A film leaves Dallas brand new and comes back two months later worn to ribbons.

The soldiers appreciate the service given through Dallas branches, and many letters of thanks and commendation have been received from officers and men.

BRITANNIA IN LEHRMAN COMEDY.

One of the features of a recent Fox-Lehrman Sunshine Comedy, made in Hollywood under the direction of Henry Lehrman, is the presence in the picture of the famous British tank Britannia, which was among the first of the land monsters that terrified the Germans in the battle of the Somme in 1916.

The comedy, it is understood, takes several telling smashes at disloyal Americans and pro-Germans in this country. Canadian officers who were in Los Angeles to attend a war exposition heard of the comedy and were so enthusiastic over the idea that they lent the Britannia to use in the picture. The tank was handled in the play by the original crew that piloted it over the front in France.

Naomi Childers, Who Will Play With Ethel Barrymore in Metro Screen Version of "Lady Frederick."

Naomi Childers in Metro Play

NAOMI CHILDERS will have an attractive role in Ethel Barrymore's Metro offering, "Lady Frederick." The picturization of this Maugham drama was made by June Mathis and Katharine Kavanaugh, and the stage production itself was a starring vehicle for Miss Barrymore on Broadway a few seasons ago. Miss Childers will play Lady Kitty Beresford.

This well-known actress has proceeded from the spoken drama to the screen and back again, and this, her first appearance in a Metro offering, is her first screen work in over a year. Five years ago Miss Childers played for Kalem. Then came a two years' contract with Vitagraph, followed by starring ventures in two productions for the U. S. Amusement Company. Her most recent footlight appearance was with H. B. Warner in "Among Those Present" when it was presented at the Blackstone Theatre in Chicago last spring.

Naomi Childers was born in St. Louis. Her first stage appearance was under the management of Henry W. Savage and H. H. Frazee.

KENYON JOINS METRO.

A. G. Kenyon is a recent addition to the scenario staff at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood. George D. Baker, manager of production, engaged Kenyon after the latter had made an adaptation of "Faith," a short story by Richard Washburn Child, soon to be used as a starring vehicle by Bert Lytell. Kenyon formally began work when he started writing the screen version of a story for Lytell's use.

The new Metro scenario writer is a brother of Charles Kenyon, author of "Kindling" and part author of "The Claim," which was picturized for Metro with Edith Storey as the star. He entered the scenario game a year ago last April with Universal under the supervision of Colonel Jasper Ewing Brady, now with Metro in New York. After eight months with Universal Kenyon went with Fox, writing original stories and continuities. He left Fox three weeks prior to joining Metro.

General Film Company Is Regrouping Its Exchanges

GENERAL FILM has just made several important appointments in its sales organization, and at the same time instituted a districting or grouping of its exchanges throughout the country. Four supervising exchange executives or district managers have been appointed, in accordance with this movement. Working under sales manager W. F. Rodgers, these district managers are to coordinate and facilitate the film merchandizing activities of the company.

The district managers most recently appointed are, H. L. Orear for the central district, with headquarters at Cincinnati, and H. E. Elder for the Atlantic division, with headquarters at Philadelphia. Mr. Orear's jurisdiction includes the exchanges at Cincinnati, Cleveland, Detroit and Indianapolis. Mr. Elder will supervise the Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Wilkes-Barre and Pittsburgh exchanges.

Appointments made shortly before these were of T. F. McTyer for the southern district, headquarters Atlanta, involving the Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas exchanges, and of W. S. Rand for the western district, headquarters Los Angeles, with the Denver, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle and Portland exchanges included.

An expansion and strengthening of its organization had been planned by General Film Company for some time. In fact the announcements now made have logically followed a gradual realignment of the system in all the local branches. The movement has been going on for some months.

Mr. Orear, Central District Manager, is a General Film veteran, having been with the company for the last seven years and for the greater part of this time at Kansas City and Cincinnati. The latter branch is now to be conducted by George Davis, promoted from the sales staff of the exchange.

Equally well known to friends of General Film is Mr. Elder. He was manager at St. Louis for a long time and recently took charge of the Washington office. He is succeeded there by J. A. Flax, who has been assistant manager for some time and who is one of the oldest employes with General Film.

In the various changes the General Film policy of making promotions in the organization wherever conditions encourage them has been followed.

Another recent move is the transfer of George J. Ekre from the management of the Portland exchange to a larger field as manager of the Los Angeles office.

METRO EMPLOYES GIVE FLAG.

Metro employes, always foremost in patriotic measures, recently presented a handsome silk unit flag to 101 Red Cross nurses just prior to the embarkation of these young women for their duties overseas. Miss Winifred Lynch, formerly a Metro player, was responsible for Metro's interest in this particular unit, which was, to be exact, the United States Government Emergency Unit, Base Hospital 67, of which Miss Lynch is now an enthusiastic member. David M. Thompson took up the collection.

WAR REWIEW GOES INTO VAUDEVILLE

Pathe's Vice-President Announces That Single Reel Film Has Been Placed in 3,000 Theatres

PAUL BRUNET, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces that his organization, through F. C. Quimby, sales manager, has completed the largest contract for a one-reel film in the history of the motion picture industry. This was accomplished when negotiations finally were closed with J. J. Murdock, head of the United Booking Offices, for placing the Official War Review in 3,000 vaudeville houses in the United States. It is now almost a million-dollar booking.

This country-wide field of exhibition and exploitation includes alike the modern palaces of vaudeville in the great cities and the modest houses in the small towns. The big circuits which have called into service all of their publicity and exploitation facilities are the U. B. O., Orpheum Circuit, Western Marcus Loew Circuit, William Fox Circuit, B. S. Moss Circuit, Ackerman & Harris, San Francisco; Pantages & Hoolkins, Chicago; Interstate Circuit and the Gus Sun Circuit.

At this time the steadily increasing returns jump by two or three thousand on each issue. The Pathe organization, through a carefully mapped out and minutely operated campaign, is confident that it will achieve a 100 per cent national distribution, with the record of millions at the end of the year. As the figures stand now, only 3,000 additional weekly would bring the annual return up to a round million. When it is remembered that the first issue was released on July 1, only six weeks, the booking strength of "Official War Review" becomes at once apparent.

"This is the most gratifying demonstration of big business and big patriotism," said Mr. Brunet. "In placing this splendid war feature we have met with the heartiest co-operation, which has been productive of almost immediate results. It demonstrates in one striking and unparalleled instance how both the motion picture industry and the amusement world are working together to give all possible aid to the Government in prosecuting the world war.

"The intention of Pathe Exchange, Inc., is to have the 'Official War Review' shown in every motion picture house in the country and in other places of a semi-public nature where motion pictures are utilized. This proposition is as unique as it is big, for it is a vital, educational propaganda and a tremendous commercial and industrial proposition."

With the vaudeville houses alone Sales Manager Quimby is confident that within a very short time now the returns will be $50,000 a week, or an average of $2,600,000 a year.

The "Official War Review," Mr. Brunet promises, will be the most widely advertised of all one-reel features. One sheets will be put up in all buildings under the control of the Government—55,000 post offices, 50,000 railroad stations, telegraph offices, express offices, and it is apparent from the present careful canvass made of the cities the announcements will be in every municipal building.

Herbert, Metro Player, Has Been Long on Stage

H. E. HERBERT, who has been engaged to play opposite Ethel Barrymore in "Lady Frederick," her next Metro production, comes from a purely theatrical lineage. His father, Neil Herbert, was known throughout England for he was in the minstrelsy fifty-six years.

H. E., quite naturally, early in life, followed in his famous father's footsteps. Until the age of eight he was a member of a minstrel stock company; then he joined a minstrel band. His next change was to the Haverly's Minstrels, where he became a choir boy. For some time a longing had been growing to quit the minstrelsy and become a Shakespearean actor, and when the opportunity presented itself he joined a company in the north of England. Later he was called to London to play Paul in Dion Boucicault's "The Octoroon."

In 1913 Herbert came to this country with Billie Burke in "Mind the Paint Girl," and the next season appeared opposite Blanche Bates in "The Witness for the Defense." In 1917 he played the juvenile lead with William Faversham in "The Hawk," and in the fall of that year with Josephine Victor in Eugene Walter's "Just a Woman." The following year he had the lead in Barrie's "The New Word."

His time between seasons has been spent in pictures—with Thanhouser, with Alice Brady, and with Elsie Ferguson in "A Doll's House."

Mr. Herbert was born in Dublin, Ireland, in 1882. He is six feet tall, has blue eyes and light hair and weighs 165 pounds.

JACK COHN MAKES FLAG FILM.

Jack Cohn, of the Universal, has started work on the production of a Liberty Loan film especially designed for the flag celebration that will be conducted during the Fourth Loan drive. The subject will depict the soldiers of all nations in the Allied cause in a spectacle advertising the various flags they are fighting for.

Arrangements are being made in co-operation with the Division of Associated Flags of the Loan Committee. The film will be released on the Screen Magazine program.

In addition to this subject the three news pictorial divisions of Universal will make special efforts to produce timely news and propaganda films in behalf of the Loan drive.

New Keeney Studios To Be Brought Up to the Minute

THE new studios purchased by Frank A. Keeney at 308-12 East Forty-eighth street are being fitted up with every modern convenience, and the Keeney forces will resume production there in a very few days. It is probable the first picture to be made will star Catherine Calvert, who already has been featured in four Keeney productions.

Among those recently engaged by Mr. Keeney is Dudley Ayres, well known as a leading man in stock and also in other dramatic work. His maiden effort on the screen was in "The Uphill Path." Those who have seen him in this production predict for him a brilliant future before the camera. He has signed a two-year contract with Mr. Keeney.

In resuming activities after a brief summer lull Mr. Keeney says he will continue to produce only high-class pictures, artistic and complete in every detail. He intends to surround his stars with strong casts and to put them out in scenarios by leading authors. He believes in pictures which tell human interest stories, with enough thrills to give them pep and also with plenty of humor of the right sort.

"In times like this, when the public mind is on the anxious seat, we are especially in need of entertainment which, possessing the saving grace of humor, will shake us out of the doldrums," says Mr. Keeney. "A good laugh is wholesome medicine at any time, but especially at a time when the mind is apt to be a prey of suspense and sadness."

TYPHOOON FAN COMPANY MOVES.

So rapidly has the Typhoon Fan Company grown that it has found it necessary to move its old quarters at 1544 Broadway to 281 Lexington Avenue. Here the company is occupying one of the finest buildings in that section, within easy reach of the theatrical district as well as the transportation and terminal facilities of the city. The Typhoon Fan Company was at the Broadway address for ten years, and has grown from a one-man concern to a business employing a half hundred men and women. With the Lexington Avenue force and its branch office in New Orleans, employing a force of twenty, it is better equipped than ever to cool the United States.

Walter Thompson Advertising Agency, has accepted a position in the advertising department of the World Film Corporation. Miss Ogden has charge of ad layouts and other commercial art work for the World.

GOLDWYN SALESMEN OUT FOR RECORDS

Fay of Cincinnati, Bloom of St. Louis and Russell of Kansas City Make Large Claims

SALESMEN of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation throughout the country are engaged in a spirited free-for-all contest to establish speed records in closing contracts under the company's new Star Series booking arrangement.

Charles R. Fay, a salesman in the Cincinnati exchange, tossed his hat into the ring several weeks ago by announcing that he had closed a Star Series contract and obtained a deposit check in just three minutes. The account of this incident was published in the form of a challenge in the Goldwyn Gold-Winner, the weekly house organ of the company. Mr. Fay appointed himself the king of the speed merchants and defied all other Goldwyn salesmen to dethrone him.

In the September 14 issue of the Gold-Winner, large space is devoted to answers to Mr. Fay's challenge and numerous "come-backs" are printed, among which are two from salesmen in the St. Louis and Kansas City offices. Salesmen Joe Bloom of St. Louis declares he is the rightful speed monarch and recounts several of his recent experiences in closing contracts to prove his claim. Salesman W. C. Russell of the Kansas City exchange pokes fun at the challenge of his brother salesmen. Russell records that while motoring through a town of 500 population he ran across a motion pictures theatre, promptly drove to the entrance, tooted his horn, induced the exhibitor to take a ride around the block with him and, during the brief course of the spin, obtained a contract for Goldwyn's entire output of Star Series productions.

Russell emphasizes the fact that he was not even obliged to leave his steering wheel and that the contract was obtained and deposit check written in the few minutes it required to drive one of Henry Ford's performers around the village block. This is "going some," according to the Goldwyn salesman, and beat's Fay's record by—well, he failed to carry a split-second watch, so he cannot state the exact number of seconds, but he does know that he closed the deal in less than three minutes.

Salesman Bloom puts in his claims for the honors on the common law of averages. Percentage, too, is taken into consideration and Bloom feels sure that he is the real, honest-to-goodness Goldwyn hurry-up man. Bloom's claims for recognition are supported by the following records: Visited an exhibitor in a town in Missouri and within 27 minutes booked the exhibitor for Goldwyn's entire 1917 output of pictures, monopolizing his screen for thirteen weeks of Goldwyn productions exclusively.

En route to another town, Bloom saw a motion picture theatre in the course of construction, so he hopped off the train at the nearest station, drove back in an automobile, a distance of four miles, and booked the new theatre for twenty-seven Goldwyn pictures. In addition, Bloom named the theatre for the exhibitor, calling it the New Liberty. The contract and deposit check were received and Bloom was out on the next train within the brief period of twenty minutes.

Bloom refuses to stop with these records; he goes Fay one better, and records another lightning experience. During a visit in a Kentucky town, Bloom booked one of Kentucky's leading exhibitors for Goldwyn's entire 1917 output and supplemented this solid booking with contracts for "Smiling Bill" Parsons' Capital Comedies, released through Goldwyn, and for Goldwyn's entire series of specials. Bloom received these contracts between trains. At the time he got them, train service was able to sit up and take nourishment, and "between trains" meant minutes, and not hours.

Other members of Goldwyn's selling organization have donned the war togs, and if the battle-royal continues in its present strenuous fashion, Goldwyn may have to call in a referee.

NAME RECEIVER FOR WASHINGTON FIRM

Officials of Northwestern Producing Company Say Action Will Place Concern on Solid Footing

F. K. McBROOM was appointed receiver ior the Washington Motion Picture Corporation, with studios at Minnehaha Park, when E. W. Cole appeared before Judge Huneke August 27 and declared the company insolvent.

The receivership follows rumors that plans were on foot by which the present officials were to be removed and the control of the company was to pass to new management. The trustees of the company decided to discharge all employes

Mr. Cole petitioned for a receiver, declaring he held a claim for $100 assigned by Zent & Powell. This firm acted as attorneys for the company in the case of George N. Barns vs. the Washington Motion Picture Corporation

Attorney Zent, who represented the motion picture company, appeared in court with an affidavit in which he waived objection to the appointment of a receiver. Mr. McBroom was named as receiver to take full charge of the company affairs and assets. He filed a $10,000 bond at the request of litigants. Attorneys of the firm of Burcham & Blair, who represented Mr. Cole, presented the petition for a receiver.

Officials of the company estimated that stock to the amount of about $165,000 had been sold. Stock was sold widely over the Inland Empire. The first stock was underwritten here by Phil Harding. Commissions of 10 to 20 per cent were paid according to reports.

Mr. Zent estimated that the film which already has been printed would bring the company about $75,000. He said that the photography was excellent and that the film was ready for cutting and editing. As many copies of the film will be made as the demands require. The work can be done without delay, notwithstanding the receivership.

W. W. Zent, vice president of the company, indicated the following statement in order to assure the stockholders that the action was an effort to care for their interests.

"I hope the creditors and stockholders will all be calm and withhold judgment until a full report can be made. Our assets, if properly handled are amply sufficient to pay all our obligations and leave a nice fund, with our studio and equipment intact and paid for, for future operation.

"We shall make a complete investigation and advise all those interested at the earliest possible date. By reason of the causes which produced this unfortunate condition we have found it necessary in the interests of our future success to dispose of the services of all our present staff of employes.

"We have not attempted to saddle the responsibility onto any one individual, but the board of trustees, after a mature deliberation, to-day resolved that the entire house should be cleaned, hence we have called for the resignation of all officers, and if that is not forthcoming all will be summarily dismissed, thus leaving the board as now or hereafter constituted a free hand in the reconstruction work which is necessary and which, we believe, will result in wiping out all obligations and establishing the company on a solid, substantial business basis, with a reasonable, yet adequate expense account."

The corporation elected Allen Meisenheimer president and W. W. Zent vice president after the company was organized. Harold Hooker was made secretary. C. J. Ward was general manager and Larry Trimble director of production.

Only one picture has been produced and may be the most valuable asset of the company. The cost of this picture to date is said to be $32,000.

Tyrone Power, the first actor brought to the city, was dropped from the pay roll about two months ago, when the first trouble occurred at the studio. The company secured a war promise with Power, who held a contract for his services, which included stock in the company.

Things are known to have been in a turmoil at the plant for weeks. The only picture produced, which is now ready for cutting, was made under the handicap of much bitterness.

The editing and cutting of the film recently finished will be completed within two weeks and the picture will be sold, according to President Meisenheimer.

"The picture is an excellent one and will be ready to market within three weeks," states Mr. Meisenheimer. "The board has decided to ask an independent cutter of practical experience to do the work with the co-operation of Larry Trimble and Philip Rosen who assisted in its production."

Francis McDonald Triangler

IN 1891 Francis McDonald arrived in Bowling Green. Since then very few things have bothered McDonald. His appearance in his latest picture, "Over There America," which was characterized by remarkably clever work, calls to mind some interesting facts about this Triangle favorite.

Francis McDonald

Ten years ago he started his stage career in a Cincinnati stock company. After four years he entered the pictures, anxious to enjoy the outdoor life which the movies afforded and also to escape the drudgery of stock. He played Checkers in "Checkers" on the stage; also the juvenile lead in "Black Orchids," supporting Cleo Madison, and appeared with Orrin Johnson in "The Price of Power." In the "U" Serial, "The Voice On the Wire," he portrayed Red Warren. He also supported Alma Rubens in "I Love You," and played the juvenile lead in "Real Folks."

Measuring up or down Francis McDonald is sixty-seven inches in height and can easily prove that he weighs 155 pounds. None of his ancestors were actors as far as he knows.

In the past year he has appeared in Triangle plays as a Frenchman, Italian, Irishman and French-Canadian. "The language of gesture which is so graceful and so expressive with Italians, Spaniards and Frenchmen coveys as much as the spoken word. Only one who has lived with and studied and has been a part of these people can interpret their character truthfully," says Mr. McDonald.

Apfel Gets "The Oakdale Affair."

When Oscar Apfel contracted with World Pictures to give his services as a director it was distinctly understood that any time he obtained the rights to "The Oakdale Affair," Edgar Rice Burrough's novel, he would be free to make a picture of it. It seemed that Mr. Apfel had tried for years to obtain the motion picture rights to this story without success. For quite some time, without Mr. Apfel's knowledge, the World has been negotiating for this story, and at last succeeded in obtaining permission to make a feature of it. When contracts were signed for this novel Mr. Apfel was informed that the deal had been consummated. He then spoke to the World officials of the understanding in reference to "The Oakdale Affair" —that he was to have carte blanche in the matter of its production both as regards the casting and the manner of its scenarization. Mr. Apfel's ambition is that with this production he will be able to stamp himself as one of the foremost directors connected with the motion picture industry of America. It will be put in work at World studio, Fort Lee, within the next few weeks, and will be released in the Spring.

Elizabeth Has a Large Memory.

The stars and actors employed by World Pictures are watching with no little interest the production of "Phoebe Pretends," a new play by Eleanor Gates, the author of "The Poor Little Rich Girl." This grows out of the connection with it of Elizabeth Kennedy, who plays the title role, and who for some time has been employed by World Pictures, more lately in "The Road To France," with Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley, in which she played the role of the little O'Leary girl. Little Miss Kennedy is ten years old, and in "Phoebe Pretends" is called upon to memorize a part of eighty pages. This, in the parlance of the profession, has the length of a star role.

The premiere of "Phoebe Pretends" took place in Philadelphia at the Broad Street Theatre on Labor Day, and after two weeks comes to New York for a season's run on Broadway.

FOREIGN FILMS IN THE AMERICAN MARKET

John H. Taylor, London Inter-Ocean Head, Speaks on U. S. Film Conditions As He Finds Them.

PREPARING to depart for London, after a vacation of some weeks spent in this country, John H. Taylor, managing director of Inter-Ocean Films, Ltd., of England, spoke interestingly of American film conditions as viewed on the spot.

"The war seems to have stimulated business on this side," says Mr. Taylor. "I have met few complaining exhibitors. The loss in one class of patrons is made up by the increase in young women, all of whom are earning more than formerly, and naturally have more to spend. It is quite similar, in this respect, to the situation existing in England. It appears to be generally accepted that the cinema keeps the morale of the home folks high and so does a public service that is recognized and respected. I was especially glad to see the kindly attitude your newspapers hold toward the movie in its war work.

"The splendid advertising of official films by your Committee on Public Information has given the photoplay theatre a boost in the estimation of the whole American people. Every class and condition of American society is reached, and I doubt not that an interest in pictures has been aroused in persons who never entered a picture house before the war.

"Such stunts as selling the theatre to the large business firms, each to have it exclusively on an evening for their employees and friends, are most commendable; and surely the government publicists leave no stone unturned in getting these pictures before the public. Every conceivable publicity device is employed, and as I say it is a great thing for American pictures as a whole.

"I am surprised at the scarcity of good foreign subjects in American theatres. I do not believe that American audiences would pass such films if they were advertised as American films are. I mean in the case of the Class 1 foreign production, of course. I know the mediocre sort is not wanted. But the unusual picture, the film with the punch and publicity possibilities: your programs would be more interesting for such films, more varied, more compelling and carry wider appeal.

"Indeed, here is the great difference between England and America. In the former, American films abound. This is not due to non-production of British films, for of late there have been many, and of striking value. But the British trade wishes to keep its screen international. They do not believe in all-British programs.

"However, I might say that there is a danger of a change in this attitude. Now that British producers are spending large amounts and making films that are worth-while, a large section of the trade feels that it is only fair that these films be booked in America. If England welcomes the right sort of American film, we contend that America should welcome the right sort of British film.

"It is just a matter of getting them started on your market and we feel that your big releasing programs could do this easily. These programs release all their good productions in our country. And, of course, we would only expect them to accept good British productions for release in your country. At any rate, I am sure the present American policy of total elimination of English productions cannot long endure."

DARLING COMES OUT AGAINST DUPING

Fox Foreign Representative Warns the Industry Against the Granting of All Such Privileges

THE controversy started by Sidney Garrett a few months back in these columns, on the question of granting duping privileges to British and French buyers, has flared up in an out-of-the-way corner of the world. Joseph R. Darling, of the Fox company, writes from Manila, P. I., taking a very decided stand against the practice. The Fox representative has been up against very unpleasant situations caused in various foreign markets by the duping evil, and his protest is the result of practical experience.

We reproduce below his letter in full, just as it reached us:

Re-Duping of Films.

Manila, P. I., 12 July, 1918.

The Moving Picture World, New York City.

Dear Sirs—I have noticed in your worthy Moving Picture World arguments for and against the duping of American-made films in foreign countries. Messrs. Sidney Garrett, Joseph Lamy and others favor this class of piratage. Let me tell you right off the bat that American-made films foreign countries. I have seen in Australia, Manila, Chile, Peru, Argentina and should under no conditions be duped in Brazil duped American films, not half a dozen, but hundreds of them. Some of our best productions principally Chaplins and Famous Players.

I am in the field and have to combat just this rotten class of competition which if allowed to run on would soon bankrupt the largest film manufacturer in existence, and the miserable pirate would be the one making a few thousand dollars by his dirty work. These are my sentiments based on facts, and I hope you will publish this letter.

William Fox is now thoroughly established in all the principal countries of the world and I am very pleased in my small way, to have been one of the mediums whereby his American pluck and energy, sometimes against great odds, has won for him a high place in the advanced art of cinematography.

With best wishes, and hoping soon to be with you, I am,

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH R. DARLING,
Foreign Representative, Fox Film Corporation.

Under the title "Sin Dejar Rastros," the Spanish equivalent of the German "Spurlos Versenkt," a satirical picture, made up of animated cartoons, has been successfully released in Argentina. The film depicts, in a humorous vein, some of the plots engineered by Count Luxburg, the Kaiser's representative in Buenos Aires, which were exposed by our own State Department. It starts with an imaginary description of the local German Legation, a building full of traps, underground passages, mysterious closets, infernal machines, etc., and the final shows "Juan Pueblo" (the common people) delivering an energetic kick to the Hun minister, who is swallowed by the waves and disappears spurlos versenkt.

A CULTURAL PLAN FOR SIBERIA

Motion Pictures and Projection Machines in Demand for Education Work in Siberia

THE American consul at Vladivostok has transmitted to the State Department, under date of July 8, 1918, a copy of the a letter from the Culture-Educational Union of the Altai District, with headquarters at Barnaul, Siberia. According to this letter the Union, which is concerned with the "out-side-of-school" education of the people, wishes to obtain portable projection machines and scientific popular films and magic lanterns for its own purposes and for the use of the co-operative unions of Tomsk, Semipalatinsk, Yenisei, Irkutsk, and Transbaikal Provinces. Moreover, the Culture-Educational Union is forming at Barnaul a People's Central Museum Exhibition for national and international products, and a chain of such exhibitions in the Provinces. These museum exhibitions will consist of various branches—co-operation, outside-of-school education of a scientific-popular character, geography, ethnography, etc. In this connection the Culture-Educational Union plans to send a representative to the United States in the near future to establish connections with various scientific educational, and other establishments and organizations, museums, factories and firms, and to collect part of the exhibits desired. This representative will buy the first consignment of 100-200 projection machines and 1,000-2,000 films; will select and buy a good English library on museums, co-operative agriculture, etc.; will collect exhibits on ethnography, school teaching, home industries, and material on cotton and tobacco raising; and will also buy the necessary school and teaching appliances and models of various kinds of machines.

American firms interested in this project are advised to communicate direct with the Culture-Educational Union of the Altai District, Barnaul, Siberia.

British Notes

"HEARTS OF THE WORLD," the Griffithian war production and successor to "Intolerance" has found its London revue at the Palace Theatre. The Palace is the recognized English home of Parisian revue and with the exception of the London Opera House is, in external design, the most attractive theatre in town. The departure also marks the first serious excursion into the domain of the moving-picture of Sir Alfred Butt.

The general success of two other productions, just completing their first engagements in London and principal provincial cities, demands notice. They are the Ambassador Gerard film "My Four Years in Germany," and the other with the Teuton torturing title, "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin." In a shrieking panegyric of the former, a Sunday newspaper, at one time strongly anti-kinema, fervently exhorts the Government to commandeer the largest hall available and show it to the public as a propaganda film. A Glasgow newspaper devoted its leading article—the first on record of a single film—to the subject after the private view in Scotland. "The Kaiser" film is enjoying a protracted vogue both North and South mainly, I think, on account of its title. It opened the Scala Theatre in London after a long vacation for cleaning and is still running and rebookings, especially in industrial districts, are the order of the day.

Mr. Edouard Simyan, of the French State Department of Beaux Arts, places the moving picture amongst the highest of the arts. He is strongly in favor of the foundation of a seat in the Paris Conservatoire to further the study and tuition of photo-playing upon academical lines.

London exhibitors are contemplating the advisability of forming a Metropolitan Managers' Association. There are special problems which often crop up in the city showman's business, which are purely local and cannot be dealt with on general principles by any organization covering distributed interests. Theatrical managers discovered this years ago when the Association of West End Theatrical Managers was formed and a similar society of moving picture theatre managers could be hardly less effective. In the department of advertising alone many attractive collaborations might result, although the motive of the promoters is, I am informed, retaliatory to the unfair competition of occasional halls and theatres.

Directorial rearrangements of the principal exhibiting circuit in the United Kingdom have now been completed and the storm clouds of dissension, which at one time looked menacing to the envied prosperity of Provincial Kinematograph Theatres, Ltd., are but a shadow on the horizon. Sir William Jary and A. E. Newbould are now the two principal executive officers of the company, and that "sine qua non" of every successful commercial enterprise, a skilled accountant, has been found in J. P. Derbyshire. F. E. Adams remains on the board as managing director.

The following is the text of a letter from the London County Council to the Kinematograph Exhibitors' Association (London Branch):

Sir:—I have been directed to inform you that the London County Council has received a complaint in regard to the film "Sapho," produced by the World-Famous Players Company, and after a full consideration of the matter has informed the producers that, while it recognizes the care and skill shown in depicting the incidents of the story and the excellence of the treatment throughout, it is of opinion that the subject matter is such as to render the film unsuitable for exhibition in places of public entertainment. In reply the Council has been informed by the producers that so far as their contracts allow they have withdrawn the film from exhibition. I am, Sir,

Your obedient servant,
JAMES BIRD,
Clerk to the London County Council.

The Broadwest Film Company (Messrs. Broadbridge and West), having now been in the film producing field for three years, have decided to relinquish the exchange side of the industry. Instead of renting their own productions in the future they intend to offer them for sale on a territorial rights basis.

The United Kingdom rights of the year's Petrova Pictures have been taken over by the old established renting exchange of the Walterdaw Co., Ltd.

ROYAL SUES MODERN.

Harry G. Kosch, an attorney specializing in film cases, states that an action has been brought in the United States District Court by the Royal Cinema Corporation against Fred Beck, Charles H. Streimer, Modern Feature Photo Plays, Inc., and others, for an alleged infringement and duping of the feature known as "Mothers of Liberty." The Royal Cinema Corporation, Inc., owners of "Mothers of Liberty," has retained Mr. Kosch to represent them in the action which promises to develop into an important suit. Mr. Kosch made the following statement relative to the case:

"A writ of seizure was granted in this matter whereby the plaintiffs seized a duped negative and postive print of the same, and an injunction pendente lite was granted by Justice Julius M. Mayer of the United States District Court on August 30, restraining the defendants from interfering with the plaintiff's picture or from showing or distributing any prints thereof. The case has been set for trial for September 16."

RAY NOT TO LEAVE INCE.

Thomas H. Ince, through the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, emphatically denies the report that his star, Charles Ray, has signed with another producer. Mr. Ince's statement is confirmed by the player in a wire to Adolph Zukor. The story that Ray had signed to appear under another banner gained wide circulation in the trade and surprised both Mr. Ince and Mr. Ray as much as it did others who are familiar with the star's success as a Paramount favorite.

JEWEL FILM GOES TO CONVENTION HALL

"Crashing Through to Berlin" Booked by Liberty Loan Committee in Kansas City's Auditorium

"CRASHING Through to Berlin," the big Jewel Productions film, is on the crest of a popularity wave that is sweeping west and southward at high speed. The Liberty Loan Committee in the Kansas City district, the Council of National Defense at other points, and patriotic organizations generally have taken up the picture as a special message carrier to serve their cause.

In Kansas City the Liberty Loan Committee has booked the film for special showings in Convention Hall as part of the Fourth Loan drive. This is a signal honor, as Convention Hall is the mecca for the public of that region, and attractions so fortunate as to be shown there always obtain the fullest prestige possible. An instance of what such prestige means can be recalled in the case of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," the previous Jewel production shown in Convention Hall.

At that time exhibitors of the district who had not seen the film made offers of about $300 a week to book it and were not terribly anxious to get the film. As soon as the picture was shown to the enormous crowd accommodated by Convention Hall and the exhibitors saw the demonstration of approval that crowd made the same ones who had offered $300 clamored for the film at $1,000 a week. This latter figure was established as the regular booking price for two months thereafter.

From the moment of its first showing at the Broadway Theatre, New York, "Crashing Through to Berlin" has had success paralleling that of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin." During last week it broke records at the Auditorium in Chicago. The ban on automobiles on Sunday, September 1, greatly increased the crowd of film spectators, and the Auditorium was jammed to capacity, with a large overflow unable to gain admittance. The next day produced similar attendance from the Labor Day crowds.

Indefinite Run for Tremont Temple.

The picture is booked for an indefinite run in Tremont Temple, Boston, beginning September 23. A big advertising campaign in the local newspapers has been started to precede the showing.

The publicity and advertising processes mapped out for "Crashing Through to Berlin" are on a big scale. Large space has been contracted for in the newspapers of all the big cities where showings are being booked. Principal among these are Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Atlanta, Denver and Cleveland. The film began its run in the Strand Theatre, Denver, Sunday, for an indefinite run.

"Crashing Through to Berlin" has spectacular elements and a patriotic appeal combined that play on the feelings of a crowd with tremendous effect. As was the case when the picture opened in New York the police reserves were required to handle the first night throng in other cities.

The picture reviews the war from its beginning to the present. As new happenings of world significance take place on the various battlefronts the films of these events are rushed across the water and added to the final episodes. Thus the spectator not only witnesses a review of the war's history, but sees actually the latest news of the present.

The picture takes up its narrative with scenes taken at the funeral of the Archduke Francis Ferdinand of Austria and his consort, whose assassination set off the spark that caused the war.

"Crashing Through to Berlin" has another appeal from the fact that it is a portrayal of actuality. There is no make believe about it. The characters shown are the flesh and blood men of history.

Film Is Kept Up to Date.

Another element of characterization is that which actually shows the fighting qualities of civilized men. It may be said that this film reveals the uprising of humanity and the transition of peaceful races into the character of valiant heroes. Men of many races are seen leaving peaceful pursuits and taking part in the struggle.

The film deals in faithful detail with the last chapter of America's part in the conflict. It is this phase of the picture that brings the spectators up standing. They see the arrival of General Pershing with his fighting vanguard of Americans overseas. They see these same men taking part in the latest drive on the Marne and later on the Somme and the Hindenburg Line.

"Crashing Through to Berlin" was compiled by Jack Cohn. It was produced by Carl Laemmle, and was purchased by Jewel Productions for distribution immediately after the first showing.

ROCHESTER'S GORDON CLOSES DOORS

Beautiful Structure Built by Boston Theatre Man Succumbs to Overbuilding of Territory

THE Gordon Theatre of Rochester has closed its doors. The management gives as the reason its inability to secure help. The Gordon for some time has only been open on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays. The Gordon was built a few years ago by Nathan Gordon, the Boston theatre magnate. It is one of the finest picture houses in the state, and has all modern equipment, from moving stairways to a huge organ. At the time it was built it was considered the last word for many years to come in the art of building theatres. It did such a rich business that it inspired many people to dream of the wealth to be made in the picture game.

George Simpson built the Regent and formed a working partnership with the Gordon, practically controlling picture first runs in Rochester. The two houses were then operated by a new corporation—the Regorson Company—although the ownership of neither house changed. Just about the time they were buying film at their own price, because film companies had to come to them for bookings, Walter Hutt Seeley came to town. He had formerly been managing editor of the Newark Evening News, and probably the newspaper business had taught him quick perception and developed his sense of perspective.

At any rate Seeley thought somebody was hogging the picture business in Rochester. He took his ideas to local capitalists and found them sympathetic, with the result that a corporation to build a theatre was formed within twenty-four hours. The total capital of a quarter of a million dollars was subscribed within the same period by a group of local financiers, headed by Thomas J. Swanton, banker. The beautiful, magnificent Piccadilly was born, and has been a lemon ever since as far as financial results were concerned.

In the first place the town was apparently not big enough for all the houses. With the Piccadilly paying high prices for film the Regent-Gordon people dug down and squandered more to shelve pictures that the Piccadilly wanted. The capitalists were glad to listen to the Regent-Gordon's suggestion that they combine. The three houses have since been operated under the direction of George Simpson, and the film market is again to a great extent dominated by him.

It was soon seen that there was but a limited field for the three modern palaces. After various plans had been tried out it was announced early this year that the Gordon would open only on Sundays, Saturdays and holidays, this in an effort to boom the Piccadilly, which has had a hard job winning the crowds. The latter difficulty is owing to the prejudice developed when Mr. Seeley started out to charge a half-dollar admission.

The Gordon is closed, and it would seem that it may stay closed for a long time to come.

BLACKTON GETS CHICAGO SHOTS.

J. Stuart Blackton returned Sunday from Chicago, where he spent the week filming special scenes for his forthcoming superfeature, "The Common Cause." In co-operation with the British Canadian Recruiting Mission, under whose auspices he is making this new war spectacle for Vitagraph distribution, various official scenes, involving many allied officers and men in the service, as well as implements of modern warfare stationed in the Windy City, were "shot" under Commodore Blackton's supervision, these scenes to be interpolated in the main story of "The Common Cause." Jack Martin, the producer's assistant, and his camera squad preceded him to the Chicago location.

Commodore Blackton is rapidly completing this production, which he enthusiastically declares is his most ambitious and biggest production, and getting it in shape for release next month. Most of the main story has already been screened.

While in Chicago Commodore Blackton "killed two birds with one stone" by attending the second annual convention of the American Exhibitors' Association.

Faversham To Be Starred in "The Silver King"

WILLIAM FAVERSHAM, for thirty years a conspicuous figure of the American stage, has been engaged by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to star in the production of "The Silver King," one of the great successes of the English-speaking stage.

William Faversham.

This splendid old melodrama, by Henry Arthur Jones and Henry Herman, in itself should offer a big attraction for exhibitors, and with Mr. Faversham in the leading role, produced on an elaborate scale, the film is expected to more than prove itself worthy as a Paramount-Artcraft Special, one of the nine to be released during the new year just started.

Prominently known both as a producer and actor in the world of the spoken drama, Mr. Faversham has also appeared on the screen. He was born in Warwickshire, England, in 1868, and following the completion of his education at Essex and Hillmartin College he served for a brief period in a Warwickshire regiment in India. Returning to London he began a course of preparation for the stage under Carlotta LeClerq, and November 19, 1885, appeared as Sugden in "Retained for the Defense." After a short tour of the provinces he came to New York and appeared at the Union Square Theatre January 17, 1887, as Dick in "Pen and Ink." Later the same season he appeared with E. H. Sothern at the Lyceum in "The Highest Bidder." Following succeeding appearances in "A Sad Coquette," "She," "The Wife," "Sweet Lavender," "All the Comforts of Home," and other plays, he joined the Pitou Stock Company at the Union Square Theatre, playing in repertoire. A season with Mrs. Fiske was followed by his appearance in Bronson Howard's "Aristocracy." Then he joined Charles Frohman's Empire Stock Company, with which he was prominently identified for eight years.

Mr. Faversham made his debut as a star at the Criterion Theatre in August, 1901, as Don Caesar in "A Royal Rival." He then toured for two seasons in "The Squaw Man."

With the staging of "The Barber of New Orleans" in October, 1908, in which he enacted the title role, Mr. Faversham embarked on his producing and managerial career, and ever since then he has appeared for the most part under his own management. Production on "The Silver King" started in the Eastern studios of the company on September 12.

ENTERTAIN WOUNDED SOLDIERS.

The good work the Washington exchange managers are doing to provide comforts and amusements for the wounded and sick soldiers at the Walter Reed Hospital is attracting a great deal of attention. As they learn of what is being accomplished the local exhibitors are "getting into the game" and are coming forward with offers of admissions for the soldiers who are able to travel to the city, Lawrence Beatus, manager of Loew's Columbia Theatre, having tendered twenty-five seats a week.

MISS YOUNG BACK AT COAST.

Clara Kimball Young and her own company are at the Sunset Studio at Los Angeles, where she will begin work on the first picture of her second Select Series, "The Road Through the Dark." Miss Young left New York Sunday afternoon. She was accompanied by Marshall Nielan, her supervising director, and Arthur Edeson, cameraman. On Monday and Tuesday Miss Young attended the annual convention of the American Exhibitor's Association at Chicago. Wednesday morning she commenced the second lap of her journey.

"Daddy" Strong a Friend of Uncle Sam's Sailors

G. D. STRONG, or "Daddy" Strong, as he is more popularly known, celebrated his seventy-sixth birthday and his twenty-second year in the moving picture business in Minneapolis on September 3.

The accompanying picture shows

"Daddy" Strong

Daddy in the act of saluting a company of passing sailors of the Dunwoody Institute in Minneapolis. Every day, rain or shine, sleet or snow, Daddy Strong has met a company of sailors marching in the vicinity of the Army and Navy Club, Tenth street and Hennepin avenue, while on his way to work at about 6 a. m. Daddy marched with Sherman to the sea, and every time he meets a body of these fine blue-clad navy boys he stiffens to attention and gives a snappy salute. His salute is always returned, and there is not one of the 800 Jackies in Minneapolis who does not know Daddy Strong by name. After this exchange of courtesies Daddy always goes promptly to the office of the Minneapolis Universal exchange, where he has had charge of the film inspection department for the past seven years.

Daddy Strong was the first man to turn a moving picture machine in Minneapolis. That was in 1896, and the machine was known as an animatograph. "Persimmons Winning the Derby Race," a seventy-five-foot film from England, was the first shown in Minneapolis, according to Daddy. Other films shown in that year ranged in length from forty to sixty feet. Daddy Strong was Barnum's original and famous bird trainer, known as "Signor Giovanni." While acting in this capacity he toured the world with the famous Tom Thumb troupe from 1866 to 1882, and was for many years after a character in Barnum's circus.

Daddy and Mrs. Strong have "adopted" three boys in the service of Uncle Sam. "We will see that they always have a good time while in the service, and we will never let them have a chance to get lonesome," he said.

Baltimore's Peabody Taken by Parkway Company Chain

THE Peabody Theatre, 11 East North avenue, which for some years has been owned by S. M. Buckman, has now been taken over by the Parkway Theatre Company and will make the fifth link in the chain of theatres operated by this company in Baltimore. Bernard Depkin, Jr., the supervising manager of the Parkway interests, will have charge of this playhouse in addition to his present duties. Mr. Depkin is one of those live-wire managers who thrive on plenty of work.

The Peabody has been greatly renovated and remodeled. The interior has been made a delight to the eye, with soft gray, old ivory and old rose predominating. The pilasters are in old ivory, while the panels have been done in gray. Simple scroll works ornament the tops of the panels, and these, with the pilaster tops of Corinthian design, are trimmed in old ivory and gold. The wainscoting has been finished in old rose, while the carpets and damask at the exits are of the deep old rose color. New seats have been installed. The lighting system has been entirely changed, and the inverted bowls, located one on each of the fourteen pilasters, throw a rich, soft glow over the entire auditorium. The ceiling is heavily beamed. The exterior will soon be completed.

Harry W. Webb is president of the Parkway Theatre Company, and he has done much to make the moving picture entertainments be recognized as an art in itself. The Peabody opened to the public on Thursday, September 5, with Nazimova in "Toys of Fate."

The Parkway Theatre Company circuit now includes the Parkway, 3-9 West North avenue; the Strand, 404-6 North Howard street; the Wizard, 30 West Lexington street; the McHenry, 1030-2 Light street, and the Peabody, 11 East North avenue.

BRUNTON RETURNS TO COAST.

Robert Brunton, manager of productions at the Brunton studios, returned to Los Angeles last Thursday after a five days' stay in New York. While here Mr. Brunton closed contracts and made final arrangements for the production of Lillian Walker and Kitty Gordon pictures in his studio and under his personal supervision. Negotiations are also pending with two other producers. The Lillian Walker pictures are to be distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

The system at the Brunton studios of giving high-class service with space and relieving the producers of all details has been so perfected, it is claimed, as to save 20 to 40 per cent. on the cost of production.

With the addition of Lillian Walker and Kitty Gordon these make nine stars working at the Brunton studios, the others being Bessie Barriscale, Louise Glaum, Frank Keenan, Helen Keller, Sessue Hayakawa, Marie Dressler and Madame Yorska.

Carl Pierce Returns from Trip

Carl H. Pierce, special representative for Paramount and Artcraft Pictures, now on two weeks' vacation, has been continuously on the road in the interests of the exhibitors since December 23, 1917. Mr. Pierce's itinerary included Philadelphia, Columbus, Cincinnati, Dayton, Indianapolis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Omaha, Kansas City, Sioux City, Des Moines, St. Louis, Flagstaff, Williams, Fresno, San Francisco, Oakland, Portland (Ore.), Seattle, Tacoma, Victoria (B. C.), Vancouver, Detroit, Rochester, Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal, Quebec and intervening cities.

Speaking of his experiences with exhibitors and of general business conditions in the industry, Mr. Pierce said: "In general, we are following in the footsteps of the countries who preceded us in the war. Our film conditions are changing just as they did in Canada. Exhibitors will tell you that their business has changed radically—yet the more progressive of them will acknowledge that they are doing more business than ever before. Some exhibitors are breaking their previous house records. In Canada general business conditions are good. The exhibitor, despite his heavy taxes, is making money, and money, especially with the workers, was never so plentiful. One noticeable condition is the manner in which pictures are regarded by the Government and by the people as a war essential, it being conceded generally that the morale of the community—which is largely maintained by the screen—is necessary in the winning of the war."

FOX BUYS SIX SIMPLEXES.

The Fox Film Corporation has bought six Simplex projectors from the Precision Machine Company, Inc., 317 East thirty-fourth street, New York, for installation in the American Theatre, Clinton avenue, Newark, N. J.; the Liberty Theatre, 1123 Elizabeth avenue, Elizabeth, N. J., and the Folly Theatre, Graham avenue and Debevoise street, Brooklyn.

This order makes forty Simplex machines bought by the Fox Corporation for its offices, laboratories and theatres on the Atlantic coast.

SHIPPING CLERKS ARE NOW ESSENTIAL

Washington Exchange Managers' Association Secures Important Decision from Department

THROUGH the efforts of the Washington Exchange Managers' Association shipping clerks in exchanges have been classed as engaged in essential occupation by the provost marshal general. Early in July the provost marshal general's office issued an order that the section of the selective service regulations defining as non-essential persons engaged in and in connection with amusements should be amended so as to include managers, musicians and skilled persons who are necessary to such entertainments.

Local boards in Washington apparently understood the exceptions to include only persons actually connected with the theatres, for one of the boards called a shipping clerk of one of the exchanges to give reasons why he was not engaged in an essential occupation.

The Exchange Managers' Association immediately appointed a special committee to take the matter up and secure a favorable decision, and the committee conferred with the chairman of the board, explaining the reason why shipping clerks should be considered essential. It was impossible to employ women for this work, declared the motion picture men, for a number of reasons, one being that the large shipments of films would be too heavy for them to handle. Another principal reason was that the fire regulations require that films be stored in fire proof vaults and that the doors of such vaults must at all times be kept closed. As a result the air within the vaults is always heavy with ether fumes, which might have a harmful effect upon women.

Women Would Require Much Training.

A number of other reasons, such as experience, ability and knowledge of freight and express rates and routes, are essential in this work, and it would be impossible to supplant the experienced men now employed with women without first putting them through a regular course of instruction.

While the chairman of the draft board before which the case properly came was favorably impressed with the film men's side of the case, he suggested that the committee see some member of the provost marshal general's office in order to secure a ruling which could be used uniformly throughout the country wherever similar cases might arise. Accordingly the film men held a conference with Lieutenant Martindale, in charge of such matters for the provost marshal general, who informed them that a telegram had been sent out to all draft boards, instructing them to include shipping and receiving clerks with others engaged in necessary work.

Shipping Clerk Is Released.

Armed with this information and with copies of previous instructions sent out regarding men engaged in work connected with the presentation of theatricals or motion picture performances the committee again met the chairman of the local board, and, putting their data before him, were successful in having the shipping clerk released.

As a result of their work local exchangemen have secured for their colleagues all over the country a basis on which to adjust any such cases that might arise in their territory. It is believed that had they not secured a ruling to be sent to all draft boards a large number of the boards would have held shipping and receiving clerks to be non-essential owing to their inability to realize that the exchanges are one of the important links in the chain that connects the producer with the exhibitor.

The committee which was appointed by the association to handle the case was composed of Sidney B. Lust, of Super-Films Attractions, Inc.; Oscar Morgan, manager of the local exchange of the Famous Players; Robert B. Smeltzer, manager of the World Film Corporation's local office, and Clarence L. Linz, Washington representative of the Moving Picture World.

Frank Duffy Appointed Representative of Brunet

FRANK DUFFY, for several years with Pathe, has been appointed general manager's representative by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager. The appointment comes as the reward for faithful and efficient service, which began when Duffy first came with Pathe as traveling auditor and which has been continued through other and more responsible positions. The position was created through the need which Mr. Brunet felt to be kept in constant touch with conditions throughout the country. Mr. Duffy will also examine each exchange thoroughly to see if it is operating at its highest efficiency.

Frank Duffy.

Mr. Duffy is a New York man, and gained his first business experience as assistant chief accountant of a large coal company in Boston. Later he became representative to the general manager. Then he became connected with the Chicago house of Price, Waterhouse & Company, and later was transferred to their New York office. Among the large establishments whose books he examined was Pathe Exchange. Thus he secured his opening with Pathe. As traveling auditor he visited the following Pathe exchanges: Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, Butte, Denver, Salt Lake, Omaha and Des Moines. His work was so satisfactory that he was promoted to assistant to the business manager. Later he became assistant sales manager.

Mr. Duffy knows the motion picture business in its distributing end very thoroughly, from both the branch office and home office angles. He has already left New York on an extended trip.

Al Jennings in New Film Seeks to Show Real Bandit

THE first of the Al Jennings outlaw films, "The Lady of the Dugout," is ready for distribution through the Ernest Shipman exchanges. The story of the film deals with the early life of Al and Frank Jennings, and each of the brothers has leading parts in the feature.

"I don't know how the public will like the pictures," says Al Jennings, in speaking of his venture. "It is not like any western movies they have seen, but if it is a success it will revolutionize the western stories; it will put real banditry in them, and real banditry is not like anything in that line now being done in the films. We do not jump over our horses in any scene, and we don't cover our faces with bandana handkerchiefs, or go around with six shooters sticking out all over us. There is shooting, plenty of it, but it is the kind of shooting and gunplay indulged in by men who have actually handled guns in actual holdups. 'The Lady of the Dugout' is not a story based on experiences, it is the experience itself, and if there is an element of religion in the banditry of the screen as we interpret it, it is not idle sentimentality on our part, it is just that we want to show what is in the hearts of men—facts we ought to know if experience counts for anything."

The history of the Jennings boys is well known. They operated as bandits in the southwest for a number of years, but afterward became useful citizens of the best type.

The people of Oklahoma think so well of Al Jennings that they came very near making him governor of their state four years ago. He is now a lecturer and evangelist connected with the Baptist Church, and his brother Frank is an attorney.

CANNOCK GETTING OVER REST.

Frank B. Cannock, secretary of the Simplex Company, 317 East 34th Street, New York, N. Y., has just returned from a ten-day fishing trip at Silver Lake, near Akron, Ohio.

This vacation was the result of a much needed rest which Mr. Cannock had promised himself as a relief to the close attention to mechanical problems connected with the manufacture of Simplex Projectors, which had kept him confined to business for a period covering many months.

"The Romance of Tarzan" Announced by First National Exhibitors' Circuit

An announcement of large box office importance to exhibitors is made this week from the offices of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., to the effect that they will shortly release "The Romance of Tarzan," the sequel to the big novelty surprise feature, "Tarzan of the Apes," as one of their super productions now being made ready for fall distribution.

Calculated by the phenomenal success of "Tarzan of the Apes," the sequel to it will be accepted by the theatregoing public as of even greater appeal. While big publicity was given to the story by Edgar Rice Burroughs through the sale of almost two million copies of the book "Tarzan of the Apes," and by its publication in six thousand newspapers, it remained for the film version, produced by the National Film Corporation, and distributed by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., to widen the previous reputation of Tarzan.

"The Romance of Tarzan" has the action of its thrilling and fast moving story begin at the exact point where the first story concluded. The abrupt ending to "Tarzan of the Apes" was designed to create in the minds of every audience that witnessed the feature an unsatisfied curiosity about the outcome of the dramatic meeting between Tarzan and the white girl fate had brought to his jungle home, and in whom he recognizes his mate.

To obviate the possibility that any who sees "The Romance of Tarzan" may not have witnessed a performance of "Tarzan of the Apes," the action of the sequel starts with a novel and unusual introduction to the story. In a series of brief but well timed flashes it first reviewed the chief happenings in "Tarzan of the Apes," and then the old tale merges directly into the new, in the crude jungle hut where the previous story terminated. From this point on "The Romance of Tarzan" carries its famous character through a series of original and intensely exciting experiences into the very heart of modern civilization—with its restraints, its complicity and conventions.

The principal characters in "The Romance of Tarzan" are the same as those who played the leading roles in "Tarzan of the Apes." Elmo Lincoln, who did such effective work as Tarzan, the man, again portrays the title role. Enid Markey plays opposite him as the girl of a perfect production of a protecting civilization mated by instinct to the jungle-reared man. Cleo Madison, in the role of La Belle Odine, is an effective vampire who seeks to shear Tarzan, after civilization has worked its handicraft on him, of his strength in true Delilah and Samson style. Others who give able support to the principals are Thomas Jefferson, Bessie Toner, True Boardman, star of the "Stingaree" series; George French, Kathleen Kirkham, Gordon Griffith and Colin Kenny.

Guided by the pronounced and unmistakable indications of public taste and preference manifested by audiences during the long and successful season played on Broadway by "Tarzan of the Apes," the executives of the National Film Corporation, in preparing the scenario of the action for "The Romance of Tarzan," were in a position to know exactly what parts of the first picture held the greatest public appeal, and these features of the sequel story were treated to obtain the maximum of thrills and suspense. The production of "The Romance of Tarzan" is on the same lavish scale that marked its great predecessor, with a result that it is believed to be even beyond the attainments of "Tarzan of the Apes" in direction, story, suspense and scope.

HENDERSON WRITES COMEDY.

Dell Henderson, directing Carylye Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley in "Allies," a new World Picture to be released early next spring, has just completed a three-act comedy intended for Broadway consumption. The one interesting feature of this play, from the manager's point of view, is that it requires the services of only six people, and it is absolutely essential that no scenery or properties be used in its presentation. The story has to do with motion pictures in the making, but instead of studio scenes what happens in the creation of the scenario is disclosed. What the author wants, the demands of the star and the suggestions of the director furnish the comedy. It bears the title of "The Third Reel."

Five Stage Celebrities in the Blackton Prologue

An allegorical prologue presenting Italy, Great Britain, America, France and Belgium in action appropriate to the part each nation is playing in the present great conflict is promised as a novel feature of J. Stuart Blackton's war spectacle, "The Common Cause," now in production under the auspices of the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission for Vitagraph release in October.

For this prologue Commodore Blackton engaged five stage stars. They are Julia Arthur, who impersonates Italy; Violet Heming, Great Britain; Marjorie Rambeau, America; Mrs. Vernon Castle, France, and Effie Shannon, Belgium.

Miss Arthur's appearance in "The Common Cause" marks her screen debut. After retiring from the stage for several years the classic actress returned two seasons ago to a faithful public, who voted her beauty and ability as effective as in earlier years.

Violet Heming, who appeared before under Commodore Blackton's supervision in "The Judgment House," the first of his Paramount specials, is now co-starring in "Three Faces East," one of the new theatrical season's successes. Coincidentally this play is from the pen of Anthony Paul Kelly, who also adapted "The Common Cause" from the drama written by J. Hartley Manners, Major Ian Hay Beith and Percival Knight.

Marjorie Rambeau is starring under A. H. Woods' management in "Where Poppies Bloom," and Effie Shannon is "half the show" in another Broadway success presented by the same producer, "Under Orders."

Irene Castle recently completed a long film engagement with Pathe and requires no introduction to picture-goers.

DOBSON TO SELL POWER'S.

The Church and School Motion Picture Company of St. Louis has been appointed a dealer for the output of the Nicholas Power Company, Inc. W. W. Lewis, traveling representative for the Nicholas Power Company, has a lot of good things to say about this concern and about the hustling abilities of George N. Dobson, president and general manager. Mr. Lewis' optimism is shared by the officials of the Power company, who feel that good results will result from this connection.

Vitagraph Starts Its New Comedy Service Sept. 16

SEPTEMBER 16 will see the inauguration of Vitagraph's new two-reel feature comedy service. "Misfits and Matrimony," featuring Earle Montgomery and Joe Rock, will be the first "Big V Special Comedy" offered to exhibitors and it will be followed on September 23 by "Huns and Hyphens," featuring Lawrence Semon. Thereafter one "Big V Special Comedy," two reels in length, will be released weekly by Vitagraph. This new unit of service will place Vitagraph in a class by itself, because it will be the only company releasing a two-reel special feature comedy every week in the year.

Vitagraph has started out to make its new feature comedies on the highest possible plane for subjects of this character, the stories, settings and personnel of the "Big V Specials" having been selected on a feature basis. Thus, in the first offering "Misfits and Matrimony," a complete Red Cross Bazaar, with a score of pretty girls dressed as Red Cross uniforms, was used, and in addition to this attraction the company includes about twenty male comedians and acrobats. This makes the total number of persons employed in the making of the two-reeler about fifty.

"Huns and Hyphens," the second of the new two-reel humor subjects, is declared by Vitagraph to be the funniest comedy Lawrence Semon has ever produced. This comedian, author and director has surrounded himself with a splendid company of players, and in his initial two-reel offering has striven for effects which he could not attain in one reel length.

As heretofore, Semon and the Montgomery Rock team will alternate on the Vitagraph comedy program, each company being seen in twenty-six pictures during the coming year.

For the remainder of September the company will continue to issue one reel Big V subjects, there having been three already near completion when the decision to produce the "Big V Specials" was reached.

Robert Middlemass
Supporting Hale Hamilton in Metro's "Five Thousand an Hour"

Middlemass Supports Hale Hamilton

ROBERT MIDDLEMASS, who appears in support of Hale Hamilton in "Five Thousand an Hour," a picturization of the story by George Randolph Chester, has done successful work on both stage and screen. He plays Loring, a lawyer, in the Metro production, and oddly enough has made a specialty of lawyer parts in numerous dramatic productions.

Mr. Middlemass has appeared in stock companies in several of the larger American cities, including Boston, Pittsburgh, Washington and Columbus. He has appeared recently in New York successes of the speaking stage, such as "Good Gracious, Annabelle," "The Eternal Magdalene" and "The House of Glass." In the company of Kathryn Kidder he toured the country in vaudeville.

This player adopted a stage career immediately upon his graduation from college. He completed his course at Harvard in 1909. He was born in Boston.

Anderson Photoplayers Make Cross Country Trip

AFTER sixteen and one-half days on the road the G. M. Anderson photoplayers have completed their 3,400-mile cross-country auto trip from the Glendale, Cal., studios of the organization to New York, and arrived at the Eastern headquarters of the company in the Longacre Theatre building.

As originally planned, the trip was to have been made by seven men: G. M. Anderson, Jesse J. Robbins, director; Percy S. Pembroke, assistant; Fred Church, heavy; Thomas Kelly, character man, Joseph Flynn, driver, and Ford I. Beebe, publicity manager. Anderson and Church met the party at Barstow, Cal., and continued the trip with them as far as Albuquerque, N. M., where Mr. Anderson received a wire from New York demanding his presence there to attend to certain legitimate theatrical interests. He and Church accordingly left the party at that point and made the remainder of the trip by train, arriving in New York several days ahead of the others.

The party carried its own hotel accommodations with them on the trip in the form of a tent, folding cots and tables and a camp-cooking outfit which left them independent of hotels and enabled them to travel as early and as late as they chose.

As soon as the men reached their journey's end they immediately plunged into the work of getting ready to release "Shootin' Mad," the third of the five-reel Anderson Western subjects which are to be released through the William L. Sherry Service.

The exterior scenes of this production were made at the company's Western plant. The interiors will be made at Fort Lee while Mr. Anderson is attending to other interests in the East.

Nothing definite has been decided as yet regarding the future movements of the company following the completion of "Shootin' Mad." It is possible they will remain for a time at Fort Lee, there to begin another picture, but it is generally understood that they are more likely to return at once to the California studios.

Exhibitors have shown a lively interest in the return of "Broncho Billy."

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America is dead, that the American Exhibitors' Association is dead, that if an exhibitor wants to be a member of any organization, there is only one, and that is an organization which is a part and parcel of the National Association, as outlined by Mr. Brady yesterday." This was greeted with applause.

Hart an Interesting Speaker.

The next speaker introduced was Charles S. Hart, of the Division of Films, Washington, and his address was the most interesting of the session. He said in part:

"Gentlemen of the fifth estate: I bring you greetings from Mr. Creel. (Applause). I like the word fifth estate in reference to the motion picture industry. In this time of strife when the written words are contradicted by one newspaper against another, we are beginning to depend on the motion picture more and more as a means of getting across the right story in a good way.

"The Germans have utilized the motion picture to a great extent in spreading German propaganda. They have used the motion picture to influence people to believe in German rule. We have got to combat that, and it is up to the motion picture industry, it is up to you men, to assist the Government in every way possible to make this possible in other countries.

"In every battle of history we always find the turning point, and we always find among historians certain divergence of opinion as to what was the turning point in a war, but all these opinions resulted in no conclusive proof as to why the battle tide turned one way or the other. But I will show you, gentlemen, and you will show the people of America on your screen within the next two months, that the battle of Chateau-Thierry, in which our boys moved forward, shelling towns and capturing villages, was the turning point in this great world war. Motion pictures are recording these historic battles and the things that happen over there.

"I want to bring one point up to you exhibitors of America. I think we have a great obligation facing us in taking care of the returned soldiers. I have talked with a number of you about it—it is my hobby. We have experienced in the history of this country, as after the Civil War, misplaced charity and admiration for those men who have been wounded, instead of making a place for them and giving them some useful occupation. Because of gratitude and admiration they have been given money. Every man who comes back wants to retain his own self-respect and he can do so only by securing employment.

these boys when they get back. A boy who has been disabled could be made a ticket seller, the man who lost his arm would make a good usher. I think this industry can utilize some of those boys. It is our duty and our privilege to help them."

Mosher Asks Pertinent Question.

At this point the chairman said it was in order to question Mr. Hart on any pertinent matters connected with war films, and I. M. Mosher, of Rochester, N. Y., asked if permits are issued to distributors for exclusive first runs on the official war films to the exclusion of other exhibitors.

Mr. Hart replied that it is not permissible and that his department had in writing from Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Another question put by an exhibitor was: "You asked us on the cards sent out by the Bureau of Information how much we want to pay for the Government films. Personally, I am just as willing to pay the Government as much, if not more, than the exchanges. We pay $25. You ask us how much we would be willing to pay. Do you mean what we would pay for our ordinary program? I am willing to pay as much or more to the Government as I am paying to the exchanges."

Mr. Hart replied: "That isn't necessary. That is the spirit, however, that has been shown. Our object was to get information and to see that the pictures would be put into every house at a profit. We sent out these letters to 17,000 exhibitors, saying we wanted to know from them what they can afford to pay for these pictures and asked them to name their price. We had information from the various exchange managers as to what each exhibitor in America was actually paying for a five-reel feature picture. We believe each war picture is equal to any five reel feature picture. Out of 8,000 replies received I turned something like 400, picked out at random, over to Mr. Cohen and several others, and when we checked up the prices they were absolutely 100 per cent. fair. We checked them up. I think that is a great tribute to the exhibitors of America, that we put it up to them and in no case did they take advantage of the Government."

"That is a question I thought was very important," said an exhibitor. "The National Exhibitors' Association, I believe, is handling the films. They are selling exclusive state right, they are varying their prices. They drive the exhibitor to the wall with their prices. They come up to you and say, 'If you don't take it, I'll get a better price from the fellow up the street.' If they are war pictures there should be a standard price to all."

Going to Exhibitors Direct.

"We knew there would be certain drawbacks in that method of procedure," Mr. Hart answered, "in that if we put it up to the bid basis to exchange organ-

Sam Bullock, of Cleveland, then stated:

"I have a theatre of about 1,000 capacity. Formerly I made $200 a week clear profit. It's a pro-German neighborhood proper. We have lost $600 from January 1 to July 1. We are perfectly willing to stand the gaff until we knock hell out of the Kaiser. A communication comes along something like this:

"'Dear Patriot—(and God knows you can't accuse us of being anything else)—What will you pay? What is your capacity?'

"I write back: 'My capacity is so much This is a pro-German neighborhood Come along. I can't pay the price your agent quotes me. I could on 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' but I'll play you any date you wish, any time, charge any price you wish, and split fifty-fifty Don't ask me what I'll pay, well knowing that I'll lose.'"

Selznick Offers to Help.

Louis J. Selznick then took the floor and during a short speech made the following statement: "I am willing to offer an award of $250 for first, $100 for second and $50 for third to the exhibitor who will bring in the greatest number of members to your association in order to prove that I mean what I say.

"I believe that if the proper letter was written by me to the exhibitors, as a non-member of your organization, and pointing out to them the value of belonging to the organization, I think that would help. I am willing to do this at my own expense—send these letters to exhibitors who do not belong to your organization.

"I want to say also that I do know how to organize and how to make money, and if I can help you to make money I'll be glad to do so. If you want my time it is at your disposal. You'll find a lot of fellows will be displeased because I make this statement, but if I find I am going ahead I'm going whether they like it or not."

Election of A. E. A. Directors.

At a meeting of the executive board of the A. E. A., held Wednesday night in the Hotel Sherman, Samuel H. Trigger, New York; Percy Wells, Wilmington, N. C.; N. W. McGee, Detroit, and H. Trinz, Milwaukee, were elected as the four new vice presidents of the Exhibitors Branch of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

At the same meeting the following were chosen on the new board of directors for the A. E. A. in the same organization:

F. J. Rembusch, Shelbysville, Ind., chairman; Sam Bullock, Cleveland; I. M. Mosher, Rochester; L. H. O'Donnell, Washington, Ind; H. B. Varner, Charlottesville, N. C.; F. H. Herrington, Pittsburgh; E. Thomas Beatty, Chicago; W. H. Linton, Little Falls, N. Y.; Byron Parks, Salt Lake City, and A. B. Momand, Oklahoma City.

P. W. Wells, Vice-President.

THURSDAY'S SESSION.

THE Thursday meeting was opened at 2 o'clock, the main topic of discussion being the question of taxation. M. A. Choynski asked chairman Atkinson, if any authentic information was on hand regarding taxation, so that a discussion might be beneficial. Mr. Rembusch then took the floor and replied in part as follows:

"We had a meeting in Washington, D. C., last December for the purpose of taking up the tax situation. About 200 men from all over the country were there, and at that meeting we devised a plan of getting reports from exhibitors everywhere as to how the tax was affecting them. These reports were sent in to me and I worked on them for about two months and collated them, and as near as I can say from memory there were about 4,000 theatres closed through the film tax and through the admission tax, and of course also on account of the number of young men that were taken to the colors.

"That is a very serious condition, because the small theatre is the backbone of the industry. The small theatre was affected first, and no doubt you all agree that all theatres were affected very much by the war just like any other business. Now, with these facts, with reference to the conditions and to the effect of the tax, we went to New York and met the producers' committee. This producers' committee were to prepare a brief and take that brief before Congress and show that the industry could stand no further taxation without still greater damage, and Mr. Brady told me that such a brief was prepared and was taken to Washington.

Industry Confronted with Increases.

"At the present time we are confronted with this proposed increase. The film tax, as I understand it, will be increased to a percentage tax, 5 per cent. or 10 per cent. on the rentals. That is quite an item. Your admission tax will be doubled and your capacity tax will be doubled. I don't know of anything better that we can discuss this afternoon than to see if we can find some means of relieving the situation, and I think every exhibitor here is interested in it to that extent that he should give his views on the matter and see if we can't find some solution of the problem."

Two Characteristic Poses of Douglas Fairbanks in the Artcraft Picture, "He Comes Up Smiling," Scheduled for Release on September 15.

Mr. Choynski replied: "Then I will say this, that the one thing that interests us more than anything else now, is the 10 per cent. film tax, the tax the patrons of the theatre are supposed to pay and up till now have paid. That we collect. There's no question about that. The seating tax we are going to pay, that has already been passed, but the thing that is going to bother us and what we would have to discuss is the 10 per cent. tax on the film rental.

"The average exhibitor in the city is paying from $250 to $350 a week film bill, and he is going to pay 10 per cent. Now, we're up against the same proposition that we were before on the 15 cent reel tax, the footage tax. They are going to eliminate that and place a 10 per cent. tax directly this time against the exchanges on the rental of film. Who is going to pay that tax? Are they going to shift it on to us? We have no means of getting it as we have the admission tax. We are going to pay $30 a week on a $300 bill.

Rental Tax Main Issue.

"Now, are the film exchanges going to collect that tax from us or are they going to bear it themselves? Are they going to put it on their bill in a raised rental or are they going to deliberately tax us? Never mind the other tax, that is a tax against the people, it is not a tax against us, it is a tax against a people that want to attend shows, and I think we make a vital and fatal mistake if we fight and forget the main issue that is affecting us.

"This tax that is assessed against the patrons of the theatre is against the people of the United States the same as every other tax, the same as the man that goes in the drug store; but what is going to affect us is the 10 per cent. tax. They might as well make us pay a portion of their income tax as to pay a part of this tax if it is assessed against them. My idea of it is that we've got to thrash that question out.

"Are they going to put that on us or are they going to bear it? Let them charge us more for film if they want to, but why should we have to pay that 10 per cent. tax?—$30 a week I will be taxed in each theatre because I pay a $300 a week film bill.

Who Will Pay It?

"I have no means of getting that. Tell me to raise my price? Why, the Government assessment now is 20 per cent. on admission and the more we raise the more we've got to pay in Government tax. That's the whole question that we should take into consideration—who will pay it?

"Now, I make a contract for the film for the coming year with the film exchange. I have signed the contracts already. Those contracts don't say anything about the war tax. Are the exchanges going to come to me now and say, 'You've got to pay 10 per cent. on this bill?' The tax isn't against me, it's against them. They are getting the money. I'd like to hear from some other men who are paying more money than I am for film. Are you going to pay tax to the film people? Never mind the admission tax, the people are going to pay that."

"I want to explain still further, with reference to our conference with the producers," Mr. Rembusch said at this point. "We took up the question of the 15 cent reel tax, and in our discussion the producers came to the conclusion that it had not been applied in an equitable manner, and for that reason it had been a disaster to the small exhibitor. For example, the small exhibitor throughout the country, who is the backbone of the industry and who carries the cost of production, is really the one who gives the reward to the producer on account of the fact that his rentals are generally all profits to the producer. He was injured more than any one because his tax was so very high as compared with the large exhibitor.

"For example, a small exhibitor with a $5 a day tax, running a $5 a day program, had a 15 to 20 per cent. addition to the cost of his program, while a man that was paying $500 a week for his program didn't miss the 75 cents or 90 cents a day.

J. Stuart Blackton.

"So, in this discussion they decided it was wrong to apply it on a footage basis of 15 cents a reel, and I want to say that the fact the exhibitors were together and made a fight at that time made quite an impression, but the exhibitors didn't continue the fight and so this tax is being paid by the exhibitor.

Ten Per Cent. Means Hardship.

"I believe that we would pay it anyhow, in the long run, because it's added to the cost of production. Whatever a film costs we have to pay in that sense, but when 10 per cent. is to be added to the cost of our programs, under the present conditions it's going to be quite a hardship to the exhibitor—a great hardship."

"Why can't you keep in mind the existence of that National Grievance Committee?" said Mr. Bullock. "There's sure to be a dividing line, but is there no buffer to come between us? We keep forgetting that we legislate year after year but don't carry out the legislation. I insist yet that while there is a dividing line the existence of that National Grievance Committee should be sufficient to settle the question satisfactorily to both sides. We can at least get together."

Mr. Rembusch replied: "I agree that this is correct, but it doesn't do any good to have a lot of committees unless something is done. These committees are formed and then the whole proposition goes to sleep. What I want to point out is this:

"I know that certain local organizations have gone to the internal revenue collector and have shown him that the producers and distributors had no right to put that 15 cent tax on and that they were profiteering at the expense of the exhibitor and that this can all be returned to the exhibitor."

Mr. Trinz, of Milwaukee, then asked: Didn't they compel you to pay this 15 cent tax last year? Didn't you protest against it, and yet they made you pay?"

"Positively," answered M. A. Choynski.

"We took that to court and were pulled out from Washington," Sam Bullock interpolated. "You know the details of it, if you want to tell it."

Cleveland Usually Sees It Through.

"Tell it, Mr. Bullock. Give us briefly the details you speak of," said Chairman Atkinson.

"As every one knows, we went after the thing at Cleveland, Ohio, and we were progressing favorably," answered Sam Bullock, "but the allied committee for some reason or other, having some better method (as they thought) in view, suggested that we proceed quietly. We simply let the matter go. We had a fair chance of getting a court record on the proposition. We are going to see it through to the finish, as we usually do in Cleveland, anyway. If it hadn't been for that we'd have got a decision on it some way or other."

"Inasmuch as he speaks of the allied committee I will say this," Mr. Rembusch began. "The allied committee, as far as the exhibitors are concerned, did everything in their power to relieve the situation. We worked very faithfully in getting these reports together, collated them, brought them to New York, held a meeting with the producers. The producers promised to get up the brief. I can show you copies I wrote to Mr. Powers and Mr. Friend at least a dozen times, asking when this brief would be prepared and when it would be presented to Congress; but no brief has been prepared nor anything done."

At this point Mr. Choynski said: "I will tell Mr. Trinz why we paid the 15-cent tax. It amounted to about $365 a year. In my case it amounted to about $900. I always took the stand that I had a contract with them to supply me film at a certain price. I protested for two or three months and did not pay the 15 cents. I got my film right away. I just said this: 'I am paying my bill under the contract I've got with you and that is all it calls for, and I think that I will fight you if you refuse to deliver that film to me if I don't pay this 15 cents.' But everybody seemed to be paying it and I didn't want to stand in the position I have always taken in being the only fellow that was fighting. As it only cost $1,000 a year I paid it, but now it's getting to a proposition where it's going to cost me $4,500 a year, and if I come up and pay my film bill of $50 a day and they say, 'You owe $5 more because of the Government tax of 10 per cent. on what you're paying in,' I really think that I will be forced to say, 'I want that film delivered to me. If you hold that film up I really think I will go into court and get a writ from the court compelling you to give me film until you are shown whether you can collect it from me or whether you'll have to pay it.'

Could Afford to Fight for $4,500.

"I could afford to hire a lawyer and fight, not just for the sake of fighting, but for the $4,500; and other exhibitors will find themselves in the same position.

"You've got a contract to show film. It calls for $100, and when you go to pay your bill they say, 'Yes, but the Government taxes us $10 on this.' They are getting an income from us which the Government is taxing at the rate of 10 per cent. and they want us to pay that tax on their income. Then they collect $110 from me. Will they pay $11 into the Government treasury? They are collecting $110 and not $100."

Mr. Rembusch again took the floor and said: "The 15-cent tax caused the film service of the small exhibitor to be increased from 10 per cent. to 20 per cent. Now in this instance at 10 per cent. it will reduce the small exhibitor's tax, but it will certainly increase the large exhibitor's tax a very great deal. Mr. Brown, of Idaho, is here. He is very much interested in the tax situation. I'd like to have him talk on it."

Herman J. Brown, of Boise, Idaho, replied: "Of course, there are the non-cancellable contracts. That means the producer can't cancel a contract he's made with you. If you can simply make him stand pat on those very well drawn contracts—they are very iron-clad—you can just stand pat and make the producer pay the tax. It will mean about $6,000 a year to me, and I can afford to spend $3,000 a year to a lawyer to get my rights in the matter."

"You mean if a film company would attempt to put this tax on you you'd say, 'You're abrogating your contract'?" asked Mr. Rembusch.

"I've got so many non-cancellable contracts—about $30,000 worth—I don't think such a course of action would be fair. The producer can't pay that tax. When the 15-cent reel tax came up I figured it out before I called my organization of the state of Idaho together on it, and I figured it was just a tenth as much as it is. I figured instead of $7.50 a reel it was 75 cents. I was in favor of paying it just to be reasonable. The producer can't make enough profit with the 10 per cent. tax.

Admission Tax Concerns Brown.

"On the other hand, if the producer pays that 10 per cent. tax it will put these non-cancellable contract people out of business, so the exhibitor will have to pay it or have to do a thing that isn't any better than what the producers usually do to us. But the thing that I am interested in is the 20 per cent. tax on admissions, which is not 20 per cent. On a 15-cent admission you will pay a 4 cent tax. It is 2 cents now and they are going to double it. If you pay 4 cents on a 15-cent admission you are paying over 26 per cent.

"Now in putting this tax over you're dealing with a department of the United States Government which has never been very fair with us. They mean to be fair, absolutely, but their conception of the business and the attitude in which they approach it invariably leads them wrong. In this way: They, Mr. Kitchin's committee, from which all regulations issue, have got this luxury idea very firmly imbedded in their minds. They don't intend to hurt us, but they are going to hurt us.

"They start out by putting us in the class of luxuries; but our business is not a luxury. Strange as it may seem I find exchange managers who seem to think we are less essential than a box of chocolate creams. I have asked the question, 'Do you think a man selling chocolate creams is more essential than the moving picture business?' 'Oh, yes,' they have replied.

"In other words, they seem to think that anything which feeds the body is an essential, and anything that pertains in any way to the brain is non-essential. Apparently nobody in the film exchange business expects us to have brains.

"Congress is dodging the film question in this way: They are classing us as a luxury. If we could get off as a luxury we'd be all right, but that isn't all. They class a diamond brooch as a luxury. If a diamond brooch sells at $1,500 it has a tax placed on it of $15, but $1,500 worth of film would be taxed 20 per cent. under the new tax, so that evidently we are something that's just about twice as non-essential as a diamond brooch, which is owned by one person, enjoyed by one person, worn by one person, whereas the moving picture is enjoyed by thousands of people.

Government Conception Wrong.

"The conception is wrong; the intention is good. The presentation of the matter to the Government has been exceedingly poor. Here is one of the great troubles, and that is one reason why I came here. One of the great troubles with the whole matter is the way it is handled in Congress. I have noticed that the personnel of the committees appointed by the National Association is dominated about four to one by producers. You don't have any exhibitors going down there.

"It would be better by far if we had had five exhibitors down there and not all those producers. I have said to Mr. Brady himself, 'No producer has ever presented our case right or intelligently in Washington.' They go down there and allow this misapprehension to exist. I read the discussion of Mr. Kitchin on this subject. He was perfectly open-minded, and he was left with the impression that he was doing a very just thing. They all stood there, and after he had finished talking they walked away. He said, 'Gentlemen, the public pays the tax.' That is a misconception. There's no tax in the world levied like that.

"My receipts this year were just as good as last year, and the answer to it is this: The business in the bulk of locations has expanded. There's a war profit which affects our business like any other business. That war profit in our business is taken care of in the 10 per cent. tax. Bear this in mind: That when the war profit stage passes there's going to be a war reaction some day. If you've got a 20 per cent. tax on you it's going to break you. What comes up will come down. It's going to come down, and that's all there is to it. That 20 per cent. tax is a very vital thing in the near future. The day will come when prices will lessen. There's going to be a lessening of prices, and you can't lessen your price because it contains a solid element and can't be reduced, and when that element gets to be 20 per cent. the whole industry is going to be in danger."

Beatty Takes Up Reel Tax.

"When the 15-cent reel tax was imposed by the manufacturers in Chicago I fought it vigorously," said E. H. Beatty of Chicago. "My objection to the 15-cent tax is that it absolutely takes it outside competition. There was no chance for me to go to another fellow and say, 'I'll give you 10 cents a reel.' I hold that the 20 per cent. should be absorbed by the manufacturer and that he should come to me and ask me for higher rentals, and if I don't see fit to pay them he should go to my competitor and at least give us a chance to trade.

"I think that this convention should draw up a resolution of protest against the 20 per cent. tax being paid by the exhibitor and also a protest against the 10 per cent. increase on rentals and the 20 per cent. on admission. I think we should draw up a resolution and send it to Mr. Brady, protesting against this taxation."

Great applause followed Mr. Beatty's speech.

Mr. Brown suggested that the wire be sent to the Senate finance committee, and Chairman Atkinson suggested the coupling of a request with such a telegram to the effect that in dealing with taxation the representatives of the Government should deal with exhibitors.

Mr. Rembusch suggested sending the following telegram to Mr. Brady at New York:

"It is the consensus of opinion of the exhibitors in national convention assembled here that further taxation will be ruinous to the exhibition of motion pictures. The maximum that we can pay will be 10 per cent. admission tax. Allow the present capacity tax to remain and the film reel tax be paid by the exchanges and not added to invoices, but added to usual overhead."

Bullock Calls for Facts.

Mr. Bullock objected to the placing on Mr. Brady's shoulders the burden of the taxation matter without providing him with facts as to why exhibitors should not pay additional taxes.

"The facts are so easily gathered that it is a disgrace upon our exhibiting branch of the business to think that we have not yet provided the United States Government with facts showing conditions prevailing in the theatres of the country," he said. "It can be done in less than one week. We proved it. We can prove our case to the Government in the city of Cleveland. Very fortunately a condition arose there a few weeks ago. The boys didn't seem to be able to see any light ahead, and it was necessary to prove a certain contention that certain condtions existed. We gathered the statistics, and I am willing to bet all I'm worth—I won't be worth anything if this war keeps on much longer—that if you will follow the plan we adopted in Cleveland Mr. Brady and the exhibitors' committee can lay before the proper legislative committee the reason why we should not be taxed any further."

The telegram was sent Mr. Brady after a motion to that effect was unanimously carried by the convention.

Edgar Lewis, the well-known independent producer, was then called on by the chair to address the meeting. He responded in a most entertaining manner by giving a sketch of his career in the business. This is so lengthy that space forbids doing it proper justice in this convention report, but it is so good, in a readable and amusing way, that it may be run in full in a later issue.

A vote of thanks to Mr. Lewis was given amid great applause, after which adjournment was made until Friday afternoon.

FRIDAY'S SESSION.

The closing session of the second (and last) convention of the American Exhibitors' Association was opened at 2 o'clock Friday, September 6. A worthy tribute was paid Frank J. Rembusch at the outset, for his efforts in bringing about the gathering of exhibitors and prominent men in the industry, when W. W. Watts, of Springfield, Ill., moved a rising vote of thanks.

Mr. Rembusch, in acknowledging the honor, associated with himself J. M. Mosher, of Buffalo, whom he declared equally worthy of thanks of the organization. There were others also who could fairly claim a similar distinction, he said. He then moved that a rising vote of thanks be given to the officers and recommended that the organization go on record in appreciating the work of Louis H. Frank and the efforts of all others who helped in the activities of the organization during the past year. A rising vote of thanks was given accordingly.

Ralph O. Proctor, district manager of the Middle West for Pathe, then was introduced by the chairman and made a neat speech, in which he referred to the number of prominent exhibitors in attendance, greater in number than he had ever seen at preceding conventions.

Chairman Atkinson, who had been complimented and thanked by Mr. Rembusch for his felicitous service, expressed his sincere appreciation. He was satisfied with everything that had been done during the convention and believes that "when another year rolls round, the exhibitors throughout the country will realize that there is an opportunity now to get together on local, state and national issues."

J. W. Mosher then asked that those assembled pass upon the following members who had been selected for official positions:

Chairman of the Executive committee, Frank J. Rembusch; secretary, Louis H. Frank; first vice president, Percy Wells; second vice president, Samuel Trigger; third vice president, Dean McGee; fourth vice president, H. Trinz.

Directors, Byron Parks, Samuel Bullock, A. B. Momand, Fred J. Herrington, E. Thomas Beatty, W. H. Linton, I. W. Mosher.

Committee on Constitution, Frank J. Rembusch, Samuel Bullock, I. W. Mosher.

M. Heinrich, of Milwaukee, moved that the members assembled ratify the names as mentioned. The motion was seconded and carried.

Mosher Gives Details.

Mr. Mosher then said: "I will go a little further into detail. The new organization will be incorporated in Illinois. The papers are now being prepared to that end. The questions which came to us were largely questions that required very careful consideration, such as the matter of the voting representation, and we have gone as far as this, that no proxies shall be voted at a convention and that the interest of every state will be safeguarded by permitting no auxiliary or extra votes beyond the basic vote of five per state, unless the representative or his alternate is there in person. That, I think, will meet with the approval of everybody who has ever attended conventions of this character and is an absolute safeguard to our interests. You can all see what the effect of that limitation of voting will be. It will prevent a large attendance, because the delegates will be as formerly, one to twenty-five exhibitors, and as many can be sent as the state is legally entitled to send.

"We are taking the constitution piece by piece up and article by article and we, of course, will have to compromise more or less, but we have made our stand on the articles that I have just mentioned and they have been agreed to by the other sidc. The other questions are merely details and will be arranged we trust to your satisfaction. Due notice will be given you when the constitution is ready for acceptance."

Mr. Rembusch's motion, that the meeting endorse the showing of the World Film of "America's Answer," the official war picture, was carried unanimously.

Reduction in Insurance Premiums.

In answer to a query made by E. H. Beatty, Mr. Mosher took the floor and said:

"At the joint meeting Tuesday night, when discussions were made pro and con, regarding the A. E. A. and the M. P. E. L. of A., we were asked what we had done for the exhibitors during the past year, and we were not prepared to answer. But one of the things that had been prepared for this meeting and was to be presented to the A. E. A. was the question of insurance, which you have heard from Mr. Crittenberger. That plan had been adopted and by vote of the board of directors it was accepted by the national body. I don't know that I need to go into details with regard to the plan itself, but we want to extend it a little to a bonding proposition as well as insurance, and every member of the allied associations or the national industry now, can become a beneficiary under those insurance plans. The insurance on theatres will be guaranteed you at 25 per cent. less than your regular rates and an insurance bond for advance deposits can and will be issued to any small exhibitor along the plan outlined, whereby he can dispense with the deposit system.

"There, gentlemen, we think we have the solution of the deposit trouble. This bonding company guaranteed a faithful performance of the exhibitor's contract. Don't forget that. That has been the source of prolific trouble. Certain exhibitors,—everybody knows it, and that is a weakness in our industry today and always has been, failed to meet their proper obligations. If any member of the new association wishes to be insured and bonded under this plan he can do so. But it carries with it, as an essential part of the contract, a faithful performance of his share of the duties; for every man who fails to pay his bill, the man who does pay it assumes an unequal share of what must be paid. This delinquency on the part of some is the very thing that will militate against the success of the plan

"This plan is such that an exhibitor is not obliged to take it," said Mr. Rembusch. "but every exhibitor would take it, without doubt, after it is explained to him. It was to be the means of assisting us to get members during the coming year, because the insurance people were going to solicit and get our membership without any cost to the Association. So you see, we were on the fair road to getting our organization into splendid shape.

Convention Accepts Bonding Contract.

"The form of contract is under the heading of the American Exhibitors' Association. We have worked for several months on this, so that we absolutely know that there would be no excuse for any producer to accept this contract in lieu of an advance deposit. This bond would take away the advance deposit system and prevent the juggling of the film market, which the advance deposit system caused

"I would, therefore, move you that this convention accept the proposition of bonding insurance, as outlined in these contracts and proposed by Mr Crittenberger at this convention."

The motion was seconded and carried unanimously.

Chairman Atkinson, at this time, requested Mr Mosher to take the chair so that he might address the convention. He said:

"I want to be very frank in the things that I have to state. The disappointment to myself, personally, at the fewness of our numbers has been very great, but I think one of the principal reasons is that the majority of the exhibitors in Chicago are suspicious of any moves that might be made in any direction at this time; because, for a long time, the exhibitors in this part of the country have suffered as a result of ambitious people playing politics, who are themselves unscrupulous, so far as the average exhibitor is concerned.

"I want to tell you that I am delighted beyond measure because Mr. Brady came here; that I have advocated for a long time, there should be some form of exhibitor organization connected with the other branches of the industry.

Atkinson Joins New Movement.

"I want to state this: I am perfectly willing to throw in my lot with the new movement, regardless of personalities and regardless of the fact that some of the men connected with that movement are more interested in other branches of the industry than they are in the exhibiting end. I want to ask you to do this: to get every exhibitor you can to join the new organization and to discourage any connection with any other organization. Let us be one and let us work together for a year and if these men accomplish anything for us in the year I will be the first man to get behind them and say, well done. If they do not accomplish something for the exhibitors at the end of a year, then the fact of our amalgamation will mean that we shall recognize it and we shall demand that men take their places, who will work along right lines.

"I want to be perfectly frank about this: The question of proxies has been raised and my understanding is (I am not a politician and I am not very active) that under the laws of the State of Illinois proxies can be used—and we know they have been used, and unless you gentlemen are going to stand firmly upon that proposition, and unless you are going to recognize nobody except they belong to the local, the state or the national organization, making us one, this entire movement is going to lose its effectiveness."

Mr. Mosher then said: "I would like to put a motion to you. You have previously indorsed the action of your committee as regards the new organization and at the suggestion of certain gentlemen it was to be incorporated in Illinois.

To Incorporate in New York.

"I wish to withdraw that part of the suggestion, so far as the incorporation in the State of Illinois is concerned. We do not propose to permit proxies to be used, and if we have to go outside of the State of Illinois to do it, we will do so I wish to move a reconsideration of that clause which pertains to the ratification of the committee's actions in so far as it related to the incorporation in Illinois, and substitute for it some other state to be left at the discretion of the executive board."

Mr Zahler seconded the motion, adding: "Politics have been played too much and that has been the trouble in the city of Chicago."

After further suggestions Sam Bullock's motion that the matter be left in the hands of the executive board and that the organization be incorporated under the laws of New York state, was carried

A motion for adjournment being in order, Mr. Rembusch, as the last word, desired to say, that "the reason we fought for amalgamation, and did amalgamate, was because we thought it would help the boys over there."

"America" was then sung, and the convention was adjourned until next year, at St. Louis.

BALL CLOSES WEEK'S PROGRAM.

As a grand finale to the week's convention a ball was held in the large ballroom of the Hotel Sherman. It was announced by the management that a number of motion picture stars would be in attendance to mingle with the six hundred guests in attendance. Miss Lillian Walker and Dolores Casinelli were the only ones who put in an appearance. J. Stuart Blackton was requested to introduce the players.

Dancing was preceded by a concert by the Great Lakes Naval Band of sixteen pieces, led by Paymaster Doyle and Chief Yeoman Mason.

On Saturday noon Miss Walker was entertained at luncheon by the Hamilton Club, which is the largest organization of business men in the City of Chicago.

CONVENTION PARAGRAPHS.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Rembusch motored from Indianapolis to Chicago to attend the A. E. A. national convention. A short distance north of LaFayette, Ind., on a rough spot in the road caused by deep ruts, the car rebounded and threw Mrs. Rembusch, who sat in the back seat, violently upward against the top of the cover, breaking one of the bones in her nose and causing a primary hemorrhage. Mr. Rembusch drove to the nearest small town, where the flow of blood was stopped and the wound dressed. Mrs. Rembusch treated the accident as a trifling incident, and was more disturbed over the accompanying discoloration of her features than by the pain. Before the convention was over, however, she was able to enjoy her stay in Chicago and escape from the seclusion of her apartments at the Hotel Sherman.

On Wednesday, September 4, at the invitation of Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, a party of exhibitors and members of the press visited the big plant. They were escorted through the various departments and many of them were greatly interested, having never before been priviledged to see the interior of a big moving picture plant and studio in action. The various processes in the making of moving pictures, from the studio to the screen, were explained and illustrated.

Two sets were working in the studio at the time, in charge of director Jack Byrn and his assistants. The perforating, developing, printing, tinting, drying, title and assembling rooms were each visited in turn, much to the edification and pleasure of the enthusiastic sightseers.

Specimens of the Rothacker photography, developing and printing were next shown on the screen and received the hearty approval of the spectators.

The party was conveyed to and from the plant in motor busses provided by Mr. Rothacker, and everything passed off most pleasantly, as is usual and customary.

A meeting of the members of the First National Exhibition Circuit was held at the Congress Hotel Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of convention week. The meeting was held behind closed doors.

On Wednesday evening, September 3, Peter J. Schaefer entertained all of the out-of-town members at a dinner given in the South Shore Country Club. Among the guests were J. A. Berst, New York; Robert Lieber, Indianapolis; William Sievers, St. Louis; Louis Blumenthal, New York; Alfred Black, Rockland, Me.; Ernest H. Horstmann, Boston; Herman J. Brown, Boise, Idaho; Ed Fisher, Seattle; Hector Pasmezoglu, St. Louis; Alfred Hamburger, Chicago; A. C. Rice, Algona, Iowa; Dan W. Chamberlain, Minneapolis; Tom Furniss, Duluth; Ed. O'Donnell, New York, and Hiram Abrams, New York.

Herman J. Brown, who owns the Majestic, Strand, Isis, and Comic in Boise, Idaho, and the Majestic and Orpheum at Nampa, Idaho, was one of the exhibitors to the convention who heartily enjoyed his experience. Mr. Brown is a man with a wonderful past record and experience in the exhibition of pictures. Indeed, his "film life" always reads like a novel.

Long before he became the controller of moving picture and vaudeville entertainment in Boise and Nampa, he had gained his experience in a hard field. Since 1905, when he opened the second moving picture theatre at Port Townsend, Washington, he has had an experience sufficient for any two men in the business. His Port Townsend house was called the "Rose," and seated about three hundred people. His program in those days consisted of one reel American-made film—when he could get it—and selections from the George Kleine product of Urban-Eclipse, Cines and Gaumont and Pathe films. The program was about three reels in length and was ground off, all day long, for an admission of 10 cents.

During his first three years in the business Mr. Brown built a circuit of nine theatres in the state of Washington, the first ever established there. Then he built three theatres in Seattle about 1909, after disposing of his former interests. He stayed in that city for about a year and a-half and sold out, afterward traveling on the road with Captain Kleinschmidt's Alaskan pictures. He visited England and traveled through Canada and the United States with other big road picture shows.

Mr. Brown has been in Boise about two years and started with one house. Now he has every theatre in Boise, except one small one, and two in Nampa.

Girls in Booths an Issue in Los Angeles

MEMBERS of the Motion Picture Operators' Union in Los Angeles took a stand on September 1, on the question of employing women and girls as operators, by demanding that managers of picture and vaudeville houses sign an agreement to employ only men in booths as long as the operators work is considered an essential industry, and that no support or encouragement be given to schools intended to instruct women and girls in the operation of projection machines.

M. J. Sands, business representative of Local No. 150, Motion Picture Operators' International Union, said that while several managers of theatres held out against signing the agreement, the majority of them have agreed to abide by the demands made by the Union. In explaining the action of the Union Mr. Sands said in part:

"We have no objection to women entering the business, but we demand that they supply the same amount of experience, technical and practical knowledge demanded of men operators, and be paid not less than men operators. We know where we stand. Our action was taken after conference with Captain Charles Connell, Government mediator, and legal advices from Washington, and the industry being classed as essential, no other than a local issue is involved. Men operators must serve two years' apprenticeship. We demand that women do likewise."

National Breaks Into Regular Production

THE National Film Corporation of America, which created the two big special features, "Tarzan of the Apes" and "The Romance of Tarzan," announces this week its entry into the field of general producers and tops its statement with the announcement that it now has under way and nearing completion its first two productions, in which Billie Rhodes and Henry B. Walthall are starred.

Billie Rhodes.

Under Isidor Bernstein's direction Billie Rhodes is finishing her first multiple reel production, "The Girl of My Dreams," from the Joseph M. Gaites play by the same name, in which Hyams and McIntyre starred on the road for five years and which enjoyed a highly prosperous season at the Criterion Theatre, New York.

This will be the first feature for Miss Rhodes, although she has been starred in several hundred polite comedy features and by reason of the immense distribution given her pictures, has developed a market well in advance of her first big production.

Henry Walthall will be seen in "And a Still Small Voice" with Bertram Bracken directing and William N. Aaronson in general authority. Louis W. Chaudet is in charge of the directorial work of the Rhodes picture, with Isidor Bernstein in general supervisory of all National productions.

Harry Reichenbach, who is Eastern representative for the National, leaves this week for France, Italy, Switzerand Great Britain on Government business, and during his absence the National affairs will be in the hands of Mrs. Hartup. Mr. Reichenbach will return early in the winter and resume his charge of the concern's affairs.

Ormi Hawley Engaged as Caruso's Leading Woman

WHEN Enrico Caruso appears in his second Artcraft picture, "Prince Cosimo," which is now in course of production at the Fifty-Sixth Street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, he will have as his leading woman Ormi Hawley, whose beauty and talent as an actress have been more or less familiar to motion picture audiences for the past five years.

Miss Hawley is a native of Holyoke, Mass., and is a niece of former Governor Hawley of the Bay State. Possessing a fine soprano voice she was educated for the concert stage at the New England Conservatory of Music. A career on the stage was more appealing to her, however, and she spent two years in stock as leading woman, finally forsaking the spoken drama for the screen. She first appeared as a star in the Lubin production, "The Ragged Earl," and has been featured and starred by several other organizations during the past five years. Her last appearance in a Famous Players-Lasky picture was in "The Antics of Ann," in which Ann Pennington was starred.

In "Prince Cosimo," Miss Hawley has the role of a young American girl who is studying music in Rome, where she first meets the Prince, played by Caruso. There her music professor informs her finally that her voice is no good and that she had better return to America.

Caruso is making good progress in the production under the direction of Edward Jose. The scenes laid in Italy have been completed, and the company is now working in sets representing interiors in the Bohemian district of New York. During the past week three sets have been in constant use, with a minimum of interruption in sequence, so that it is expected that the actual work of filming will be finished considerably sooner than at first hoped for.

Indianapolis Exchangemen Decide to Help Each Other

WITH a view to furthering the interests of motion picture exchanges throughout Indiana by a mutual exchange of ideas an organization to be known as the Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers has been perfected in Indianapolis by representatives of local film exchanges at a meeting at the Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce. Ten local exchanges are identified with the new organization, the officers of which are as follows:

President, J. G. Connor, of the Mutual Film Corporation; vice-president, H. M. White, of the World Film Corporation; secretary, R. G. Brusch, of the Chamber of Commerce; treasurer, Floyd Brown, of H. Lieber & Company, also representing the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

The new organization will be to the film exchange heads, according to Mr. Connor, what the various state exhibitors' leagues and associations are to the exhibitors. Many important matters of interest to exchangemen, including the question of transportation facilities and others, will be discussed by the organization, he said. In the past the exchangemen of Indianapolis have been without any organization, and Mr. Connor is of the opinion that many benefits will be derived from the meetings.

YOU CAN'T STOP DIETZ.

Although previously rejected for military service, A. R. Dietz, formerly booker and office manager for Select Pictures Corporation's St. Louis branch, is so anxious to get in a few good wallops at the Huns that he has entered a St. Louis hospital for an operation that will qualify him for service in the United States navy. Mr. Dietz will enter the government's school for wireless telegraphy at St. Louis when he is discharged from the hospital, thereby adding one more name to Select's long list of men in the service.

Kerrigan Finishing "Three X Gordon."

"Three X Gordon," J. Warren Kerrigan's second Jesse D. Hampton production, is nearing completion. Like "Prisoners of the Pines," this story was written by Kenneth B. Clarke, and tells the story of a dissolute young man cut off by his father. The picture will be distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through General Film exchanges.

Department of Agriculture Has Conservation Campaign

A VISIT from Don Carlos Ellis, who is in charge of the motion picture activities of the United States Department of Agriculture, revealed the fact that this branch of the Government is in the act of pressing a vigorous campaign in the interests of food and fuel conservation. Mr. Ellis states that the department has on hand some forty to fifty thousand feet of film bearing on the subject and has under way as much more. At the present time a cameraman is scouring the Pacific Coast for material of a suitable nature to bring home to the public a sense of its responsibility in the conservation problem, to reveal the vast resources the nation already possesses and the various means of increasing as well as conserving them.

The best method of distribution is one of the problems with which the Department of Agriculture has to deal. Distribution is now being effectively made through the state agricultural colleges and theatres throughout the country The following list of the subjects now available will doubtless be of interest to our readers: "Forest Fire Fighting," "Logging Lodgepole Pine in National Forests," "Lumbering Yellow Pine in National Forests," "Railroad Tie Manufacturing in National Forests," "Live Stock Grazing in National Forests," "Recreation and Watershed Protection in National Forests," "Work of Forests Rangers," "Work of Boys' Pig Clubs," "Co-operative Cow Testing," "Types of Horses," "Poultry Raising," "Embryology of the Egg," "Co-operative Berry Growing in the Pacific Northwest," "Cotton Cultivation, Ginning, Marketing and Manufacturing," "Wool from Sheep to Cloth," "The Strawberry Industry," "Helping the Farmers of To-morrow," "Controlling the Gipsy Moth."

Those under way but not yet completed are: "Why Eat Cottage Cheese?" "Clean Milk Production," "Game in the Wichita National Forest, Okla."; "Wheat Harvesting and Marketing and Control of Wheat Diseases," "Cattle Raising," "Hog Raising," "The Rice Industry," "Drying Food in the Home," "Meeting the Farm Labor Problem," "Insect Enemies of Live Stock," "Prize Dairy Cattle," "Scenics from National Forests."

Latest Outing-Chester.

The latest of Mutual's Outing-Chester releases is entitled "Pin-Feather Piccaninnies." It is the tenth number of this splendidly photographed series, and presents in a most attractive manner feathered songsters and various kinds of water birds with their young.

Among the birds shown are the peacock displaying a wonderful array of tail feathers, the adjutant bird, the flicker or golden robin feeding its young in the hollow of a tree, the night hawk, yellow warbler and sparrow. There are also baby pheasants getting ready to fly and the blue-jay with her young; and still more attractive are the scenes on the Gulf coast islands, where the Government has taken a hand in the preservation of the sea birds. Here are great flocks of terns, with their eggs and young strewn promiscuously about the sands. Blue herons and black skimmers are also to be seen in abundance, as well as pelicans and black water stilts. This numbe will be classed among the best of the Outing-Chesters.

Ancient Mexico in Film.

One of the Educational Films Corporation of America's Mexican series, exhibited the week of September 1st at the Rialto Theatre, reveals many of the ancient architectural treasures of that land beyond our southern border. It is entitled "Mexico, Historic and Architectural," and is of intense interest in an archaeological sense. We have before remarked that the "Mexico Today" series, to which this number belongs, is responsible for enlightening us on many points concerning Mexico and of awakening us to a realization of her importance as a land of untold treasures.

Among the relics of ancient architecture presented in the picture are the Pyramid of the Sun and the Pyramid of the Moon, portions of which have been revealed only by excavation. Then there is the great pyramid in Mexico City which is fashioned much after the same style as those previously mentioned, and which was built before the period of the Aztecs. A museum containing relics found in excavating in the vicinity of one of these ancient structures suggests that China and even Egypt may have had a hand in the art of the period.

In addition to these prehistoric edifices are shown some of the more moderately ancient types of architecture, including the National Mexican Theatre, the National Mexican Library, old houses, monuments and other structures indicative of Aztec influence in Mexico. This picture comprises at least a full reel of film.

"From Guaria to Caracas" (Pathe-Post).

In this one-reel travel number the observer is once more treated to one of the old, original mountain-touring scenics. It begins with a city on the coast of Venezuela and continues over high mountain ranges into the interior of that South American country. Some decidedly picturesque views are caught by the camera and the subject is a pleasing one of the kind.

"Bit of Japan in California" (Universal).

The Screen Magazine No. 83 contains a number of scenes taken in a Japanese section of California. A fishing village is the center of attraction. Here these people have settled themselves to follow their natural pursuits, and are seen living in much the same fashion as in distant Japan. The picture is attractive and reveals a type of western life little known to the easterner.

Greiver Has Ford Weekly.

THE Greiver Distributing Company of 51 East 42nd Street has taken over the distribution of the Ford Weekly and is finding a large demand for this class of film among the best exhibitors. A couple of reels viewed by the writer were of excellent quality and were entitled "The Employment of Cripples" and "A Lesson in Canning."

The first named is of a philanthropic nature and voices loudly the responsibility which will face the nation and especially employers of labor after the war. Scenes taken in offices and manufactories of various kinds where cripples are holding down positions with the same efficiency as the physically fit are of great interest. The subtitles of the film appeal strongly on behalf of the man or woman forced by circumstances to accept charity, suggesting that employers meet the situation half way by including among their employees cripples who are able to cover certain kinds of work.

The second gives an illuminative example of canning by the cold pack method. Excellent closeups enable the observer to comprehend just what is being done.

"Salvaging Lead from the Rifle Ranges" (Universal).

The recovering of bullets fired at targets at Camp Logan, Texas, proves an interesting part of the 88th issue of the Screen Magazine. The picture gives closeups of the "dump" and also of individual particles, and covers all work in connection with the recovery of the lead which is again converted into bullets.

"The Second Line of Defense" (Paramount-Bray).

While it is well known that women are now employed in many activities heretofore reserved for men, it is but little known that Uncle Sam conducts schools for the purpose of training members of the fair sex in lines of work more vastly important to the Government than merely running elevators or street cars. The delicate task of filling high explosive shells is in many ammunition plants entirely consigned to the hands of women. Government trained girls are now assembling motors and making the wings of our aeroplanes. Even the making of sand molds for casting engine parts and shells is now relegated to the ladies, and other tasks under the careful schooling in Governmental hands are now ably and perfectly accomplished by women. In the 130th release of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph will be found a number of well-photographed and interesting scenes showing what is being done for and by the women of our country in these connections.

Educational's Coal Feature Progressing.

The Educational Films Corporation's project of a big spectacle dealing with "The Romance of Coal" and the recent coal crisis is making satisfactory progress under the direction of William Parke. The release of the picture may be expected with the advent of the really cold weather, when the interest in this subject will be more than academic. While patriotic purpose of maximum fuel production and conservation is being kept prominently to the fore, the chief end of the fiction story will be to entertain.

As the project has grown in the minds of its creators, the story has been strengthened and amplified, and several notable additions have been made to the cast. Among the players now working in it are J. H. Gilmour, the noted legitimate actor, who has also been seen in several screen productions; Hugh Thompson, Peggy Adams, Stephen Grattan, L. F. Kennedy, J. J. Dunn, Tom Burrough, Fred Radcliffe, Henri Rolf Otte and others.

Director Parke decided to make the living room and conference hall interiors at the Estee Studios, New York. An interesting series of scenes just concluded shows the events that led up to the shortage of coal cars and the appointment of the Fuel Administrator by President Wilson. The main scene involving the Federal authorities will be taken in Washington in the course of the next fortnight. At soon as the studio work is completed and the big Washington scene filmed, the company will go back to West Virginia on a final trip to finish up the outdoor stuff. On the July trip, some very notable scenic effects, scenes in the interior of mines and an automobile wreck and explosion were secured.

E. W. Hammons, vice president and general manager, was in West Virginia the first week of September on business connected with the picture. While there, he arranged for the final Allegheny locations that are to be used late this month.

Many Fox Theatres Book Educationals.

For the first time in the history of the William Fox enterprises, a large group of the Fox motion picture and vaudeville theatres have booked the Educational Films Corporation scenics on a regular monthly schedule. The houses referred to are the Academy of Music, Audubon, Crotona and Star in Manhattan and the Fox Liberty Theatre at Elizabeth, N. J.

At the Academy throughout Labor Day Week, Bruce's "Following the Trail of the Cayuse" held the place of honor, immediately preceding the Annette Kellerman spectacle, "Queen of the Sea." The combination proved a pleasing one. Forests, mountain peaks and glaciers of the "Cayuse" adventure, with the rugged campers, ponies and Great Dane of the Bruce outfit, were in decided contrast with the marine effects and mythic characters of the Kellerman feature.

William Fox's Audubon ran "The Glacier National Park" the last four days of Labor Day week, and on the same dates his Crotona offered the Bruce split-reeler, "Fishing for Fish" and "The Bull Thrower." "A Trip Through the Hawaiian Islands" and "Yosemite Valley" divided the week at the Star Theatre, Lexington Avenue and 107th Street. On Sept. 2 the new Liberty Theatre, Elizabeth, N. J., was added to the ever increasing Fox chain, and the management signalized the event (as did Rothapfel at the Rivoli opening last winter) by giving patrons the celebrated Bruce-Educational scenic, "The World o' Dreams."

The above houses will henceforth book clever scenics regularly, and it is the expectation that other members of the Fox group will shortly come in.

Form Film Salesmen's Club.

With an initial roster of sixteen members there has been organized what in future is to be known as "The Reel Fellows' Club of Connecticut." The club has been sponsored for the sole purpose of creating a better feeling of good fellowship among the salesmen representing the many film producing and releasing companies in both Boston and New York.

Headquarters have been established at 131 Meadow street, where meetings are held. The officers of the club are: William Weisfeld, Pathe, chairman; Ben Morganroth, World, treasurer, and L. S. Tobias, American Feature, secretary.

Something of this nature has long been in need in the Connecticut territory.

"Heart of New York" (Paramount-Bray)

An interesting subject of philanthropic quality will be found in the 130th issue of the Pictograph in which we learn how the Federation for Child's Study look after the recreational and vocation interests of the children of New York's lower East Side. The Madison House furnishes a joyful meeting place for the children who have only the streets to play in. Here they are entertained in suitable ways, and those who have arrived at the working age are given useful occupations. The pictograph cameraman has succeeded in obtaining scenes of exceptional interest.

Official War Review, No. 9 (Pathe)

Certain features of this instalment will bring rounds of applause from an audience, notably the views of troops being transported across the Atlantic. This is one of the best set of views yet shown of this remarkable feat. Other items include views of soldiers marching on the Western front and assisting the refugees in the war stricken territory. The living flag at the close is a big feature.

Official War Review No. 10 (Pathe).

Anyone who does not already thoroughly understand the brutalities wrought by the Hun will do so after looking at this number. It goes over certain parts of France abandoned by the Hun in his retreat, picturing flaming towns, falling buildings, orchards ruthlessly cut down and every manner of devastation. A bombed hospital is pictured; also funeral services held for the nurses and wounded soldiers who were killed in it. Engineers are shown repairing roads and bridges, indicating that the work of reconstruction is already proceeding.

Scenes from Burlingham Travel Series To Be Released by Sherry and Inter-Ocean.

BURLINGHAM FILMS ARE NOW SHOWING

Sherry Service Will Release in America Work of Explorer—Inter-Ocean Gets Foreign Rights

AFTER months of waiting on the part of the public the interesting series of films photographed by Frederick Burlingham, the traveler, mountain climber and lecturer, has found fitting channels of release on both continents. Thirty reels of film comprise the series, in which adventure and humor are leading qualities, which will be handled in America by the William L. Sherry Service, and the foreign rights will be controlled by the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation.

The first of the series, shown at the New York Strand, where they will be exhibited at intervals of two weeks, was entitled "Facing Death on the Blumisalp." It is a remarkable picture for more reasons than one. It is well photographed, carefully tinted, and contains one scene alone which many cameramen would give much to have had the opportunity of photographing. This is where, in the climb to the almost inaccessible Blumisalp, an overhanging ice cornice breaks off, crashing hundreds of feet below, leaving the startled climbers on the very edge of an abyss. Mr. Burlingham had just passed over this spot with his camera and was in the act of photographing his guides as they made the ascent behind him when the accident occurred.

Mr. Burlingham is a Baltimorean, and had been absent from his native land for fourteen years when he returned some months ago, bringing with him his large collection of scenes photographed in little known parts of Switzerland, in France and along the Mediterranean, Italy, England and Wales. A descent of 1,200 feet inside the crater of Vesuvius or the ascent of the Matterhorn, Mount Blanc, and the Jungfrau appear to be child's play to this American explorer. Not long ago a book by him, entitled "How to Become an Alpinist," was issued by a London publisher, which it is said should have been called "How to Get Killed in the Alps."

When the Police Were Slow.

"When I was in Naples after the Vesuvius film," said Mr. Burlingham, "Professor Marcali of the Royal Observatory said going down at that time was the most dangerous thing a sane man could do. He refused to sanction the expedition and even refused me a rope. The police prefect of Naples actually gave orders to prevent me going, but the Naples police are rather slow, and I heard about it only after my return to London. Besides getting the film I brought back a unique collection of photographs and highly colored crystals from the inside, which are now safe in the South Kensington Museum.

"Of course I have had some narrow escapes, and some day probably won't come back. However, I would rather finish at the bottom of a steep ice slope than die miserably in bed. The sensation of falling is extraordinary and really very interesting. I experienced this on the Jungfrau. On the steepest part, near the Rotthal Sattel, where the best alpinists use infinite caution, I was forced to unrope, set up the camera and remain alone in order to get my guides climbing in the picture.

How Burlingham Took a Slide.

"A little later, in changing a position while alone, my outside leg went into a hidden crevice, upsetting my balance and sending me careening head first down the slope. I shot down about 200 feet in a few seconds, but by a vigorous use of my ice axe I managed while falling to get right side up and gradually slowed up. My first impression was one of chagrin for my guides to see me in such a ludicrous posture and then one of disgust for having wasted precious time and having to reclimb the steep slope.

"I discovered, however, that when falling one does not have to think. The instinct of self-preservation controls automatically every action, leaving one free to think about his girl at home or anything else agreeable.

"Of course, in working on the Matterhorn or Blumisalp or nearly any of the big climbs one must unrope and work alone unless one cares to carry up extra guides, which are expensive and besides it isn't being game. The account of how we were all nearly killed on the Blumisalp by the breaking of an overhanging ice cornice is already known.

"To my mind the interest in these films lies in the fact that not one person in a million will ever see these scenes firsthand, and yet every intelligent person has a certain craving to know what it is like just under, say, the summit of the Matterhorn.

There Are Military Scenes, Too.

"Only a few of my films, however, are mountain climbing. I have used considerable ingenuity to get the necessary variety. When the Swiss general staff, for instance, asked me to get some manoeuvres of cavalry I accepted, but found even staff officers could not handle troops for the movie camera.

"Being an American with plenty of nerve I eventually told them frankly that I would have to give the orders if the pictures were to be taken properly. To my surprise they retired to their automobiles and sent the orderlies to me. I am against militarism, but ordering cavalry regiments around is some sport.

"Among the other thirty films I have are scenes taken in unknown Switzerland, where the peasants speak a patois of German words five hundred years old mixed with the language of the Romans a thousand years ago. These peasants did not know there was a war, bake bread only twice a year and eat meat several years old.

"One of my newest films is the arrival of the French and British war prisoners in Good Samaritan, Switzerland. This is filled with poignant scenes.

"In all my work I have had special facilities given me from the president of the Alpine Republic down to officials in England, Wales, France and Italy."

UNIVERSAL GETS OFFICIAL FILM.

The Universal, through its president, Carl Laemmle, has procured the exclusive rights of distribution in the United States for the official British war pictures, entitled "Fighting for Freedom." The pictures are a series of seven episodes, to be released weekly. They depict up-to-the-minute scenes of British war activities on the land, sea and in the air.

Drossner Reaches New York.

Charles Jean Drossner, author and producer of one of the most spectacular photoplays made in Europe since the outbreak of the war, "The Life of Columbus or the Discovery of America," arrived in New York on September 5.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Form Hen Clubs.

BECAUSE of the increasing demand made upon the draft boards for men for service, the natural supporters of the motion picture show are steadily decreasing in numbers. The man who used to bring his girl to see the pictures two or three times a week is now going to the pictures at some Liberty theatre or sees them in the Y. M. C. A. huts at the front. This being the case, it would seem to be worth while to pay especial attention to the girls they leave behind them. They will come if they are coaxed, but they may feel a little self conscious at first when they come alone. Direct a part of your advertising to them. Set aside a "service section"—flag draped—for the wearers of the service flags without men escorts. Make them feel at home, and pretty soon the girls will form the habit of coming alone or in pairs and you'll have at least half of the old business to add to what you get from those new patrons who now come to pictures to find relaxation. Work all possible angles, and work them nicely. Do not let it appear that your efforts are directed to trade-getting, but so frame your appeals as to suggest that your concern is for the girls who are left behind—then get into that frame of mind where this is really true, and you'll be the proper sort of host.

Duplicators.

The Third Street theatre, Easton, Pa., which recently turned to duplicated letters, now goes the rest of the way and uses a special sheet instead of the fine house stationery. If you use one of these devices it is well to remember that you get the best impression on cheap paper. It does not have to be too cheap to lose effect, but if you get the right stock of wood pulp you'll get a clearer print and save money at the same time. It is useless to waste good linen stock on mimeographing.

Getting a New Angle.

Given any smart subject, you can clean up with it if you work intensively. Many people cleaned up with "The Venus Model," but George J. Schade, of Sandusky, Ohio, worked it for a full clean up. He saw in it chances for special exploitation and he took those chances. Here was a well known star, an interesting picture—and a chance to make money, so he went to work. There is a summer resort near Sandusky. He had a duplicate of the swimming suit in the story made and a professional model paraded the beach in this dress, wearing a ribbon streamer lettered with the title of the play and the house name. A silver cup "donated by Mabel Normand" was put up for the best woman swimmer, limited to entrants from Erie County, and about 10,000 persons went down to the docks to witness this widely advertised contest. The cup was, of course, displayed in a jeweler's window with a large placard. The house front was dressed with cut outs of Miss Normand in the suit, and another cut-out was used as the centre of a display in a store window. Some managements have been inclined to hoot at the suggestion that dry goods stores will hook up with a film attraction, but can you imagine any more timely display than the bathing suits and the cut out will serve as an attractor to the store as well as the theatre? Perhaps stores will not hook up with the house, but here is a forty-foot

The Schade Theatre, Sandusky, Showing Mabel Normand Cut-outs for "The Venus Model."

Hooking Up a Display of Bathing Suits with "The Venus Model" to the Profit of Both Store and Theatre.

Exhibit A to prove to the contrary. Because of the size of the reproduction the lobby display pictures do not show up here well, but a full set were used in the window in addition to two portrait poses, and the window is that of the largest department store in town. And the store took its own newspaper space to advertise the display. As a result better than good business repaid the extra investment, and the investment was not a particularly large one. If you merely run a picture theatre, you take the films and shoot them through the machine to some profit, but if you manage a house you can clean up money by doing stunt stuff. Mr. Schade has the right idea, and he is a manager.

Black Backings.

Here are two advertisements used by the Star, Portland, Oregon, for two Universal subjects. It will be noted that where there is much lettering the cut is mortised to let in type. Both drop twelve inches on the page, one being three and the other five columns wide. The MacLaren display is rather striking, but it is not as effective as that for "Smashing Through," in which the picture copies the title. Both, however, take up space to good advantage and fight down anything else on the page. Many of the full-page advertisements in this paper can be worked up into good advertising art copy at small cost. Ever try it?

Two Black Background Cuts with Mortises for the Important Type Announcements. One is Three and the Other Five Twelves.

Ruff Stuff.

Ralph Ruffner, of the Rialto, Butte, Mont., goes to the other extreme in advertising the Allies' Official War Review. Instead of a drawn design and the usual glowing talk, he took a three tens and issued a dignified announcement with a "Notice" in 24-point Gothic and the rest in eight and ten-point. It merely recites that the Allies have combined their forces to jointly release their pictures through the Division of Film Committee on Public Information, and that they will be shown four days each week at the Rialto. Standing as it does in such contrast with the general run of Ruff stuff, it is double effective. In addition he used an eight-foot shield above the marquee, on which was lettered the name of the release and "Owned and released by the U. S. Government." A musician was engaged from an army camp to blow a call before inserting a card carrying one of the current subjects, and the scheme worked nicely until some other sensitive patriot objected to the commandant and the soldier was withdraw, though soldiers and marines have been freely used to advertise many semi-government films. For Mary Pickford in "How Could You, Jean," he used:

Mary loved the cows,
Mary loved the chickens,
See this little photoplay,
You'll laugh to beat the dickens.

He also took "See Mary Pickford Kiss the Cow" from the Publicity Number and ran it on the screen and in the advertising. Here is some more Ruff talk:

Perhaps "the boys" can use the two little bits herewith. We keep pegging for the unusual; to slip in a surprise here and there, sort of "yuh-never-know-what-to-expect-in-this-theatre" feeling. The Rialto is using Pathe's "The House of Hate" as a filler on the three-day end of the week, and the town is groggy over "The Hooded Terror" and his pursuit of poor Pearl White. It has been customary in the past to end the various episodes with a slide announcing the continuation of the story, "next Thursday, Friday and Saturday," but on the 9th episode we side-stepped this and used the following: "Lady in Butte says she knows who "The Hooded Terror" is—that he has darned near wrecked her life several times." The usual laugh which ends each episode of these serials was doubled in this instance, for it hooked up a localism and made people wonder who the "lady" is. This slide was then followed by the regulation announcement as to the next date showing.

Then in this week's Saturday Evening Post is a splendid article containing a bit of verse being sung by the boys "over there." Coming, as it did, just at this time when we are doing so gloriously on the Western Front, it made splendid ammunition for the screen. We figure on keeping the screen alive with other things than just plain announcements as to coming attractions and the like, so that during the running of the slides, a patron is always on the alert, not knowing just what is coming next. Into this part of the program we inserted these two slides, one of them being the verse in question: "The same American spirit that is knocking fire out of the Boches just now is responsible for this bit of song from 'over there'": "Here comes the dough-boys with dirt behind their ears. Here comes the dough-boys; their pay is in arrears. The cavairee, artilleree, the lousy engineers, they couldn't lick the dough-boys in a hundred thousand years." Cooked up a little fife and drum tune, which the orchestra played softly, and at the end the applause nearly raised the roof. It's a sure-fire kick in an ordinarily quiet place in the show.

Ruff used to stop at writing words, but now that he is setting lyrics to music, we suppose that the next step will be a comic opera. We're willing to buy a couple of tickets to encourage real art.

Indianapolis Advertising.

Here is a characteristic advertisement from S. Barret McCormick, of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis. The story deals with the experiences of a cub reporter, which makes the newspaper frame appropriate.

A Characteristic Three Elevens for a Newspaper Story from the Circle, Indianapolis.

Apparently a local newspaper has been used, but provided with a special heading by the artist, and the centre mortised for type, for McCormick knows that the type is far more easily read than the best of hand-lettering, and he wants the fullest effect when he pays for space. As usual the house signature works in well, that signature seems to work well anywhere. The entire layout is excellent and it will not be noticed that by the use of the allied standards he gives the war reviews a special distinction without using too much space. This is easily the most attractive display on the double page that contains most of the summer theatre advertising. It stands out above the rest, while taking no more space than the others, and even the travel pictures are invitingly presented, the "Ex-Cannibal Carnival," telling that they have petticoat police and a cannibal chief who is worried about his excess profits tax. It does not merely announce the pictures of a certain place. It makes you want to see them. Most of the space in the Indianapolis papers is a double inch and a half or two inches; about the best of these in a recent issue are reproduced here. The top display is two inches full and the bottom an inch and a half. There is very little appeal in these small spaces. If the title is gotten over, the advertiser seems content, though much more might have been said in the two-inch space than that it was a true-to-life drama. The Regent even carries an underline in its inch and a half space. Three elevens seems to be a favorite large size for Indianapolis. All three large advertisements are the same drop, though one is made to carry a triple advertisements. The triple display is well held together and the attractor cut works for all three. It would be just as good an advertisement as though each had three elevens had there been some selling talk to the Lyric and Isis spaces, and this could have been done by cutting down the size of the type a trifle and making up with white spacing. Where there is a long title, as in the case of the Isis attraction, we think that to stagger the lines will give a better result than balancing. The Rialto signature is rather involved. The lettering is characteristic, but a new form of signature seems to be used each week. The Crystal seems to use "true to life" as a trade mark, for it appears in other advertisements. It is bad enough used one week, but to use it regularly is to strip it of the last vestige of appeal. It pays to take the time to dig up a good selling line, especially for a small space where but a single appeal can be made. Generally the company press stuff carries something, or a line can be taken from the Advertising Aids department. Something better than "true-to-life" can be arrived at without half trying.

The Right Idea.

"The Gold-Winner," the new Goldwyn publicity sheet, has the right idea when Editor Hunt Stromberg announces:

Exhibitors will get from the service department a new and practical exploitation plan for every Goldwyn picture released to them. Our work on these exploitation methods will start on the day the picture is begun at our Fort Lee studio and the entire plan, with everything that is a part of it, will be completed as soon as the picture itself is completed. This means that the exploitation plans and accessories will be in the offices of all

Goldwyn branches from one to three months in advance of each release and the exhibitors will receive the plans and materials from two to four weeks before the scheduled showing of the picture.

In this way the exhibitors will have ample time to carry out the plans which they could not do if they learned of them only a few days before the release of the production. The service department will aid exhibitors to a more profitable use of the accessories, which, in the last year, have proved much higher in quality and serviceability than the accessories of any other company.

New ideas and new effects in accessories already are being furnished and more innovations will be provided to individualize the house playing Goldwyn pictures.

The time to prepare for exploitation is as soon as the subject is known instead of hustling stuff together at the eleventh hour. If Goldwyn adheres to that policy—and we think it will—it will mean money to Goldwyn patrons.

For Kellerman.

Sooner or later Fox is going to release the new Kellerman picture. File this cut used by English's away for future use. It may suggest something for the Kellermann picture if not before then. This is four columns by 10½ inches, and it looks like a lot more on the page. This advertises a vaudeville house, but the idea is there for a picture. It pays to study the dramatic as well as the picture advertising, for the general idea is the same, and some of the veteran dramatic press men pull with comparatively small space.

A Four-Column Display 10½ Inches Deep That Was Used for a Vaudeville Theatre, But Which Can Be Adapted to Marine Pictures.

Here's an Idea.

W. A. Steffes, of the Northern theatre, Minneapolis, is sending letters to all men drafted from his section of the city reading:

> As you are about to leave for the U. S. A. Training Camp we wish to present to your dependent a complimentary pass good for thirty days at North Minneapolis' Leading Play House, THE NORTHERN, 401 Twentieth Avenue N.
>
> As we are unable to learn the name and address of your dependent we are enclosing you a blank pass for you to fill in with the name and address of your dependent, also your name in full. This pass should be made to your father, mother (if married your wife) if not married and folks are not living make it to your next nearest relative.
> When you give this pass to your relative please tell them not to hesitate to use it every change of program.
> We would gladly make it for more than thirty days if it were not that new men are leaving every month and we are going to try and do this same thing with every drafted man in the third ward.
>
> The only restrictions we place on this pass is that it must be used only by the person to whom you make it out. If children try to use it we will take it up and destroy it.
> Holder must pay 2c. War Tax at Box Office. This money all goes to the Government.
>
> Trusting that this pass will be used at every change of program, and that owner will enjoy our shows and like our theatre we wish to remain, Yours for victory,
> NORTHERN THEATRE,
> W. A. Steffes, Mgr.
> P. S.—For every promotion you receive we will give you another thirty-day pass to be used by the folks at home. Please notify us of promotion.

This is an excellent idea, but we do not like the use of the word "dependent." It seems to us that some of the men may resent the suggestion that they are leaving dependents behind. "For someone you leave behind" would be a preferable phrasing. The second paragraph might be made to read:

> Send it to your wife, your mother, father, sister, brother, or the girl you hope some day will be your wife, that we may: not help them to forget your going, but to give them a few moments from remembering. Tell whoever you send it to not to hesitate to use it for each change of program.

It is not only a pleasant courtesy, but it will give the stay-at-homes the theatre-going habit that will help relieve the lonesomeness. Names and addresses can easily be ascertained from the local draft board. This is a stunt worthy of imitation. Try it.

Three a Day.

The Hardwick Brothers, Clovis, N. M., get out two and three throwaways a day to offset the fact that there is no daily paper in town. They get out one in the morning and another in the afternoon, with a third in the evening on Saturday to offset the municipal band concert which generally has some effect upon business if a fight is not put up. The largest is 10x18, with one 7x16 and the smaller 5x10. This last is the one used for the band concert. It is purposely made smaller to permit it to be handled easily in the crowd. Three in one day or even two, for that matter, is going some, but it brings results, and that is what the Hardwicks are after. The first throwaway is used for street work in the mornings, the large one is used for street and house distribution in the afternoon. We think it would pay the Hardwicks to start their own daily four-pager with a little local news to carry the advertising. They use a weekly program, but they know they can pull in enough more business with the daily appeal to pay for the printing—if the stuff is done properly, and they take pains to have even their throwaways just right.

Three Throwaways Used to Offset the Lack of a Daily Paper in Clovis, N. M.

An Invitation.

Harold Salters, Secretary, Local Union 263, Richmond, Indiana, says:

> Desire to express my thanks and appreciation for what you did in Washington. The order as first issued, certainly would have been the death blow to wage scales and conditions all over the country, hence every projectionist should deeply appreciate your work in securing the modification of the order as applied to them. In a recent issue of the department I notice you are about to make a trip down this way, and wonder if it would be possible to get you to stop here. We need a real stirring up, and may be if you will come and land a few body blows of good, hard truth, it will wake the men up and get things going. We have quite a few managers who think projectionists can be made in just a few days. Your talk would certainly be interesting to them.
> We did at one time have some real projectionists here, but what with the draft, enlistments and low wages, many of them have left. It is really amusing how quickly some chaps learn it all. I have been in the business ever since the days of the water rheostat and box for the film to run into instead of a takeup. I find I still have much to learn. We have one manager who will not recognize the union. He takes a boy into his projection room and in just a few days said near-infant is swelling around telling those who will listen how much he knows.

Wrong! The boy is merely exposing his ignorance by trying to talk of things he knows nothing about. No, brother, you are in error. You have no theatre manager doing anything of that sort. Managers don't do things that way. Possibly you may have a mis-manager who employs inexperienced boys for projection, placing several hundreds of dollars of fragile films, the property of others, at the mercy of a child, to say nothing of the projection machinery and an input wattage of considerable amount. It is hard to say which is the bigger "kid," the boy or the man who is unwise enough to employ him. As to the trip down that way, why friend Salters, the trip was made and finished long ago. Would have stopped in Richmond had your union requested it at the time. Next time be a little more speedy in sending your request. I note that in a part of your letter, omitted in publication, you say "it is hard to get the men to come across with $4 for a handbook, hence projection is not what it should be." Um, if one of your members started in to learn to be a doctor would he not immediately purchase and study books? Why? Certainly he would, because unless he did so he could not get a license to practice medicine. He would be a danger instead of a help to society. Well, the projectionist who lacks knowledge also has capabilities for great damage. He injures the producer, the artist, the exchange, the industry and the public. He enormously increases the overhead expense of the industry through waste which adequate knowledge would enable him to avoid. Your members are making a serious mistake in refusing to invest in knowledge. Your local and its members want better wages and better conditions, but they are not taking the right course to convince theatre managers that they are really worth more. My advice to them is not only get and study the handbook (which hundreds of the best projectionists in the country have pronounced to be worth many times its price), but every other book bearing directly or indirectly on their profession. This advice is given in all sincerity, and is intended solely and entirely for the best interests of the Richmond local and its members; also of the motion picture industry of Richmond.

Interesting Question.

The inventor of a home projector says:

> Recently one of the Bausch & Lomb experts suggested to us the use of a 6 or 12-volt automobile headlight lamp (concentrated filament) for our daylight projector, saying we would, he believed, get as much, if not more illumination at our aperture, without overflowing it, than with the 300-watt lamp shown you while here. This latter, you will recall, has a filament concentrated to ⅜-inch, which is larger than our picture, so that even if our picture and light source were equi-distant from the condenser we would still have a larger spot than required. This idea of the auto lamp appeals to me, even though it would require resistance to take care of surplus voltage. It would greatly please me to learn your views.

This is a matter which could only be determined by experiment. The thing which strikes me is that the auto lamps have, or all of them that I am acquainted with have, just a single filament. This would, I think, give you a very bright line in the picture, shading off to either side. You see the screen is in reality a pretty badly out-of-focus photo of the light source, hence it follows that the light source must have an area sufficient to be magnified into a spot sufficient to cover the aperture, every portion of this area being of practically equal brilliancy. Spherical aberration is the one thing which might possibly diffuse or distribute the light from a single filament over the area well enough to make it do after a fashion, but I would have to see it done to believe it. If you try the experiment, let us know the result, please. I think you will find the B. & L. expert's opinion will need some expert fixing.

Unbalanced Wage Scales.

It seems to me the wage scales adopted by projectionist unions, taken as a whole, are not very well balanced. In this I, of course, present merely my own views and opinion. There will be those who will take issue with me, I presume, but let us examine into the matter from what seems the standpoint of common sense.

In the first place, may we not assume that the theatre exacting a high admission price, say 25 and 50 cents, ought, as a matter of course, regardless of its seating capacity, to present to its audiences a better grade of silent drama, and to place it on the screen in the best possible manner—a better manner than does the theatre charging ten or fifteen cents? Is not that proposition just plain common sense? Confining ourselves to the one item under discussion, ought not such a theatre employ a higher grade of skill in its projection room than we might expect to find in the projection room of the ten or fifteen cent house?

You will concede this as a matter of course, will you not? No argument possible on that point, is there? All right, then, let us then ask what is the usual method of securing superior skill, knowledge and ability in the ordinary commercial walks of life? If you were erecting a motion picture theatre and really desired to secure the very best talent in the country in its projection room would you offer, as an inducement to that talent, a small wage or a large one? And if you wanted the very best there is would you not offer extraordinary monetary inducement? Sure you would, because you could not possibly get the best in any other way!

Very well, then, if it is right that high admission theatres have high class projectionists in their projection room, then it is right and proper that wage scales take cognizance of that proposition and set up a suitable difference as between the scale of the ten and fifteen cent theatre and the 25 and 50 cent one. Nor can I see that seating capacity has anything to do with the matter. The man who pays 50 cents in a 500-seat house is just as much entitled to expect the screen service provided by a high class projectionist as has the one who pays the same admission in a 1,000-seat house. Deny it if you can! It seems to me there is too much of the savor of "what the traffic will bear" in the wage scale which pays too much attention to seating capacity and too little to difference in admission price. If the theatre has small seating capacity that is no fault of the projectionist, nor should projection be made to suffer on that account.

Of course my argument is based entirely on the supposition that the higher wage will attract the superior skill, knowledge and ability, which, viewed broadly, is an absolute fact, though its operation may, however, be in some degree interfered with by arbitrary rules of precedence, which same are in large measure put into effect to prevent favoritism in placing men on jobs by union officials. But such objectionable items will elimnate themselves in due time. The business is new. The projectionist end of it is but just beginning to discover that it is a sure-enough cog in the machine. Day by day projectionists are becoming better aware of the possibilities of their calling. Every year sees a higher average level of knowledge, a greater respect for the profession, and a greater demand that others respect it. Projectionist unions are gradually reaching a higher plane, both as a whole and in their individual membership. Every year sees theatre managers more willing to concede the importance of the projectionist and the projection room. And in all this there is great cause for encouragement.

The war will make sad inroads, which will set us back to a considerable degree, but that cannot be helped, and what cannot be cured might as well be cheerfully endured. And, anyhow, what will now happen is as nothing to what would have happened had the projectionist been declared non-essential, since that would have immediately taken at the very least two-thirds of the men Heavens, what an awful mess we would have had! It is discouraging just to think of it

But we are off our subject. To sum up let me remark that the formation of wage scales for projectionist locnls should have careful thought and study. In my opinion the highest scale nnd the high ndmission ought to pretty well go together. This matter could be discussed by union officials with benefit to all.

Navy Man Wants In.

From a U. S. S. comes the following:

> Am writing to ask information with regard to joining the motion picture projectionists' union. What does it cost to join, and what salary does it pay. Am a first-class projectionist. Have been in the navy five years. Was never a member of a union It is my ambition to join the union and secure a good position after the war is over, as I feel qualified to hold down a really good job. If possible would like to get something while I am in the service.

This is a rnther remarkable letter. You need not tell us you have never belonged to a union. Your very nebulous idea of what n union is and how it works is ample proof of that fact. Each union sets its own initiation fee, which varies from five dollars to as high as one hundred and fifty The union does not pay a sainry to its members. It merely seeks to aid them in obtaining fair treatment in the matter of pay and working conditions. After the war is over and you are out of the navy you will have to hustle around and secure a position just as any other man would do. You can then make application to the union in whose jurisdiction the city or town you are in may happen to be. The union rule is that you must live within the jurisdiction of the union for six months before application for membership can be considered, but this may (or may not) be modified under the extraordinary conditions brought about by the war. Most likely it will be. You must then pass an examinntion as to your competency and pay your initiation fee. Some unions will let the latter be paid in installments. Joining the union is not the simple matter you seem to suppose. Men in unions have paid in money for years, and have undergone trials and hardships to secure for labor the conditions it now enjoys. If you wish to partake of the advantages they have fought for and won it is but right you pay a substantial initiation fee in lieu of the money they have been paying in for years in support of the movement by which you will very largely benefit. If you are a really competent projectionist this department and the industry will welcome you into the field when the time comes, as that kind of men are needed.

Businesslike.

Recently a department correspondent locnted in a small town wrote, saying he would like to get into a larger field, where there would be some chance for advancement—a most laudable ambition. He asked how he could go about joining n union, as I recollect his letter, it not yet having been returned to me. In his letter he mentioned, as evidence of competency, the fact that he had been on the roll of honor of the Projection Department fourteen (I think it was, though it may have been 2n) times. I sent his letter to the local nearest him, asking that he be advised as to whether or not he would be accepted into membership, provided he met the requirements of the local. I have before me a copy of the letter written the party by the president of the local in question, and let me say it is a credit to the local and the officer who wrote it. It is a straightforward, businesslike letter which goes straight at the heart of the matter. If all locals transacted business after this fashion what a splendid thing it would be. It is a disgraceful fact that at least four times in every five times where I refer a matter of this kind to a local it either does not bother to write the man at all, or else writes in such a way that no letter at all would hnve been better Here is a thorough businesslike union letter:

> Mr. ....., Dear Sir: Brother Richardson has informed me that you would like to join our local. I will bring the matter up at our next meeting, which is on the second Sunday of the month at 11 a. m. in Labor Temple Building I cnn see no reason why the local should object. In fact, I can see many reasons why we should want you, chief among them being the fact that we need men of your ability, nnd I would ask no better recommendation than your nnme on the Roll of Honor of the Projection Department so many times. Our initiation fee is fifty dollars, half with the application; balance in sixty days. I think we are going to want some men this fall, and would be very pleased to have you here. Our secretary will advise you as to our action in the matter after next meeting. Signed ....., President.

His Own Experience.

P. J. Thorp, Council Bluffs, Iowa, relates his experience as follows:

> Noticed in recent issues of department some data concerning the shutter. Will submt some of my own experience for your consideration. When I first took my present position was troubled with flicker unless projectors were run at excessive speed. Made a pasteboard shutter blade, its cutting binde just wide enough to show slight travel ghost both ways. Then cut the remaining blades to exactly the same width. I then cut strips of slide binder tape the length of the edge of the shutter blades and pasted them on the edge of each blade. This eliminated nearly all flicker. What do you think of the idea? I find that a shutter with all blades of equal area and light openings of equal area, but different from the blades, must be fitted to local conditions. I agree with Brother Burton Benwell, of Los Angeles, that a three-wing shutter having all openings of equal area, though of different area from that of the blades (all blades to be of equal area with each other also) will not flicker, but I also believe that everything depends on the local condition, to which the cutting blade must be fitted. Wrote you at handbook address (22 East 17th street), but received no reply. Can I get information from different lens manufacturers? (No, most likely not. They are all busy with government work.—Ed.). What is your preference in motor generator sets? Do you not consider the Hallberg O. K.? (Cannot give such information in the department. It would cause a near riot. Private information given for moderate fee. Yes, the Hallberg is a good machine. —Ed.) Stamps enclosed for question booklets.

The photo you sent would make a very poor cut, hence cannot use it. Your pasteboard shutter plan is perfectly correct, except that the saw-tooth part of it has no appreciable effect, one way or the other. Had you gone further and set your shutter at the dissolving point of the light rny (assuming that you have a projection lens of medium focal length), you could most likely have trimmed still more off the cutting blade, and have gotten a still better condition. To find the dissolving point pass some opaque object through the ray in front of the lens until a point is found where two shadows meet at the center of the screen. That will be your correct shutter position (distance from lens), but it may be so far out that you cannot reach it, or, if a very short focal length lens is used, it may be inside the lens barrel. But the position must be found after the condenser system is permanently fixed, because the moving of the condenser back or forward, or altering the distance from crater to condenser alters the distance of the dissolving point from the lens. Study these matters in the handbook. You are perfectly right in your conclusion that the revolving shutter must be fitted to the local condition.

A Pleasant Surprise.

Hearing n noise at my side recently I looked up to discover brothers John Griffith, Ansonia, Conn., nnd Frank Perry, projectionist at the Sterling Theatre, Derby, Conn., both members of Local Union 273, New Haven, Conn. These brothers nnd their wives hnd motored up to see me. We had a very pleasnnt visit. Brother Griffith hns been elected president of Local Union 273, which means that progress will be the order of business for that body. The New Haven local used to be a very live wire, but of late I have somehow had the idea that it has become rather inactive. If that is correct, it is up to the men of New Haven to get busy, for the body which does not advance usunlly goes backwnrd. New Haven has some good men and some good theatres, hence 273 ought to be right up in the front of things. How about it, boys?

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Three Players Featured in Triangle's "High Tide"

THREE stars are offered in "The Atom," Triangle's first release for the week of September 15, Pauline Starke, Belle Bennett and Harry Mestayer, whose first appearance under the Triangle regime was in "High Tide."

"The Atom," written and scenarioized by Catherine Carr, and produced under the direction of William Doland, with Elgin Leslie at the camera, tells of an actor Montague Booth. This matinee idol of the stock company suddenly loses his ephemeral glory because of an accident in which he is disfigured. Discouraged when the fickle public turn to a new idol, about to take the short route to oblivion, he is saved from suicide by Jenny, the little drudge of Miss Miggs' boarding house. She has long worshipped Booth as an idol, and in the hero worship and adoration of his little slavey he finds encouragement that he may live the life of a real hero.

Pauline Starke is Jenny, Belle Bennett portrays Belle Hathaway, a sweetheart of Booth's theatrical days, and Harry Mestayer is Montague Booth. In the supporting cast are Ruth Handforth, Gene Burr and Walter Perkins, who offers a human characterization of Oldson, the proprietor of a traveling medical show.

A play by Louis H. Kilpatrick, "Desert Law," featuring Jack Richardson, is the second release for the week of the 15th. It is described as a drama of the great West in which honesty wins a battle with lawlessness and despotism. Jack Conway, who directed this picture, is said to have furnished a play which fairly bristles with strong situations.

Jack Richardson is Rufe Dorsey, "The Boss of Brazos County," Al Whitman, a new Triangle player, is Donald McLane, homesteader and in love with Julia Wharton, the daughter of a wealthy rancher, played by Leotta Lorraine. George Pearce is a member of the supporting cast. George Elwood Jenks scenarioized this story and B. Edmond photographed it.

"Why I Should Not Marry" Classed as a Daring Picture

WHAT is said to be the weirdest, strangest and most daring production ever released by William Fox is now in the process of making at the Fort Lee studios. It deals with the ever burning question of marriage and discusses the problem from all angles.

"Why I Should Not Marry" is the title chosen for the play, and that in itself tells the story in a general way. It is being directed by Richard Stanton, who has selected an all-star cast for its presentation. Mr. Stanton is quoted as saying that the production affords the opportunity to show the underlying conditions from which marital happiness and the perfect union spring.

"I never enjoyed staging a production as much as I have 'Why I Should Not Marry,'" said Mr. Stanton at the studios the other day. "I have a perfect cast with which to work, a wonderful, appealing, impassioned story, and I want the play to be the best I have ever directed.

"It is not a sermon on marriage, but a forceful discussion of marriages, both bitter and happy. It has a moral that is bound to have its effect on both men and women and, all in all, combining its mystery and human appeal, it should be one of the big productions of the year. It will contain many surprises, new to filmdom."

Mr. Stanton has been working hard directing the company for the last three weeks and expects to have the production completed during the first week in October. Massive sets have been built and in order that the proper atmosphere may be obtained Mr. Stanton is working in three studios. In two of them large sets remain standing so they can be used at the director's discretion.

Specific details of the story have not been announced. All that has been given out thus far is that the play deals with marriage and exploits the love trials of a girl called the most beautiful in the world.

Adrian Johnson wrote the scenario and some of the ideas were developed from suggestions made by Richard Stanton. "Why I Should Not Marry" is to be put out on an independent basis.

Outing-Chesters Make Record.

The Outing-Chester travel pictures are reported by Mutual as setting a new record of bookings for single reel subjects. "The revenue from bookings of the Outing-Chester Pictures will exceed any single-reel subject ever released through Mutual," declared Assistant General Manager A. S. Kirkpatrick.

"The trade has recognized in no uncertain manner the unusual quality and individuality of these adventure pictures, and exhibitors are frank in asserting that the photography and assembling of these subjects have never been surpassed in pictures of their type. Favorable comments have been many on the clever titling, which is certainly out of the ordinary and carries the picture along as if the cameraman was telling the story of his adventures."

"Saba, the Astonishing," No. 12 in the series, is released by Mutual September 15. An intimate view of an extinct volcano rising 3,000 feet out of the Carribean Sea, and glimpses of an old Dutch town and its quaint inhabitants, make this one of the most delightful pictures in the series. The native girls of Saba are noted for their beauty, and many of them are shown in their picturesque garb.

"Wolves of Kultur" to Go All Over.

"Wolves of Kultur," the serial produced by the Western Photoplays, Inc., and distributed by Pathe, will be extensively posted on the billboards of the country. This fact is established by a statement from Vice-President Paul Brunet, which says, in part, that the serial be billed in many towns not previously covered by motion picture advertisers.

In compiling the list of towns and cities to be used in this campaign Mr. Brunet was careful to select for particular attention those places where picture audiences have not yet been educated to the serial picture. It is felt that constructive campaigning in such towns cannot fail to be profitable to exhibitors who have never yet booked a serial, but who are now booking "Wolves of Kultur" because of its strong and timely title and the character of its story. The small town exhibitor has not been neglected in this campaign. In the extensive list of places to be posted may be noted many towns of five or six thousand inhabitants.

Fritzi Brunette Making Bluebird.

Fritzi Brunette will be supported in her next Bluebird photoplay, "The Velvet Hand," by Fred Turner, Eugene Corey, William Conklin, Wedgwood Nowell, Carmen Phillips and Nicholas Dunaew. Douglas Gerrard is handling the megaphone on this production, which is from the pen of Edith Barnard Delano, the author of several of Mary Pickford's successes.

It is the story of a girl seeking vengeance for the murder of her brother, who finds that the guilty one is really the man her heart cries out for in love.

Fred Stone in "The Goat" (Artcraft).

"The Runaway Bride" Heads Pathe for September 15

THE title of the fifth episode of "Hands Up," the stirring western serial featuring Ruth Roland, which heads the Pathe program for the week of September 15, is "The Runaway Bride." Echo Delane, the heroine, whom the Incas have chosen as the bride of their Prince, starts to seek safety in the East. The Indians intercept the train by a short cut over the mountains and drop upon it from a bridge. Hands Up, the hero, and Echo escape by swinging to a bridge and riding away; but the Indians overtake them just as they are almost reaching safety.

"Crusaders-1917, Britain's Fight for Democracy in Palestine," the third release by Pathe of the Far Flung Battle Line, shows a momentous event in the history of the Christian world, the capture of Jerusalem by the British, which some students of the Book declare was prophesied centuries ago. The story is told in a succession of remarkable views of historical spots and the movement of the conquerors, who have wrested the holy city from Pagan control. Most impressive is the reading of General Allenby's proclamation from the tower of David and its procession of holy men of different sects who flle everywhere to meet the conqueror.

Harold Lloyd will be seen in one of the liveliest of the Rolin comedies, released through Pathe Exchange, Inc. It is called "Bees in His Bonnet." That tells the whole story, which means that the agile comedian, who is steadily growing in popularity, is on the jump. And from the manner in which the characters move in this laughable conceit it seems that they all might have been afflicted with bees. The farce has the real laughing sting.

The Post Travel Series released by Pathe on September 15 tells of "Punting with Sugar in British Guiana." The punts transport the cane, and in these prohibition times we learn with interest that this South American country is a paradise of sugar.

Good Cast for Betzwood Subject.

"For the Freedom of the East," the Betzwood Film Company production conceived and directed by Ira M. Lowry, has a cast of players in support of Lady Tsen Mei, the screen's solo Chinese star, distinguished for their achievement in the cinema.

The gripping propaganda melodrama of the Orient marks the debut as a star in motion pictures of Lady Tsen Mei. She is a Chinese girl of superior beauty and a singer well known to American concert and vaudeville audiences.

The featured masculine role is in the capable hands of Robert Elliott, perhaps best known for his splendid work with Mabel Normand in her patriotic Goldwyn Picture, "Joan of Plattsburg." Herbert Horton Pattee, a screen player of prominence, has splendid opportunities to give of his fine talents. He has the role of the Spider of Berlin. Another well-known motion picture player who has a role commensurate with his ability is Benjamin Hendricks, Jr.

Lai Mon Kim, who also is seen in pictures for the first time gives a noteworthy performance with the star, Lady Tsen Mei. Goldwyn, which distributed Mr. Lowry's "For the Freedom of the World," is also distributor of "For the Freedom of the East."

Unusual Cast for Rogers in "Laughing Bill Hyde"

REX BEACH, always noted for his choice of brilliant players to portray the remarkable types he creates in the Goldwyn picturization of his famous stories, fairly outdid himself in the selection of a cast for "Laughing Bill Hyde."

Certain that no man on the stage or screen was better fitted to play the name role than Will Rogers of the "Follies," the author and Goldwyn coaxed the celebrated lariat-throwing wit to make his debut before the camera in the role of Laughing Bill Hyde. Rogers is undoubtedly one of the best known performers on the stage. His impromptu, sparkling wit has made him a great favorite in every section of the country. Rex Beach and Goldwyn are certain his performance in "Laughing Bill Hyde" will make Rogers as popular on the screen as he is on the speaking stage.

Anna Lehr, identified with several successful screen productions, has the role of Ponotah, a half-breed, in "Laughing Bill Hyde." Before her advent in motion picture work Miss Lehr was a popular favorite in Broadway dramatic productions.

John Sainpolis, an actor of polish and finesse, is also well cast. Sainpolis' work with Mae Marsh in "Money Mad" and "All Woman" contributed not a little to the success of both Goldwyn productions. Mabel Ballin, another Goldwyn Pictures favorite, has a lovable role.

Another important part is intrusted to Clarence Oliver, prominent screen and stage player, who was seen to good advantage opposite Madge Kennedy in "The Service Star." Joseph Herbert, also a favorite in pictures, gives a splendid performance in "Laughing Bill Hyde." Dan Mason, a veteran of the screen and stage, has a part worthy of his talents. His best work on the screen has been done in "The Scarlet Letter," "The Slave" and "Thou Shalt Not Steal."

Robert Conville, who has frequently been seen in Goldwyn Pictures, completes the capital cast of "Laughing Bill Hyde."

Pauline Starke in "The Atom" (Triangle).

Fox's "18 to 45" Arouses Much Exhibitor Interest

THE Fox Film Corporation calls attention to the unique timeliness of the great Draft picture which William Fox has produced, "18 to 45." The ink has hardly dried on the trade press announcements of this picture than President Wilson signed the law which extended the Draft ages to take in all men between eighteen and forty-five years. While the motion picture industry was still marveling at the foresight and really inspired showmanship of William Fox in having a picture made on the Draft before it became a law the nation was reading President Wilson proclamation setting September 12 as the national registration day.

Letters from exhibitors and reports from Fox branch managers all over the country show that the William Fox announcement created a wide interest in the trade.

"This picture ought to be the greatest moneymaker ever produced," wrote one exhibitor. "With every man between the ages of eighteen and forty-five liable to military service the public interest in the effects of the new Draft surmounts everything else. In my town the only thing on everybody's lips is 'Are you in the Draft?'" William Fox has certainly done a wonderful thing in producing this picture, and I want you to count me in for a run."

The morning after Labor Day found a stack of telegrams in the Fox Film Corporation's offices from Fox branch managers declaring that "18 to 45" was sweeping their districts.

The cast of "The Temple of Dusk," the second Sessue Hayakawa production made by the Haworth Pictures Corporation for release through Mutual exchanges, include such well-known players as Sylvia Breamer, Jane Novak, Lewis Willoughby, Henry Barrows and Mary Jane Irving.

Both Miss Novak and Miss Breamer have appeared before the camera in numerous successful pictures and each has a large following among motion picture "fans." Miss Novak is a striking blonde, while Miss Bremer is a very attractive brunette. Miss Bremer in addition to a long stage experience has appeared in many screen productions.

Lewis Willoughby is a young Australian actor who has had a successful career not only in Australia but also in England and the United States.

In addition to a wide stage experience, Henry Barrows has appeared in a number of motion pictures.

Mary Jane Irving, although only four years old, has a rather important part in "The Temple of Dusk." She has appeared in pictures for more than a year and has already developed a screen presence that would do credit to an older person.

Current Events True to Its Name.

Universal's latest Current Events release presents some smashing scenes of the latest Allied drive in France. The onrushing operations of first the British, then the French and Americans at the points of the bitterest fighting are shown, and glimpses are given of the Germans in retreat.

In addition to the battle scenes there are shown the latest films of General Haig, General Pershing and other military leaders at the front, and of President Poincare and other big international figures.

Strong Cast for Metro's "Little Miss Moneybags"

THE assembling of the cast of Metro's "Little Miss Moneybags" has been completed by Director Charles J. Brabin. Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are the co-stars of this attractive new feature, and a strong cast has been chosen to support them. Mr. Bushman has the role of Van Tyne Carter and Miss Bayne that of Arizona Brown, a real girl of the West. "Little Miss Moneybags" has been written by Elaine Sterne and adapted for the screen by A. S. Le Vino.

Stuart Holmes plays Teddy Carter, a suave youth, who tries to confiscate an estate. Sally Crute's work in screen offerings has gained her wide spread popularity. She has the role of Edith Trenton. Mrs. Mathilde Brundage has been chosen to play a role. C. J. Williams plays James Carter in this, his first Metro picture. Mr. Williams is an actor and director of note, and there are few screen enthusiasts who do not remember his work for the Edison Company.

William Frederic and William McQuire are both well known upon the shadow and speaking stage.

The production of "Little Miss Moneybags" is flourishing at Metro's Biograph annex, the capability of the cast making it possible to work with speed and facility.

Use Cigar Bands to Exploit Moore's "Just for Tonight"

EXHIBITORS of America are becoming thoroughly inoculated with the exploitation germ. The healthy bank roll which this germ produces is the chief reason for this. All kinds of novel and unique advertising stunts have been conceived to exploit Goldwyn's famous stars, and the latest and one of the best is exploitation by means of cigar bands.

M. W. Neilson, proprietor of the Crystal Theatre, Wayne, Neb., will use the bands to advertise Tom Moore, the new Goldwyn star, in his first Star Series production, "Just for To-Night," to be released September 16. Mr. Neilson is fully aware of the popularity of Tom Moore and has announced free admission to "Just for To-Night" to all children of Wayne who present to him ten Tom Moore cigar bands. The Tom Moore perfecto was named after Tom Moore, the famous Irish poet, and since Tom Moore the Goldwyn star is the namesake of Tom Moore the Irish poet, Mr. Neilson feels sure the stunt is appropriate and likewise highly practical.

The success of the plan is assured in advance. The children will spread the message in their neighborhood and in their homes and besiege their fathers, big brothers, uncles and friends to donate the desired cigar bands. Such mouth-to-mouth advertising cannot be bought at any price.

Evelyn Selbie a Versatile Player.

Evelyn Selbie, playing an important role in "Beans," an appealing Bluebird photodrama in which Edith Roberts is the star, is regarded as a most versatile character woman. In "Pay Me" she played an ingenue role, although quite a bit over the ingenue stage, and in the same picture carried a "years later" part showing the same girl as an old woman.

Miss Selbie says that her hardest piece of work was in "The Two Soul Woman" with Priscilla Dean. In this picture the star was possessed of a dual nature. When the bad cycle of her disposition came around she was accustomed to look up poor Evelyn and take it out on her.

Miss Selbie is one of the deepest-dyed "lady villains" on the screen, but in her leisure moments she gets revenge on the Huns by working hard and long for the salvage department of the Red Cross.

What William Fox Is Doing to Help Win the War

BELIEVING firmly in the power of the motion picture to help win the war, William Fox has enlisted the producing resources of the Fox Film Corporation in a tremendous patriotic campaign which is designed to educate the American people on every phase of America's part in the world conflict, to stimulate the nation's morale and to deliver definite, timely blows against the Hun. The production of motion pictures which will aid the Government in prosecuting the war is only one phase of Mr. Fox's patriotic activities, but, in the opinion of close observers within the industry, it is a factor which should and will play a part in American victory.

A glance at the Fox releases for the next few weeks alone shows to what an extent Mr. Fox has flung his efforts into the fight for civilization. Of eleven productions which are to be released in the immediate future or which have been released in the last week by the Fox corporation eight come under the head of the so-called propaganda films.

These productions are "The Prussian Cur," the R. A. Walsh drama of the enemies at home and the secret embassy which Ambassador von Bernstorff left behind him; William Farnum's Liberty Loan film; "On the Jump," starring George Walsh; Gladys Brockwell in "Kultur"; the great picture of the Draft, "18 to 45"; "Why America Will Win," based on the life of General John J. Pershing; Jane and Katherine Lee in "Swat the Spy!" and Tom Mix in "Mr. Logan, U. S. A."

"The Prussian Cur" is based on revelations made by Capt. Horst von der Goltz, the confessed leader of the plot to blow up the Welland Canal, and also on a mass of data regarding activities of German agents in this country, obtained from Government files at Washington and elsewhere.

That is one sample of how William Fox is helping to win the war. Another, and an even franker assistance to the Government, is the special Liberty Loan film which William Farnum, a Fox star, has just completed at Hollywood, especially for the Government. This picture is about 300 feet long. It was made for the United States Film Propaganda Commission and is being distributed by the Fox Film Corporation, there having been made about one hundred prints.

Another angle of the Liberty Loan is developed in the picture "On the Jump," which has George Walsh as its star. This picture shows Mr. Walsh as a young newspaper man who is persuaded to turn Liberty Bond salesman. Being of an athletic type, he injects into his sales campaign novel and highly effective methods of obtaining subscriptions to the Liberty Loan. In addition to that the young hero also exposes a wealthy German, one Crumely, who has bought a newspaper for the secret purpose of spreading German propaganda. In this way the picture not only combines the Liberty Loan argument, but it also gives an unmistakable warning to the American public to be most careful of every form of German propaganda.

"Kultur," the play of Germany's secret diplomacy, in which Gladys Brockwell is the star, treats of an entirely different phase of the war situation.

In "18 to 45," the picture which R. A. Walsh has already made on the problems which will arise from the extension of the Draft ages, is a direct challenge to the men of America to stand back of the Draft and make the supreme sacrifice for their country. Already made and ready to be released during the days following the national registration, this film, it is believed, will have a tremendous influence in stimulating the morale of America.

"Why America Will Win" is based on the life of General John J. Pershing, and in picturing the career of the American leader it gives a concrete answer to the problem propounded in its title—"Why America Will Win."

Even the children are used in this great patriotic work. Jane and Katherine Lee, those two stormy imps of comedy, furnish thrills and at the same time teach an important patriotic lesson in "Swat the Spy!" Another phase of war endeavor—the prevention of sabotage and the rooting out of disaffected labor agitators—is treated in the Tom Mix picture, "Mr. Logan, U. S. A."

These eight productions are only the beginning of William Fox's efforts to get behind the war and help American victory. Other pictures are expected to be announced from time to time, and it is stated Mr. Fox will pursue the policy of lending every ounce of energy to war work.

Ruby de Remer in Lockwood Support.

"The Great Romance" has been chosen as the title for Harold Lockwood's Metro starring vehicle now in production under Henry Otto. The story is a romantic drama written especially for the star by Finis Fox and has a patriotic subject for its theme.

In the cast is Ruby de Remer, who will play the leading feminine role.

Big Cast Supporting Blanche Sweet in "The Hushed Hour" (Garson).

Three Select Star Releases Named for September

THREE releases for September are announced by Select Pictures Corporation. These are Marion Davies in "The Burden of Proof," Alice Brady in "The Better Half" and Norma Talmadge in "The Forbidden City." The productions will be released in the manner named. "The Burden of Proof" will be the first release of the month. This will be followed by Alice Brady in "The Better Half," while Norma Talmadge in "The Forbidden City" will follow later in the month.

"The Burden of Proof" is a story based on Newport and Washington social life, in which there is found a flavor of the big war. Miss Davies is directed in this picture by Julius Steger, who has spared no pains to make it the greatest of the Marion Davies pictures to date. Miss Davies has the part of a girl prominent in social circles who is engaged to a man whose uncle is a member of the President's cabinet. Financial difficulties make it possible for German agents to approach the girl with a proposal to betray her country. "The Better Half" is a film story of Miriam Michelson's novel, "Michael Thwaite's Wife." The story is one in which a girl at last becomes the wife of the man she loves, although her twin sister has nearly ruined all three lives. Miss Brady plays the dual role of Louise and Trixie Thorley. One moment Miss Brady is the patient and lovable Louise, and the fraction of a moment later is shown as her fickle and selfish sister. J. D. Robertson directed Miss Brady in this offering. The photography is by H. L. Broening.

The latter part of September will bring "The Forbidden City," in which Norma Talmadge is presented by Joseph M. Schenck, a Chinese story by George Scarborough. Miss Talmadge is first seen as a Chinese maiden. In the latter part of the picture she plays the part of an American Red Cross nurse. Miss Talmadge is again under the direction of Sidney A. Franklin.

New Wolfville Tale Has Two Additional Characters

IN THE current Wolfville Tale by Alfred Henry Lewis two new characters are added to the highly interesting population of the famous border town of fiction. "The Deacon," considered the most harmless of the inhabitants, disposes of a double-dyed bad man and the fact that he has no reputation as a shooter makes it appear outrageous to the citizens. They pursue him into the hills with intent to lynch, believing that this amateur could not have vanquished anyone except by treachery. Hope Grayson, the girl at Mrs. Rucker's, dining room slavey though she is, turns the trick that proves the "Deacon" to be innocent of the suspicion, and she also proves the means of making the young man happy in love and wealthy in more material possessions.

Patricia Palmer, who has played "Faro Nell" in many of the Wolfville Tales, is Hope, while R. N. Bradbury, who also directed the picture, plays the hero. This picture more than any preceding Wolfville Tale depends upon the dramatic for its punch, and a great many thrills are introduced. It is believed by the producers to be one of the best of the series.

General Film Company is finding the Wolfville Tales ideal releases to alternate with the famous O. Henry stories on the Broadway Star Feature program, to judge from comments received from the company's various exchanges.

"For Husbands Only" Opens at Broadway

"For Husbands Only," the Jewel production featuring Mildred Harris, opened September 1 at the Broadway Theatre in New York for a feature run. This picture, produced by Lois Weber, had a reception from the first night audience that augured high success for its two-weeks' stay in the big city.

The title is likely to be a big element in the film's drawing power, as was evidenced by the attendance of the first week. It is a title that piques one's curiosity. Those who have seen the film agree that despite the injunction in the phrase "For Husbands Only," the picture is perfectly proper for the eyes of the whole family.

Ricketts Completes New Feature.

Thomas R. Ricketts, who produced "Damaged Goods," has just completed a mystery film entitled "The Crime of the Hour," which will be the first offering of the United Films, Inc., of Los Angeles, and which will be distributed on the state rights plan through the Ernest Shipman exchanges.

"The Crime of the Hour" is being exploited as a mystery story, with a most human love story, and dealing with a subject international in scope, exposing a menace that will be recognized by all the Allied powers as second only to Kaiserism. The picture is in seven reels.

Frazee Mystic Comedies.

Edwin Frazee, who has just finished the first of his franchise mystic two-reel comedies, has made arrangements to distribute his productions through the exchanges controlled by Ernest Shipman. The first of the series of comedies to be made by Frazee is entitled "The Haunted House," and is said to be a radical departure from the ordinary two-reel comedy. "The Haunted House" will be available in September, and hereafter one a month will be released.

Report Heavy Bookings for Paramount-Flagg Comedies

REPORTS from the exchanges of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation indicate that the first-run showings of the initial Paramount-Flagg comedy, "Hick Manhattan," released September 1, have given a decided impetus to the already heavy bookings recorded for this series of sixteen comedies, according to Al Lichtman, General Manager of Distribution.

"These comedies, written, titled and supervised by the master humorist, James Montgomery Flagg, and produced by Town and Country Films, Inc.," said Mr. Lichtman, "are proving irresistible to exhibitors, just as we expected they would.

"In the first place, James Montgomery Flagg stands without a peer in his particular kind of humor. For years he has been writing witty, satirical short stories for the leading magazines, and they have been characterized by a punch, with the added charm of sparkling humor. In addition Mr. Flagg has made use of his rare gift as an artist in so embellishing the films with art titles as to make them delightful to look at.

"When we undertook the distribution of the Flagg comedies we did so largely on the strength of the success achieved by his former series, 'Girls You Know,' and the integrity and reputation of the men composing his producing organization."
